Nothing in this section shall be held to repeal, amend, alter, modify, effect, or restrict the powers, duties, functions, or authority of the Attorney General in the administration and enforcement of such Act or any other law relating to immigration, nationality, or naturalization. The fact that an alien may be eligible to be granted lawful residence status under this section shall not preclude the alien from seeking such a status under any other provision of law for which the alien may be eligible.

(j) LIMITING APPLICATION OF PUBLIC LAW 89-732.—The first section of Public Law 89-732 shall not apply to any alien who is first inspected and admitted or paroled into the United States after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) CAPPED ENTITLEMENT.—(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall provide, in accordance with this section and from the allotment for that State determined under paragraph (2), for payment to each of the States with an application approved under this section for reimbursement of the costs—

(ii) the ratio of the number of eligible legalized aliens in the State to the total number of residents of that State and to the total number of such aliens in all the States in that fiscal year, in a manner that provides for an equitable and balanced distribution of funds among the States.

(B)(i) The total of the allotments to States under this section is equal to $600,000,000 for each of the three fiscal years described in subsection (a).

(ii) To the extent that all the funds appropriated under this section for a fiscal year are not otherwise allotted to States either because all the States have not qualified for such allotments under this section for the fiscal year or because some States have indicated in their description of activities that they do not intend to [use] use, in that fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year, the full amount of such [allotments in that fiscal year and the succeeding fiscal year,] allotments, such excess shall be allotted among the remaining States in proportion to the amount otherwise allotted to such States for the fiscal year without regard to this clause.

(2) In determining the number of eligible legalized aliens for purposes of paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary may estimate such number on the basis of such data as he may deem appropriate.

(3) For each fiscal year the Secretary shall make payments, as provided by [section 203 of the Intergovernmental Cooperation Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4213),] section 6503 of title 31, United States Code, to each State from its allotment under this subsection. (B) the costs (excluding any such costs otherwise paid from Federal funds) which the State and each locality is likely to incur for programs of public assistance and for imprisonment costs described in subsection (b)(1)(B).

(d) USE OF FUNDS.—A State may use amounts paid to it under this section only—

(1) for the purpose of providing assistance with respect to eligible legalized aliens under programs of public assistance and under programs of public health [assistance,] assistance for which such aliens were not disqualified under section 202(h) at the time of such assistance, but only to the extent such assistance is otherwise available under such programs to citizens residing in the State, and

(2) for the purpose of paying for costs incurred by the State for the imprisonment of aliens described in subsection (b)(1)(B).

(e) REPORTS AND AUDITS.—(1)(A) Each State shall prepare and submit to the Secretary annual reports on its activities under this section. In order to properly evaluate and to compare the performance of different States assisted under this section and to assure the proper expenditure of funds under this section, such reports shall be in such form and contain such information as the Secretary determines (after consultation with the States and the Comptroller General) to be necessary—

(i) to secure an accurate description of those activities,

(ii) to secure a complete record of the purposes for which funds were spent, of the recipients of such funds, and of the progress made toward achieving the purposes of this section, and

(iii) to determine the extent to which funds were expended consistent with subsection (d).

Copies of the report shall be provided, upon request, to any interested public agency, and each such agency may provide its views on these reports to the Congress.

(B) The Secretary shall annually report to the Congress on activities funded under this section and shall provide for transmittal of a copy of such report to each State.

[(2)(A) Each State shall, not less often than once every two years, audit its expenditures from amounts received under this section. Such State audits shall be conducted by an entity independent of the State agency administering a program funded under this section in accordance with the Comptroller General's standards for auditing governmental organizations, programs, activities, and functions and generally accepted auditing standards. Within 30 days following the completion of each audit report, the State shall submit a copy of that audit report to the Secretary.

[(B) Each State shall repay to the United States amounts found by the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for a hearing to the State, not to have been expended in accordance with this section and, if such repayment is not made, the Secretary may offset such amounts against the amount of any allotment to which the State is or may become entitled under this section or may otherwise recover such amounts.]

(2)(A) For requirements relating to audits of funds received by a State under this section, see chapter 75 of title 31, United States Code (relating to requirements for single audit).

(C) The Secretary may, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, withhold payment of funds to any State which is not using its allotment under this section in accordance with this section. The Secretary may withhold such funds until the Secretary finds that the reason for the withholding has been removed and there is reasonable assurance that it will not recur.

(3) The State shall make copies of the reports and audits required by this subsection available for public inspection within the State.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, previously, the RECORD will reflect, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee has designated the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] to manage the bill, allocate time, and have complete control of the form and procedure on this side. I am pleased to turn this matter over to my friend from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc and that the bill as amended be considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment, with the understanding that points of order be considered as having been waived by reason thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, first, let me thank the majority leader for his willingness to bring this matter before the Senate in this timely fashion. I deeply appreciate that. I also thank Senator STROM THURMOND, without whose support and assistance we would never have prevailed in two previous immigration reform efforts. He has been absolutely an extraordinary helpmate to me in this issue.

Let me also pay my respects to my colleague, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. KENNEDY, who has been through the wars with me on immigration reform, indeed who chaired this very subcommittee I chair. He chaired it for 12 years, dealt with the tough issues of refugee numbers, the heavy issues of legal immigration. He was instrumental in making the changes which moved the United States away from the national quota legislation which was in effect before 1965. He has had my great admiration and regard as we have dealt with this issue. I appreciate it. It is a tough one for him.

Madam President, this is the third time, the third go-round in rodeo parlance, that I have stood before this body to begin debate on a major immigration reform bill. I spoke on behalf of S. 2222 in 1982 when that bill was debated on the floor for 3 days and passed by a vote of 80 to 19. The equivalent House bill was reported, but no vote was taken. Both bills then died at the end of the 97th Congress. It was a remarkable exercise with my friend, ROMANO MAZZOLI, a Democrat from Kentucky. He did yeoman work. We were both disappointed when that effort ended with the 97th Congress.

In 1983, during the first session of the 98th Congress, I spoke again, this time on behalf of a similar bill, S. 529. After 4 days of debate, that bill was passed by a vote of 76 to 18. In 1984, during the second session of the 98th Congress, the House passed a bill. Unfortunately, we conferees—Senator KENNEDY and I, and Senators THURMOND, MATHIAS, and METZENBAUM—were unable to resolve the differences and the bill died again. It was close but no cigar on that. We did deal with all of the hot issues and it fell apart on a very distinctive one or two.

Today I urge my colleagues to support S. 1200, which is the culmination of the substantive and political fine-tuning of a 6-year involvement in this issue.

I became chairman of the Immigration Subcommittee in 1981, at the beginning of the 97th Congress. It has been a fascinating 4½ years, I assure you, Madam President, indeed quite an educational process, as were my prior 2 years on the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy.

Madam President, in my nascent efforts in 1979 and 1980, I originally rejected out of hand certain of the key provisions that are now in this bill, possibly feeling a bit like some of my colleagues must feel as we revisit the issue.

You come to accept such provisions the longer you stay in the game. I wish all of my colleagues could have shared in that rich 6-year learning process, for I assure them that the longer one is in it the more one comes to understand that this is the approach we must take.

I have no great pride of authorship; all have contributed, people from both sides of the aisle: Senator KENNEDY; Senators THURMOND and GRASSLEY, my fine other members of the majority on the subcommittee; Senator HEFLIN, whose activities last year were most helpful; Senator SIMON this year, who has participated very thoughtfully and perceptively; my fine friend, RON MAZZOLI, who could not have been a finer person to work with, who it has been a great privilege to work with; and PETER RODINO, "Mr. Immigration" of the U.S. Congress—it has been a distinct pleasure to work with him—he is moving a bill in the House at this time; Congressman DAN LUNGREN, a very thoughtful, bright young man from California who has worked very hard on these issues; HAM FISH, a fine friend from New York; BARNEY FRANK, the spirited Congressman from Massachusetts, whom I greatly enjoy—his intellect and brightness—he has some critical issues to present to us and we will deal with those; Congressman CHARLIE SCHUMER of Brooklyn, an ally recently found, a gem and a great person to work with.

It has been a great experience, lots of people involved. It is a tough issue. I have said it before, I will say it again: It is an issue filled with racism, fear, guilt, and emotion. All those things play into it and splatter around it. That is why the Select Commission took so long to deal with it. That is why our chairman of the Select Commission, Father Ted Hesburgh, gave so much of himself and his special and unique God-given talents of reconciliation and firmness. We needed that.

So it has been an experience. The bill we have drafted is the product of an evolutionary process of many years. It owes much to hundreds, indeed thousands of Americans—private citizens and public officials, not just in Congress but in Governors' mansions. I think particularly of Gov. Dick Lamb of Colorado, who has been a marvelous and extraordinary ally in the cause; former President Jerry Ford, who watched attentively when he was President trying to work toward a resolution of the problem of illegal immigration. He has been remarkable and of great assistance. So we owe much to literally thousands of Americans and those who are not Americans.

A great many hearings and formal consultations have been held on the myriad subjects related to this bill. In addition, we have had access to all of the excellent prior work on immigration reform done in the past few years, including the efforts of the administrations of Presidents Ford and Carter.

I never thought at the beginning that I would thank President Carter for appointing me to the Select Commission. It was not a task I sought. But President Jimmy Carter knew what was required and he appointed the Commission and told us to get cracking, which we did. I applaud his efforts and his sincerity in approaching the issue.

Then we processed the final report of the Select Commission. I attended a great many hearings and meetings of that fine group, too, as did Senator KENNEDY and Senator MATHIAS and Senator DECONCINI, all members of the Select Commission. We considered the perceptive, interesting proposals of the able former Senator from Kentucky, Dee Huddleston, who worked like a Trojan on this issue for many years before I came to this place. His efforts are displayed in this bill.

And then the efforts of my colleague from Massachusetts, who indeed deserves special recognition.

We also had access to the excellent ideas of the Reagan Task Force on Immigration headed by a most capable and knowledgeable former Attorney General, William French Smith, who became a fine friend and ally in the cause—indeed a close friend. I admire the many times that he assisted me, as did the Vice President of the United States, GEORGE BUSH, who has a great deal of knowledge about this issue, having lived in a border State. Indeed he is very aware of the situation. I appreciate that.

Finally, there were portions of the proposals and the bills that were submitted by the President in July 1981.

In addition, the efforts of the House-Senate conference committee of late last year were very helpful. Even though that stalled, we did a lot of work. We had 10 days of conference committee activity, and it was in many cases heavy lifting, but we came up with the resolution of a great many issues. Many of those resolved issues are part of the new House legislation and will be pursued.

All of the various proposals and recommendations are quite remarkably similar. That really should not be surprising to anyone since they were all the product of intelligent, caring men and women who were attempting to deal with the same problems—that immigration to the United States is out of control.

Because those of us involved in the drafting of S. 1200 faced the same problem, it is again not surprising that our proposed solution is not dramatically different from the others of the recent past.

Madam President, I will explain briefly the provisions of S. 1200, but before I do I would want to present a few remarks on the illegal immigration problem faced by this country. I ask my colleagues to please note that we are not talking about legal immigration.

Every year, hundreds of thousands of illegal immigrants enter the United States. They come for various reasons: fear, anxiety, to work. Some who are asylees are able to petition our Government to stay. They are considered on a case-by-case basis.

The inflow of illegal immigration appears to have become substantially higher in recent years. At least some indication of that can be found in the dramatically increased numbers of apprehensions. In 1965, that number was over 100,000. By 1972, it had reached one-half million. Today it is over 1 million per year.

These people are coming from 92 different nations. The number of illegal aliens already in this country is unknown. The Selection Commission grappled with that. They used a figure of 3.5 to 6 milion as the best guess for 1978. Whatever the number was 7 years ago, there are surely many more now.

The United States cannot perform the most basic function of a sovereign nation, which is to control the entry of aliens across its borders, and to enforce whatever conditions are imposed on the aliens who we do allow to enter. Immigration to the United States is out of control and it is perceived that way at all levels of government and by the American people—indeed, by people all over the world.

Madam President, I shall not at this time discuss the adverse economic and noneconomic impacts of illegal immigration on this Nation. I would refer my colleagues to the committee report and also to the Select Commission final report. Each of those contains a discussion of those impacts. But I can assure that this is not a jobs bill. It was never crafted by me for that purpose or by any member of the subcommittee.

I would point out to my colleagues that immigration pressure on the United States is just beginning and it is not self-limiting. As many people will enter this country as we allow to enter. That is the magnificence of our country. At the present time there is a substantial disparity in job opportunities between the United States and less developed countries, a disparity which may well continue or even widen as a result of political and social conditions in those countries. Such disparity exists not only in rates of unemployment but in wages and working conditions.

For example, it has been estimated that Latin American countries must create—and I think this is a startling figure—4 million new jobs in each remaining year of this century just to avoid increases in the region's already high unemployment rate. The United States, whose labor force is only slightly smaller, could only produce 4.1 million jobs in its best year of 1983. Last year, 3.1 million jobs were created in the United States.

Furthermore, even if unemployment rates were reduced in the less developed countries—a very difficult task indeed, I think, in light of the high birth rates and insecure investment climate in those countries—the disparity in wages and working conditions will remain.

The most generous aid program which Congress might ever pass is unlikely in the foreseeable future to reduce sufficiently the large wage differentials which now exist. U.S. wages are often 10 or 15 times as high.

Madam President, in an earlier time the Nation could welcome millions of newcomers. Immigration is our heritage. That is something that I do not want to see us ever come up short on. So in that earlier time we welcomed millions, many of whom brought few skills but did bring a willingness to work very hard. In a smaller America, with a labor-intensive economy, with simpler technology and a labor shortage, that was often quite enough—that plus their intense drive to become Americans.

Legal immigrants can still greatly benefit America, but only if they are in an appropriate number and selected within that number on the basis of reunification of immediate family and skills which would truly serve the interest of a highly developed Nation.

Madam President, the major purpose of this bill is to make progress toward the day when the American people can be assured that the numerical limitations and selection criteria contained in the immigration statutes are actually implemented through adequate enforcement. The potential benefits and protections of even the most carefully designed statutory standards for determining who may enter the United States, as well as for how long and under what conditions they may remain, will not be available in practice if those statutory standards cannot be enforced.

Madam President, at this time I shall briefly review the provisions of S. 1200 I ask unanimous consent that a somewhat more extensive summary be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, the provisions of S. 1200 are similar to provisions in the bills passed by the Senate in the last two Congresses.

I want to inform my colleagues about the provisions of the prior bills which have not been included at this time.

First, the bill does not amend the preference categories for allocating numerically limited alien visas, nor does it change the numerical limits applicable to such categories, with a minor exception for colonies, which I will explain very briefly.

Second, the bill does not modify exclusion, deportation, or asylum adjudication procedures.

Finally, the bill does not contain provisions pertaining specifically to foreign students.

I would now like to describe what it does contain.

As I have stated, the major purpose of the bill is to increase control over illegal immigration. The primary incentive for illegal immigration is the availability of U.S. employment. In order to reduce that incentive, the bill makes unlawful the knowing employment, or the recruitment, or referral for a fee, of illegal aliens; provides for an optional system to verify work eligibility; and establishes appropriate penalties for violation. These penalties will be substantial enough not to be just a cost of doing business. They will be civil penalties, there is a second pattern and practice of violation. At that time there, a criminal penalty will be available.

In addition, the bill establishes new crimes for certain activities involving fraudulent documents, for bringing aliens to the United States, without prior authorization and for smuggling. It provides increased resources for conventional enforcement and immigration services. It allows the imposition of discretionary fees for immigration services and for the use of INS border and other facilities; and it prohibits adjustments of status by visa abusers.

S. 1200 also makes several changes in the system of legal immigration. Those are minor. Special immigration benefits are provided for certain G-4 visa holders who have resided in the United States for many years, and those are certain employees of international organizations and their family members.

In addition, the colonial quota is increased from 600 to 3,000 visas per year.

The bill also amends certain provisions of the law relating to nonimmigrants. The H-2 temporary worker program is revised in order to assist agricultural employers in adjusting to the reduced availability of illegal foreign workers.

In addition, the bill establishes a 3-year transition program for employers of agricultural labor, and it creates a commission to further study agricultural labor issues, a very critical thing in America, especially to the perishable food industry, those in agriculture who have become dependent on illegal undocumented workers.

We also provide for a pilot visa waiver program. That is authorized for eight countries with low rates of visa denial, exclusion, and visa abuse. We think that can be useful to conserve consular office resources.

The bill further provides for a legalization program. Under certain circumstances, illegal aliens who entered the United States prior to January 1, 1980, may obtain temporary legal resident status. Such aliens would then have an opportunity to adjust to permanent status after 3 years if they satisfied certain conditions, including the presentation of evidence that they have some knowledge of U.S. history, its Government, and the English language, or have enrolled in a program to acquire such knowledge.

The legalization program will begin 3 years after enactment unless at an earlier time a Presidentially appointed commission, whose members must support the concept of legalization in the bill, find that Federal programs to enforce the immigration laws are in place, have adequate resources, and are effective enough to prevent legalization from encouraging more illegal immigration. The risk that legalization migh have this effect was discussed by the Select Commission.

If such finding is made within 3 years after enactment, legalization will begin at the earlier time. Thus legalization can begin no later than 3 years after enactment.

Finally, the bill requires certain reports to be made to Congress. They are important reports, not just cosmetic. The reports are to come from the President or other members of the executive department and they are to come with respect to employers' sanctions and employment verification provisions, legal and illegal immigration, the Legalization Program, the Visa Waiver Program, and the INS.

A report is also required from the Comptroller General of the United States with respect to the implementation of employer sanctions provisions, including whether a pattern of discrimination on the basis of national origin has resulted against citizens or aliens authorized to work in the United States. That is a very important issue.

The bill also establishes a commission to study how the United States and Mexico can work together to improve the economies of the two countries.

Madam President, some concern has been expressed about the possibility that the employers sanctions provisions of S. 1200 will cause some employers to discriminate on the basis of national origin against certain U.S. citizens or aliens authorized to work in the United States, mostly those, of course, who are authorized to do so under their green card.

Because of the importance which that issue has for all of us in this body, let me just comment briefly on the issue now.

My view can be stated very simply: No convincing evidence or argument has been presented that such discrimination will occur, and the evidence that is available indicates that it would not.

I can assure my colleagues that an innocent employer will be protected by following the verification procedures and would have no reason to discriminate. An employer who wishes to avoid hiring certain persons because of their race or creed or color or ethnicity or national origin could continue to try to do so if that evil spirit moves their bosom—and there are people like that, unfortunately, in the world—but those employers would be subject to a suit under title XVII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The employers sanctions law would provide no protection for such employers.

The best available evidence—which is that derived from the experience of several European countries, including France, which is a multiracial society—shows that increased discrimination on the basis of ethnicity or national origin does not result from employer sanctions.

I believe, Madam President, it is important to note, as we get into this issue—and it will arise—you will hear the phrase "discrimination" dovetailed often with the phrase of "nationality" or "alienage." That is not what we are speaking of. The Select Commission, the Immigration Subcommittee, Senator KENNEDY, myself, Members prior and Members present, all of us have dealt seriously with the issues of discrimination based on race, religion, ethnicity, and color of skin.

The new discrimination is one called discrimination based on alienage. You want to listen to that very carefully when we get to it because it has nothing to do with color of skin or ethnicity or national origin. I think I can draw a very crisp example—it means that if I, as an employer, am presented with two people, one who is a Canadian with a green card and one a United States citizen, and if I select the United States citizen, under a law prohibiting discrimination based upon alienage, the Canadian green card carrier could sue me through the auspices of the Federal Government on the basis that I had discriminated against him or her on the bases of alienage.

That issue has diverted a bit of attention in the last weeks away from issues of real discrimination, which no one is even suggesting would be allowed to take place here. In fact, Senator KENNEDY has an amendment to that effect. It provides that if there were widespread discrimination, something would be done. I agree; indeed it would.

I hope my colleagues will understand, as we get into the debate, that if discrimination based on alienage had been a problem in this country, it would have been dealt with long before we got to this point in the immigration debate. There are not seven paragraphs on the issue of discrimination based on alienage, in the record of the House subcommittee or full committee activity of those fine civil libertarians there in that body or here in this body, because it is a rather imponderable type of thing. It is a diversion in many ways. I have referred to it at one time as the "magnificent shunt," which I will describe at some future time.

In any event, we will have a hearing on that issue, a joint hearing. Congressman MAZZOLI, Congressman RODINO, myself, the subcommittee will have that hearing on September 18 in the House of Representatives. I have assured my colleague, Senator LEVIN, and those who are deeply concerned about this aspect—and it is a real concern; I do not belittle it. I just say it is imponderable and puzzling and we need to look at it. Senator CARL LEVIN, being the gentleman I know him to be, will look at it and probe it and pursue it and will come up with a decision on whether we need to go further. And I have assured him of that window. That window will be open to pursue that, either with a time agreement here, a resolution, a bill, or a sense of the Senate, after we have completed our work on that area in that joint hearing process.

So, Madam President, I want to remind my perceptive colleagues that if the problem of illegal immigration is not solved, then there is a very great risk that the American people will turn against legal immigration and against refugees and against asylees, as well. I think there are signs around us that that is already occurring.

I never spend much time playing government by polling. That is why I get into all these delightful issues, I guess. But it is consistently found that the American people want immigration reform. In Roper polls 91 percent of respondents have stated that they want the United States to make an "all out effort to stop illegal entry into the United States"; 79 percent of respondents, in a Gallup poll of 2 years ago, said they thought it "should be against the law to employ a person who has come to the United States without proper papers"; 75 percent of the Hispanic respondents agreed.

My mail from Hispanic Americans has been rather significant in the last 6 years. They will often express to me that it is they themselves who are often most injured by the influx of illegal immigration. It is their jobs that are at stake and it is their people who we are unable to legalize under this bill.

It is an irony of the rarest form. I deeply want to legalize the 2 to 12 million human beings who are here, who have equities, who have U.S. citizen children, who have been here a certain number of years. Every time this bill falls into the tank again those people are left right where they were before—in a fearful subculture of human beings in the United States, who are afraid to go to the cops, afraid to go to the hospital unless it is for a birth, and afraid to go to their employer. What we have in the bill is a very generous and extraordinary legalization. That is what is in this bill once again.

Madam President, of course, this bill has its critics, I have worked with them all and I make myself available to them at any time and will continue to do so.

Indeed, I get hammered pretty hard on the issue right out on my own home ground. I ran for reelection last year and told them I appreciated their patience as I dabbled in this particular issue, which I did not seek. I thanked them for that. I said that if it ever interfered with my ability to represent their interests, I would let it pass by. But I think it is a very critical national issue. I do not seek it as any springboard to anything. It is a political "no win turkey" in every sense.

I keep up the house payments in Cody, WY, so that if the folks back home came to believe that what I am doing is not right for the country or if they should wish a Senator to use a lesser standard, or less zeal, I would at least have a roof over my old bald dome.

Actually, the people of Wyoming are like most of the American people. If we have faith in their common sense and let them know honestly what we are doing—and it is an educational process—they understand very well, and no matter what their special interests may be. In particular, I think they understand that the future of America—the America of their children and their grandchildren and their great-grandchildren—is more important than some special short-term benefit for themselves. They care about the future of this remarkable pluralistic society where we allow people to pursue their private cultures, but we ask of them that they embrace our one public culture—and that is the United States of America, with a common flag and a common language. That is not too much to ask when we give them the privilege of living in this remarkable country.

I think that the people understand that, indeed, there are special short-term economic benefits to some from illegal immigration, but that the right immigration policy should benefit the whole Nation, in its noneconomic as well as economic interest, and for the next 20, 30, 50, 100, 200 and more years. And that policy should insure that the people who come to this country come legally, are protected under our laws, and that those who are here illegally are controlled in a humane way. This does not have anything to do with 2,000 miles of wire or cactus curtains and some of the other remarkable suggestions that have been made to me as chairman of the subcommittee, but which I do not want to get into.

Let us try the humane approach, first, which is penalizing employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens, having some kind of a system to verify employment authorization, legalization, and increased enforcement at our borders and internally. It is a tough task. I ask my colleagues to join in this debate, on the bill and on the amendments. I ask them to support the managers of the bill when they agree that what is proposed is in the national interest.

I thank the Chair. I thank particularly my colleague, Senator KENNEDY, the ranking member of the subcommittee.

SUMMARY OF IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT OF 1985

I. CONTROL OF ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION

A. Funding for improved enforcement

States the sense of Congress that increases in INS border partol and other inspection and enforcement activities, and in INS examinations and other service activities, are essential elements of the program of immigration control established in the bill.

Authorizes $840,000,000 in FY 1987 and $830,000,000 in FY 1988 to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, in part for these purposes.

Authorizes additional sums to the Department of Labor for enforcement activities of the Wage and Hour Division and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs.

B. Increased penalties for immigration-related violations

New criminal offense for bringing an alien to the U.S., knowing or in reckless disregard of the fact that the alien had not received prior official authorization to enter.

Extends the criminal penalities under current law for use or manufacture of counterfeit or altered entry documents, or entry documents relating to another individual, to include all documents which may be used to show authorized stay or authorized employment in the United States.

Adds criminal penalty for using a false identification document, an identification document not lawfully issued to the possessor, or a false attestation, for the purpose of satisfying the employment verification system requirements (see below).

Adjustment of status to permanent resident would not be available to aliens who have failed, for any reason, to maintain a legal status since entry into the U.S.

C. Unlawful employment of aliens

Penalties against persons who: after enactment knowingly hire, or for a fee or other consideration recruit or refer, for employment in the U.S. an alien who is not authorized for such employment, or knowingly continue to employ unauthorized aliens hired after enactment.

An affirmative defense against a charge of unlawful hiring, recruitment, or referral is available if the verification procedures below have been followed in good faith.

Verification procedure: person employing four or more persons who hires a new employee must attest, for all employees, under penalty of perjury, that he has examined documents which establish both a) employment authorization and b) identity (showing that the individual is not presenting documents relating to another individual). A U.S. passport, certificate of U.S. citizenship, certificate of naturalization, or certain resident alien cards would establish both. Otherwise one document of each type would be presented. Employment authorization documents would include the Social Security card or birth certificate. Identity documents would include: driver's license, other State-issued card, or, under certain circumstances, other documentation approved by the Attorney General.

President is directed to monitor and evaluate the verification system. If he finds that the system is not secure, he must seek to implement such changes as may be necessary to establish a secure system to determine employment authorization. Such changes would only be permitted after notice to Congress: 2 years for a major change, such as a telephone verification system or a new identification document, and 60 days for a change not considered major, such as an improved Social Security card. The President is authorized to establish demonstration projects for up to three years.

If an employer of four or more persons does not follow the verification procedures and an unauthorized alien is found in his employ, the employer will be presumed to have knowingly hired the alien. The presumption may be rebutted by "clear and convincing evidence."

Penalties for violation: first 6 months after enactment (education period): no penalty; second 6 months after enactment: warning for the first offense; 1st offense (after warning if during second 6 months): cease and desist order, civil fine of $100-$2,000; 2nd offense: cease and desist order, civil fine of $2,000-$5,000; pattern or practice of violations: cease and desist order, civil fine of $3,000-$10,000; pattern or practice of violations after penalty has been assessed for prior pattern or practice of violations: criminal penalty of up to $3,000 fine per unauthorized alien, imprisonment of up to 6 months (for entire pattern or practice), or both; the presumption (described above) is not available in criminal prosecutions; if the cease and desist orders are not complied with, the Attorney General is instructed to seek a court order in a U.S. district court; failure to comply with a court order could result in punishment for contempt, including imprisonment.

Cease and desist orders may also require the employer: to follow the verification and record-keeping procedures for up to 3 years; to take other remedial action as appropriate.

A private party may file a written, signed complaint with the INS with respect to potential violations. INS must investigate charges which on their face have a substantial probability of validity, but otherwise retains complete discretion to proceed or not proceed against employers.

Cease and desist orders and orders to pay civil penalties may be issued by immigration judges only after notice and opportunity to request a hearing has been given. The decision of the immigration judge is reviewable by the BIA and the appropriate Circuit Court of Appeals.

D. Agricultural worker provisions

1. Special procedures established for seasonal workers in agriculture (N visa holders, referred to below as "N workers"): employer need not apply for a labor certification more than 65 days in advance of need; Secretary of Labor must inform employers within 14 days if the application requirements have not been met; otherwise the requirements will be considered to have been met; Secretary of Labor must make a labor certification no later than 20 days in advance of need if the requirements for certification have been met and U.S. citizens or authorized aliens are not available; expedited appeal and petitioning procedures are available:

(1) if labor certification is denied (review must be within 72 hours for "perishable commodities" workers), (2) if U.S. workers referred to an agricultural employer are not qualified (new determination must be within 72 hours), (3) if U.S. workers are promised to an employer but they do not show up at the time and place of need (review must be within 72 hours), or (4) if an agricultural employer is faced with a critical labor need due to unforeseen circumstances, such as an unexpected change in climatic conditions (determination must be made within 72 hours if the amended or new application is made less than 3 days before date of need).

Attorney General must approve all regulations, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Labor.

Authorizes $10,000,000 to Secretary of Labor for the purposes of a) recruiting domestic workers, and b) monitoring and enforcing the terms and conditions under which N workers and domestic workers employed by the same employers are employed in the U.S.

2. Three-year agricultural labor transition program: agricultural employers may continue to employ certain foreign workers under conditions set by A.G.—in first year: 100% of need for nondomestic seasonal agricultural workers, in second year: 67%, and in third year: 33%.

3. Agricultural Worker Commission: 12 membes to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Secretaries of Agriculture and Labor, and the Attorney General. Commission must report within 2½ years with specific legislative recommendations regarding the appropriate form of U.S. temporary worker programs.

II. LEGALIZATION OF STATUS

A. Legalization commission

Establishes a Legalization Commission to be composed of 9 members appointed by the President. No person may be appointed who does not support the concept of the legalization program provided for in the bill. The major duty of the Commission is to report annually to Congress whether certain conditions have been met. Such conditions include the following: (1) effective enforcement measures have been instituted and have adequate resources to curtail illegal immigration, (2) it is reasonably likely that these measures will continue to be in effect and to have adequate resources after legalization, and (3) enforcement has become effective enough to prevent legalization from serving as a stimulus to further illegal entry. The legalization program will begin after the Commission reports that the above conditions have been met, or 3 years after enactment, whichever is earlier.

B. Legalization of status

1. Temporary legal status for illegal aliens who have been physically present in the U.S. since the date of enactment and (i) have continuously resided in the U.S. in an unlawful status since before January 1, 1980, or (ii) are "special Cuban or Haitian entrants" who have continuously resided in the U.S. since January 1, 1981.

Persons receiving temporary status will be able to adjust to permanent resident status 2½ years from date that they are granted temporary residence, if they can show that they have the English language ability and knowledge of U.S. history and government required for naturalization, or are enrolled in a program to acquire such ability and knowledge.

Aliens must apply for adjustment of status to temporary resident status during 12-month period beginning on a date no later than 90 days after effective date of legalization.

Federally funded public assistance will not be available to legalized aliens for 6 years after they receive temporary resident status (except that "special Cuban and Haitian entrants" will continue to qualify for existing special benefits). 2. Persons will not be eligible for legalization who: are excludable under the immigration laws, have been convicted of a felony or 3 or more misdemeanors in the U.S., or have assisted in the persecution of any person on account of race, religion, nationality, or membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

Certain grounds of exclusion do not apply to applicants for legalization, specifically those relating to labor certification, lack of proper documentation, illiteracy, and requirements for certain graduates of unaccredited medical schools. Other grounds may be waived by the Attorney General for humanitarian purposes, to assure family unity, or when it is otherwise in the public interest, except those relating to criminals convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, or 2 or more nonpolitical offenses for which sentences aggregating 5 years or more were imposed, drug offenses (except as it relates to a single offense of simple possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana), national security, membership in certain organizations, and persecutions by Nazis. In addition, the Attorney General may not, in connection with applications for adjustment from temporary resident status to permanent status, waive the exclusion relating to aliens likely to become public charges.

3. INS may utilize qualified organizations approved by the Attorney General to assist in outreach and implementation.

4. Application fee of at least $100. Authorizes INS to utilize fees to meet administrative costs of reviewing legalization applications.

C. Reimbursement of States for legalization costs

Capped entitlement assistance to states by Secretary of HHS for 3 years to meet costs of state and local public assistance resulting from legalization program and the costs of imprisonment of illegal aliens convicted of a felony. Distribution formula is based on (1) number of eligible legalized aliens in state, (2) ratio of number of eligible legalized aliens in state to number of residents in state and to number of such aliens in all the states, (3) amount of expenditures state is likely to incur in providing public assistance to eligible legalized aliens, and (4) ratio of amount of such expenditures in one state to total such expenditures in all states.

A cap of $600 million is imposed for each of the three years.

Funds will first become available in the fiscal year during which the application period for legalization ends; distributions may be used in the designated fiscal year or, if not fully spent in that fiscal year, in the following fiscal year.

III. OTHER IMMIGRATION LAW CHANGES

Colonial quota is increased from 600 to 3,000.

State Department may establish a pilot visa waiver program for up to 8 countries which provide a similar benefit to the U.S., after INS has implemented an automated date processing system to properly track the entry and exit of visitors receiving a visa waiver, if the visa refusal, exclusion, and visa abuse rates for the nationals of such countries are below a stated level, and if the visitor has a nonrefundable, nontransferable round-trip transportation ticket. Maximum stay of such visitors would be 90 days.

Relief provisions are provided for certain retired employees of international organizations (G-4 visa holders) and their spouses, and the children and widowed spouses of employees of such organizations.

IV. REPORTS AND ANTI-DISCRIMINATION PROVISIONS

President shall report on 1) the form and effects of legal and illegal immigration to the U.S., 2) the effectiveness and impact of employer sanctions, 3) the adequacy of current systems to determine employment authorization and status of the development and implementation of changes in that system, including the results of any demonstration projects, and 4) the scope and impact of any legalization program.

The A.G. and the Secretary of State shall jointly monitor and report on the visa waiver program. The A.G. is also required to transmit a report on the equipment and personnel resources which would improve the service and enforcement capabilities of the INS.

GAO must monitor the implementation of employer sanctions and report on whether a pattern of discrimination on the basis of national origin has resulted against workers other than unauthorized aliens. A.G. in conjunction with the Commission on Civil Rights and the EEOC must review the GAO reports and, if a report states that a pattern of discrimination has resulted, must recommend specific remedial legislative changes to the Congress. The Judiciary Committees of Congress must hold hearings on such recommendations within 60 days of receipt.

V. U.S.-MEXICO COMMISSION

12-member commission is created to study how the U.S. and Mexico can work together to improve the economies of the two countries. Commission is required to report to Congress within 180 days. After submitting report, commission will terminate.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wonder if I can have the attention of the floor manager of the bill, and if he could make an appropriate request that these comments be included in the RECORD not prior to the discussion on South Africa so it would appear in the RECORD in a unified way, because as I understand it, at probably 2 o'clock I believe the leader has indicated that there might be 15 minutes a side on the South Africa issue. I think, as the chairman of the subcommittee has pointed out, this is a matter of enormous importance and it seems to me that those who follow this debate ought to have an opportunity to see it uninterrupted.

If the floor manager will make that request, I would certainly support that request.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I certainly do make that unanimous consent request, that the remarks of all of the procedure in connection with S. 1200 appear appropriately in the RECORD at the conclusion of the handling of the South African sanctions legislation. I have made that assurance to the Democractic whip, Senator ALAN CRANSTON. I ask unanimous consent that that so appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

THE IMMIGRATION BILL

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, at the outset I want to pay tribute to the work of our subcommittee chairman, Senator SIMPSON, in moving this bill forward. Throughout our long debate and review of this complex and controversial legislation, he has shown nothing but extreme courtesy, thoughtful consideration, and a willingness to hear every opinion and welcome constructive criticism.

I should also say he has shown extraordinary perseverance. I know, because this is the third year, in the third session of a Congress, that I have stood here with him as we have managed this legislation on the floor for what seems like a great many days. Since we served together on the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy in 1979 and 1980, Senator SIMPSON has pursued this issue tirelessly, with the tenacity that it unfortunately requires, as well as with the patience it demands.

This body owes a great deal to Senator SIMPSON for taking on this enormously controversial issue and presenting it to the Senate in a thoughtful and constructive fashion. He has my deep respect and admiration.

However, as he knows, I still have serious reservations over several provisions in the pending bill. During the Judiciary Committee's markup I made these concerns known, and I will be offering several amendments to address these concerns as we debate this bill in the days ahead.

LEGALIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. President, I believe a fundamental weakness in the pending bill is its retreat on the legalization proposal.

There simply is no valid reason to take the unnecessary and regrettable step backwards that this bill does in failing to immediately authorize a legalization program. Twice the U.S. Senate has voted—by substantial margins—in support of a clear-cut and unequivocal legalization program. Last year the House of Representatives voted for an even more generous amnesty. And last October the conference committee supported an equally generous and flexible legalization program. Why should we abandon these votes in support of such a humane program?

A legalization program was one of the fundamental recommendations of the Select Commission—unanimous, in fact—and was seen by all as an integral part of our reform and enforcement effort. In fact, it was seen as an essential corrollary to the new enforcement provisions recommended by the Commission and which are embodied in the current bill. I believe it still is.

I realize that the legalization program authorized in last year's bill is controversial in some quarters. But if we were willing to "bite the bullet" last year without the political roof falling in, I see no reason to abandon our stand in support of a humane and sensible legalization program. It is not only the right and decent thing to do, but is also an essential ingredient in this reform package.

EMPLOYER SANCTIONS

Mr. President, an equally important concern I have about this bill is that it must not become a vehicle for discriminatory actions against Hispanic Americans or other minority groups. Immigrants and undocumented aliens must not become scapegoats for the serious problems our country faces today. As I have argued from the first day we have debated this bill, I believe we must be extremely cautious to avoid any legislative action that could raise the level of intolerance and discrimination in our society. Whether we like it or not, the employer sanctions provisions in this bill presents this danger, and I regret that the committee did not accept my amendment that addresses this issue.

Let me make it clear that I have in the past supported legal sanctions against employers who knowingly hire undocumented aliens. I have done so as a matter of principle; it is wrong that the sanctions under current law fall solely on the undocumented aliens, not on employers who may be exploiting them, I agree that the Government needs stronger enforcement tools to deal with the serious problem of employers who engage in a pattern and practice of hiring and exploiting undocumented aliens.

However, throughout the Select Commission's work—as well as during the extensive hearings of our subcommittee over the past 4 years—two central objections have been raised again and again.

First, that the proposed employer sanctions might—I stress the word "might"—result in discrimination against certain American workers, especially Hispanics and Asians; and that we should build some protections in the bill to address these fears; and second, that employers would be unnecessarily burdened with paperwork in implementing the sanctions.

On the latter, we have taken several steps to address the fears of the American business community, but on the fears of discrimination we haven't gone as far as I believe we must.

Because if we have learned anything from the history of immigration legislation in past decades is that once an immigration law is enacted, Congress does not act again for many years.

I recall very well, Madam President, when I first came to the U.S. Senate, we had the old McCarran-Walter Immigration Act that had two very obvious discriminatory provisions. One was the national origins quota system that allocated immigrant visas based upon the accident of a person's birth, not on the criteria that the chairman of the Immigration Subcommittee has I think rightfully pointed out—and that is on the possibilities of family reunification—but based only upon a geographical distribution that was based on race.

Also included in that legislation was the Asian Pacific triangle, a geographical area that permitted immigrants to come from that geographical area. Again, there was not the criteria of family reunification. There was not the criteria of what individuals could contribute to the United States but it was solely based upon a very precise geographical area to restrict those whose skin was not white.

Those provisions lasted through the period of 50 or 60 years of consideration of legislation dealing with immigration. So some of our experience has been in this body when there are provisions that can be used in a discriminatory way in the area of immigration, the history has been that too often they have been. So when we consider a new proposal that may or might be used in that form, we should be very aware of it because this body, unlike the efforts that are being made now by the chairman of the Immigration Subcommittee, does not and has not placed historically the kind of priority on this whole question of immigration that has been placed on it in the very recent Congresses.

So in order to assure that Congress will not ignore any discrimination that might arise in the implementation of employer sanctions, I will offer an amendment to provide the following safeguards:

First, to ensure that a fair and impartial study of the sanctions program is available to Congress, my amendment will require that the General Accounting Office undertake an independent study on their implementation.

Second, employer sanctions could be "sunsetted" after 3 years, if the GAO finds that employer sanctions has resulted in a "widespread pattern of discrimination." If no discrimination materializes, then under my amendment, sanctions will be continued. But the bottom line is that this amendment will force Congress to face the issue of discrimination squarely, if it develops.

I know there will be those who say that, as a result of oversight hearings of the committees of the Congress, if we detect that is the result of the implementation of employer sanctions, that the Congress will be all too willing to address that particular issue.

This amendment simply forces the Congress to take such action and face up squarely to such a finding if such a finding should be so made.

I regret the Judiciary Committee, by two votes, did not accept this provision. If it is adopted, I believe minorities in our society will be given a pledge that, if a serious pattern of discrimination emerges, Congress will not ignore it. Given the significant changes proposed by this legislation, this is the minimum assurance we should be willing to provide.

TEMPORARY FOREIGN WORKERS

Madam President, I am also alarmed over the weakening of the H-2, temporary foreign worker provisions contained in this bill. I continue to support the unanimous vote of the Selection Commission in rejecting the establishment of an expanded temporary foreign worker program. Adoption of the legalization program will result in the adjustment in the status of undocumented aliens already working here. In addition, we have provided for a 3-year transition program to help agricultural growers adjust to the new provisions contained in this bill.

Until the impact of these changes is assessed, there is no valid justification now for authorizing a large new temporary foreign worker program. Any such program would have serious consequences for American labor and American wages. I believe we must reject calls for a new "Bracero" program.

It was here, again, Madam President, in the early part of the 1960's as a member of the Human Resources Committee, where we spent many days of hearings on the bracero program and all of the abuses and dehumanizing aspects of that program to individuals in many different parts of our country. We certainly do not want to permit the development of such a new program under this legislation.

I know that the chairman of the Immigration Subcommittee, Senator SIMPSON, agrees with that, but I think it is important in the opening statements of the manager that we draw attention to it.

We must be extremely cautious not to allow changes in the H-2 Program to undermine labor standards or to depress wages. Employers seeking H-2 workers must be required to seek American workers first, and we should plan for the elimination of this program in the future, not for its expansion.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

Finally, Madam President, as I noted during our previous consideration of this legislation, I remain troubled over the larger issue of the migration pressures our country will encouter in the decades ahead. I am concerned that this legislation continues to move forward in a kind of vacuum, and that we are deluding ourselves if we think it will, on its own, really solve the many immigration problems our country—along with many others—faces today. At best this is a Band-Aid to a potential hemorrhage—a very tentative step in a long-term process.

We only have to look at the number of undocumented aliens that recently came across the southern border at the time that the peso was devaluated not many months ago. The significant increase in the numbers that flooded across the American border was very dramatic.

I believe very strongly that we not only have to deal with this problem domestically, but we also have to be vigorous in working with our allies and friends and neighbors to the south as well as to the north, and not just apply its to the border countries, but to those countries and others in addressing this issue over a longer period of time.

Every day it becomes clearer that migration problems, which are growing around the world, will require much greater international action and cooperation. Domestic laws and actions alone are no longer sufficient. Economic and developmental problems in neighboring countries—or even in countries far away—will have more impact upon migration to the United States than any combination of domestic laws or policies. And violence and conflict can produce flows of people that only concerned international action can deal with.

I recognize, Madam President, that there are no easy answers. But it is imperative that we understand that migration is an international issue, and not merely a domestic concern. And it will require far greater international cooperation than we have undertaken to date—and that is why I supported in committee Senator Simon's amendment forcing at least a brief review of these issues as they relate to Mexico.

One of the most important recommendations of the 1981 Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy, was that the United States should become more actively involved in efforts to achieve international cooperation on world migration and refugee problems.

I continue to endorse the recommendation of the Commission that the United States should expand bilateral consultations to promote cooperation on migration issues in the Western Hemisphere—especially with our neighbors, Mexico and Canada. These two nations deserve special consideration in our policies, and I commend Senator SIMPSON for his personal efforts to meet with the leaders of Mexico during the development of this legislation.

But, once again, I must note that this bill is still moving forward without adequate consultations by the executive branch with our neighbors. If we are to achieve genuine cooperation, we must consult in advance, before changes in our immigration policies are set. Unilateral policies, like fences, do not always make good neighbors. During our consideration of this legislation, we must give greater weight to this concern and I hope the administration will give greater evidence that it, too, is pursuing it.

In conclusion, Madam President, although I continue to support efforts to achieve genuine immigration reform, I must oppose this legislation in its present form for all of the reasons I have just reviewed. But I hope my colleagues will favorably consider the amendments I intend to offer in hopes of strengthening the bill, to make it more acceptable to those groups in our society who will be so directly affected by it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts, and particularly express to him that indeed I will listen carefully to the amendments to be proposed. I will visit with my colleague concerning that.

I do look forward to the Senator's amendments. Perhaps we can reach an accord.

(Conclusion of earlier proceedings.)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand the pending business is S. 1200, the immigration bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). The majority leader is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Good. Let me thank my colleagues on both sides and hopefully we can move on now to other business. It is my hope we may be able to vitiate the yeas and nays on the vote tomorrow on the motion to proceed. We essentially had that vote already just a few moments ago. So I am very pleased to turn it back to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and others who have been most helpful in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, at this time let me urge my colleagues that we are now, and apparently will be, able to direct our attention to the floor consideration of S. 1200. I have proffered my opening statement concerning the legislation, as has Senator KENNEDY, and I do urge those within the purview of my voice to bring your amendments forward. We are going to proceed with the legislation hopefully as swiftly as possible, and if there are opening statements by other Members of the body they would be appropriate now and I would so yield for any statement in regard to the legislation.

I see my good friend from Colorado.

Mr. HART. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a question,

Mr. SIMPSON. Indeed.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has an opening statement but perhaps he may have an amendment along the lines of one offered on previous occasions on antidiscrimination. I wonder if the distinguished floor manager would tell us how he sees the flow of this legislation proceeding and how many amendments he anticipates, how much time, and so on?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, based upon the activity in the Judiciary Committee and what we have to consider based upon the floor debate on two separate previous occasions, I would judge—because I know some of these will drop away—we have about 10 amendments to consider. There are some of critical nature, as is the one of the Senator from Colorado, that is similar I believe to the so-called Levin-Hart, Hart-Levin amendment of the previous debate.

Mr. HART. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SIMPSON. And then there are amendments on employer sanctions, discrimination based on alienage, a worker verification amendment, a legalization amendment by Senator D'AMATO, and a key amendment would be the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], with regard to agricultural temporary workers. That will be tomorrow. The Senator from California is not in the Capitol today.

Mr. HART. The Senator may have answered the question. The distinguished floor manager anticipates the bill will go until tomorrow.

Mr. SIMPSON. Indeed.

Mr. HART. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. You bet. The Senator is most welcome.

I yield to my colleague—and let me say a new member of the subcommittee—Senator PAUL SIMON of Illinois, whom I have known since the 1970's. We legislated together in the early seventies for different States. I met him then. I have great respect for him. It has been a pleasure to have him as a member of the subcommittee. He has been a very fine contributing member. I appreciate the thoughtful way he has addressed the issue of immigration reform. I yield to Senator SIMON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I thank you, Mr. President, and I thank my colleague from Wyoming.

One of the things that I have had a chance to dig into a little more fully since I have been here in the Senate after coming over from the House of Representatives is this whole question of immigration, which one of my colleagues has described as a can of worms, and that is not an inaccurate description of this legislative problem because it is exceedingly complicated. One of the things I have learned is to have even greater respect for the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator SIMPSON. He is in a very real sense a legislator's legislator. He has done a superlative job.

I do have reservations. I was one of four who voted against this in the committee. Let me spell out just very briefly the concerns I have, and I will have at least a couple of amendments, one of which is probably going to be a matter of some controversy.

First, I am concerned about the whole legalization issue. We called it amnesty 2 years ago when this was before our body. We are now talking about legalization. What we have is a time gap between the effective date of discrimination penalties or penalties against an employer for hiring an undocumented alien and the point when legalization takes place. What happens to these people during that period?

This was addressed by my colleague, Senator KENNEDY, in the committee. The Kennedy amendment unfortunately was defeated. I assume that my colleague will be offering that amendment again, and I will be supporting that amendment.

The second concern I have is a concern referred to by Senator HART just a little bit ago and that is on the question of discrimination. That, I think, is going to be one of the problems.

Now, I have frankly not been at a hearing where this has been discussed. There is going to be a joint hearing with the House of Representatives on this in the near future. I have said I do not know what the right answers are here. I am going to be listening with great care to what Senator HART and Senator LEVIN have to say. But I sense this is a problem.

Third, I am concernd about the H-2 Program under which we bring in farm workers. Under the current program, over 90 percent of the applications from employers are OK. To simply use the present system seems to me to be much wiser than to tempt fate by moving as this bill does. There are concerns by Cesar Chavez and the Farm Workers Union and I think those concerns are justified. So I am concerned about that.

Finally, I am concerned about the total impact of this on Mexico. The reality is that the undocumented aliens do send a sizable amount of money into Mexico. Mexico has serious financial problems, much more serious than when we originally passed this bill.

I think Mexico's problems have to be alleviated either through the kind of return that is now possible through illegal alien programs or through some kind of loans and grants from the United States or the sale of goods.

I think those are basically the three alternatives. And if we aggravate the economic situation that Mexico faces, we could have some very serious problems south of the border, and that should be of great concern to all of us.

I will be offering at least two amendments, one to increase the quota for the Hong Kong refugees—it is 3,000 in the bill—up to 5,000. It does not increase the overall number. It is in line with a bill that Senator DIXON and I have sponsored. And I think that probably is not going to be a matter of major controversy.

The second is an amendment that will be a matter of greater controversy, and that is an amendment that says on the nonimmigrant visa no one should be denied that nonimmigrant visa because of political beliefs.

The reality as we have embarrassed ourselves fairly consistently by denying Allende's widow in Chile from coming in when she was asked to come in by the Roman Catholic diocese. An author in Canada, the author of the book "Never Cry Wolf," protested B-52's flying over his land in Canada, and so we refused to give him a visa until Canada protested, and then we authorized a visa, but he at this point refused to come down.

The difference between the United States and the Soviet Union is our freedom and our ability to express ourselves without fear. I do not like to see us copying the Soviets in moving away from that.

I recognize that is an amendment that is probably going to be a matter of some controversy.

But these concerns I think we will be discussing in coming days in some detail, and I look forward to joining in that debate.

Again, I have great respect for the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator SIMPSON. He has worked on this issue. It is an issue that frankly he does not get any votes in Wyoming for working on this issue. It is a no-win issue, but it is an important issue for the people of this Nation.

I was not able to vote for it as it emerged from the subcommittee. I hope it can be in the kind of condition I can vote for when it emerges from this body.

I yield back my time, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the thoughtful remarks of our fellow member of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy, and indeed, he has expressed that we must indeed turn our attention to the fact that this is not just our Nation's problem, although certainly the first duty of a sovereign nation is to control its borders and, of course, that must be done unilaterally.

I have visited and debated many times with my friend from Mexico City, Jorge Bustamonte of Colleğio de Mexico, who has shared common platforms with me many times, insisting and with great zeal and enthusiasm that this is indeed a bilateral issue.

And yet it is critical that we realize that if we were to tell our neighbors to the South what to do with their immigration policies, they would be offended. And that same type of thing could arise here and nearly did during the debate on the first bill when there was an expression from the Senate of Mexico that they felt that this was a bilateral issue and they needed to be heard on the issue. And, of course, if we had intruded in that manner in their legislative deliberations I believe it would have been distressful.

As I visited with President Lopez de Portillo, I said to him, "What is it that you would have us do as deal with illegal immigraion?" There was no response.

I said, "I'm not from the State Department, I'm not from the executive branch. I represent 1 of 535 very interesting people. What is your solution?" And there was no response.

Finally, I said, "There is no one here but us chickens. What is your feeling about this critical issue, sir?"

He said, "Treat our people fairly and we hope that they are not exploited."

And I said, "How can we do that when they are there illegally?"

He said, "That is the issue, isn't it?"

I said, "It is, sir, " and that was where that conversation ended. And that is one of the serious problems.

Another serious problem, as well portrayed by the Senator from Illinois, is the issue of what happens to those people in the interim period between the bill and legislation. I would only say that it is the same thing that is happening to them now. If we had passed a bill 2, 3, or 4 years ago they would have been protected. By rejecting the legislation they are subject to deportation, and that will continue to take place until we have our machinery in place, our resources in place, economic activity, employer sanctions and those things implemented and in place.

I think that it is interesting—and I have shared it with the Senator from Illinois—the problems in addressing the issue of Mexico and the giving of economic aid to Mexico so that they might have an economy strengthened as being a solution to our own problems of illegal immigration. All studies have shown the economic aid in other countries very likely increases illegal immigration because, indeed, when the persons have been able to obtain some funds, that is what is required to come here illegally. They either pay a smuggler or someone less than a smuggler, an associate, or a friend. It takes money. When the money is received and the economic aid or support is increased, we have found in studies that illegal immigration increases. And it is indeed a long-term solution—that type of aid—but in the near term of the next 15, 20, or 30 years, we are going to require employer sanctions. And that was the unanimous recommendation of the select commission.

Mr. President, I would indicate to my colleagues that we are now on S. 1200. It is a very fascinating bill. I do hope they will come over here and enjoy this intriguing subject and bring with them their portfolios and their staffs and their vigorous ideas as to the amending process. That would be very helpful. And then we could proceed.

I am going to visit with my colleague, the ranking minority member, and see if we can perhaps resolve or maybe reach an accord on an amendment or two. I would say to those principals listening—and I know they are, as we all do, through our communication procedures in the Senate—if you have an amendment to present please come forward. I have drafts of several amendments that apparently are not in final form. I also know of two that will be presented tomorrow.

The leader has indicated that how quickly this bill is processed and the amendments presented will determine when we shall leave these Chambers this week. In other words, if we could proceed to bring the amendments forward, it is very likely that we can conclude the matter perhaps by tomorrow—in a late evening session if that is required—or this evening, and then Friday Members would be able to return to their district. That is possible. If not, we would probably be in session Friday and dispose of this legislation, in any event, this week.

That is the desire of the majority leader, and certainly I think the desire of this Senator and the desire of Senator KENNEDY, to conclude this bill, get it to the House of Representatives, where then Congressmen RODINO and MAZZOLI and LUNGREN and FISH and FRANK can process their version and get on to a conference committee as early as possible and try to resolve immigration reform before we swing into another election year cycle. Those are not always pleasant. Congressman MAZZOLI and I have found there was more discussion about our names at one of the party conventions than there was about their own platform. That is always a disturbing thing to witness.

So, with that, we are aware of amendments that intend to be produced and I urge you to do so. It will have a direct bearing on your ability to exit the premises this week.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I rise as I have risen in each of the two earlier occasions the Senate considered immigration control legislation to support this effort to regain control over our borders. Though it has been 3 years since the Senate first acted on this issue, the problems are no less severe. For all practical purposes we still have failed to regain control over our borders.

This failure is due not to a lack of effort on the part of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, but to a lack of sufficient resources to deal with the problem, and the failure of existing laws to deal with the source of the problem—the availability of jobs for illegal aliens in the United States. The reason I support this legislation is that it addresses these problems head on. The primary means by which the bill addresses the problem is through an increase in resources for the INS and a program known as employer sanctions.

Employer sanctions provide penalties for employers who knowingly hire or refer, illegal aliens. The penalties are substantial and in the case of a pattern or practice of offenses include criminal penalties. There is a change in this year's bill, however, and that is that the employer sanctions are now voluntary. But a system of incentives and disincentives makes it clearly advantageous for an employer to follow the verification procedures in the bill.

There are several provisions in the bill with which I have problems. For example, I was disappointed to learn that this year's bill deletes the legal immigration provisions that were included in versions of the bill twice passed by the Senate. I also believe that it is a mistake to continue to delay consideration of expanding Presidential powers in the event of an immigration emergency. This is a major issue, and its absence is a major flaw in the legislation. I am also concerned that the States and localities not be forced to take the expense of a Federal decision to legalize a portion of the alien population. It is unfair to expect the States and localities to pick up the costs of a Federal decision.

I commend Senator SIMPSON for his efforts on this legislation. It is not perfect, but it is sorely needed.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I would like to commend Senator SIMPSON once again for his patience and diligence in trying to achieve some control over immigration to this country. We all have realized that this is an extremely difficult issue and also one with extremely important consequences.

No one has worked harder on this issue than Senator SIMPSON and I share his disappointment that we were not successful in getting a bill to the President's desk last Congress.

Approximately 30 years have passed since the last major reform of U.S. immigration policy. The time has arrived to undergo this painful process again.

Theodore H. White described the situation in which America finds itself resulting from our current set of chaotic complicated immigration laws:

> One starts with the obvious: That the United States has lost one of the cardinal attributes of sovereignty—it no longer controls its own borders. Its immigration laws are flouted by aliens and citizens alike, as no system of laws has been flouted since prohibition. And the impending transformation of our nation, its culture, and its ethnic heritage could become one of the central debates of the politics of the 1980s. See White, America in Search of Itself, p.361 (1982).

The debate has already begun and let us hope that S. 1200 is just the first step in the reformation process.

Though most Americans currently residing in the United States owe their presence here to the open door immigration policies of the past, the perpetuation of the myth that this country is one without limits can only prove harmful in the long run. Technology is one of the major reasons why today's immigration phenomenon is entirely different from the immigration waves of the past. As Mr. White continued to explain:

> . . . The earlier immigrants from Europe spent weeks trekking to ports, and then more weeks in the steerage of tramp steamers, to reach the promised land. A modern immigrant can be here or there in four hours from any airport in the Caribbean, in fifteen hours from Asia.
> . . . It once took years of work and savings for an honest man to buy passage for his family to join him. Now after six months a diligent immigrant can afford air passage for all the rest of his family. The result has been a stampede, almost an invasion. supra; pp. 361-362.

America currently accepts over twice as many legal immigrants as the rest of the world combined. This does not include the estimated 3 to 6 million aliens illegally in the country. Control of our borders is essential in order to protect U.S. citizens from a continued high unemployment rate and to foster a reliance on our laws by those outside our country who wish to reside here.

The Immigration Reform and Control Act is a well-conceived product which may go far in achieving our badly needed reforms. The provisions of the bill relating to employer sanctions, increased interior and border enforcement and a secure worker eligibility identity system are necessary to regain control over our borders.

Though the concept of legalization has been one of the most hotly debated aspects of the bill, I believe that legalization in some form is not only in the best interests of those undocumented aliens already firmly residing here but for the citizenry of our country as well. A large undocumented population contributes to the creation and perpetuation of an exploited subclass society afraid to report crimes and illnesses which endanger the public health.

A variety of legalization programs were presented to the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy, a bipartisan group established by the Carter administration to study solutions to our immigration problems, and the Senate Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy ranging from a massive deportation program to total amnesty for all aliens upon enactment of the bill. The Select Commission's final report stated that it was guided by two major principles in developing its legalization recommendations:

First, the legalization program should be consistent with U.S. interests, and Second, the program should not encourage further undocumented migration.

The approach adopted by S. 1200, is consistent with these goals. This provision provides that illegal aliens who have resided continuously in the United States since January 1, 1980, are eligible for temporary resident status upon enactment of the bill. These aliens will be eligible to apply for permanent resident status 2½ years following their grant of temporary status. In addition, these residents are ineligible for all Federal assistance programs such as AFDC, food stamps, Medicaid, and the like. Only following 6 years after the adjustment of these aliens, will eligibility for Federal programs become available.

Though my original goal was to have no legalization prior to the assurance of the development of a secure worker authorization system, I find the present bill language is acceptable. Under S. 1200, if current identifiers prove inadequate in stemming the flow of illegal aliens, the President is required to implement changes in the verification system to make it more secure. In addition, S. 1200 establishes a Legalization Commission to be composed of nine members appointed by the President. No person may be appointed who does not support the concept of the legalization program provided for in the bill. The major duty of the Commission is to report annually to Congress whether certain conditions have been met. Such conditions include the following:

First, effective enforcement measures have been instituted and have adequate resources to curtail illegal immigration,

Second, it is reasonably likely that these measures will continue to be in effect and to have adequate resources after legalization, and

Third, enforcement has become effective enough to prevent legalization from serving as a stimulus to further illegal entry.

The legalization program will begin after the Commission reports that the above conditions have been met, or 3 years after enactment, whichever is earlier.

Therefore, we will ensure that the flow of illegal aliens is substantially curtailed prior to the granting of permanent residency to those eligible under the bill.

The advantages of this proposal are apparent. Massive deportations are not only impractical but nearly impossible. The best chance of apprehending an illegal alien is at the border. The odds plunge drastically downward once that alien has reached the interior of the country. A massive deportation policy was implemented back in 1954 with alarming results. Not only was it unsuccessful in returning many illegal aliens, but the civil rights of many U.S. citizens and permanent residents were violated in the course of this program.

The only realistic remedy to deal with the current population of undocumented workers is to legitimize their status in a way which will ensure that these prople continue to work and become productive and participating members of their communities. I believe legalization as embodied in S. 1200 accomplishes these goals.

This bill is a carefully crafted package which must remain largely intact in order to pass both bodies and go to the President's desk for signature. It is my hope that we can move S. 1200 rapidly through the Senate, that in turn the House will act quickly, and the President will approve this bill by the end of the Congress. If we do not act now, it may be another 30 years before we return to the issue of immigration control. By that time the problem is guaranteed to be beyond congressional solutions.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, what is the pending business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. S. 1200 is the pending business.

CONDEMNING THE KIDNAPING OF PRESIDENT DUARTE'S DAUGHTER

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be read. It is in the process of being cleared now by Members of the Senate, but I would like to ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read. It is offered by myself and the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. LUGAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 219

Resolved,

Whereas the oldest daughter of President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, Mrs. Ines Guadelupe Duarte Duran, was assaulted and kidnapped yesterday in her home city of San Salvador;

Whereas the people responsible for the kidnapping are armed terrorists, in the course of the kidnapping, killed a driver and wounded a bodyguard; and

Whereas such acts of terrorism against innocent civilians deserve the condemnation of all civilized peoples throughout the world;

It is the sense of the Senate that:

The kidnapping of President Duarte's daughter is to be deplored in the strongest possible terms;

The individuals responsible for this unconscionable and unwarranted act of terrorism are to be condemned;

The sympathy and prayers of the American people are with the Duarte family and with the people of El Salvador during this ordeal; and

The individuals responsible for this crime should release Ines Guadelupe Duarte Duran immediately and safely.

The President of the United States should provide whatever assistance the government of El Salvador or the Duarte family may request to achieve the safe return of Mrs. Duarte Duran and to bring the kidnappers to justice;

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] be added as cosponsors and that any Member of the Senate be added as cosponsor if they so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABDNOR). Without objection, it is so ordered.

IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT OF 1985

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 591

(Purpose: To increase the colonial quota)

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] for himself, Mr. DIXON and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes Amendment No. 591.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 104, line 11, strike out "3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "5,000".

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I have discussed this with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. This is an amendment which in this bill would raise the Hong Kong quota from 3,000 to 5,000.

Cosponsoring the amendment are Senator DIXON and Senator KENNEDY.

We do have in Hong Kong a huge pileup now of people who apply. There is a 5- to 7-year wait right now. This is part of total quota within the United Kingdom. It does not add anything to the total number of emigres into this country. I am advised that it would not put a strain on our visa office.

As far as I know it would present no problems. I am advised by my staff that the administration testified over on the House side that they would support a 5,000 quota.

I obviously do not want to speak for the Senator from Wyoming, but I believe this is an acceptable amendment to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I have visited with the Senator from Illinois. It is something we have discussed before in committee. We did not deal with it there.

I know that the Senator has physically been present and visited with the Hong Kong authorities. I know that I have in the years past.

The increasing of this colonial quota will affect really only one nation and only one colony, and that is Great Britain and its crown colony Hong Kong for at least a few more years in that relationship.

The quota used by a colony is subtracted from the mother country's quota, and that figure, I believe, last year from Great Britain was 11,000 or 12,000, something in that area. This increase will not affect immigration from Great Britain, which never uses its full quota of 20,000 per year. So I think it is appropriate. I appreciate the Senator's thoughtfulness.

In the bill we had taken it from 600 to 3,000 and now his amendment will take it to 5,000. Certainly that would be acceptable to this floor manager, and I understand that Senator KENNEDY has indicated his concurrence with the amendment. So we do accept the amendment.

Mr. SIMON. If the Senator will yield, I thank the Senator. He is correct. He brought the figure up to 3,000 which is a distinct improvement and Senator KENNEDY has asked to be a cosponsor of the amendment. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment (No. 591) was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

MODIFIED AMENDMENT NO. 591

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, we have a perfecting amendment here. There was a technical error in the drafting of the amendment that we offered before. I offer that at this time. I have discussed this with the Senator from Wyoming. It does precisely what we talked about before. I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to modifying the agreed-upon amendment?

Without objection, the amendment is modified.

The modified amendment follows:

On page 104, line 9, strike 3,000 and insert 5,000,

On page 104, line 11, strike out "3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "5,000".

On page 104, line 13, strike 3,000 and insert 5,000.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, let me review the bidding here on the immigration bill, S. 1200. The minority floor manager and I, I think, have both expressed that we are here within earshot of the Chamber, ready to process amendments. I am being a bit facetious, so let me get a bit serious.

This bill is not an unknown thing to my colleagues. A great deal of activity and work has gone into it. It has been before the Senate before. It has been pending now since 1 p.m. today. We have had amendments. I do appreciate very much Senator SIMON's presentation of an amendment. Senator CHILES will have an amendment in the morning. Then there will be amendments of Senator KENNEDY, Senator MCCLURE, Senator HAWKINS, and a D'AMATO amendment with regard to incarceration. Senator BAUCUS will have an amendment.

An important amendment tomorrow will be that of Senator WILSON with regard to temporary agricultural employees. It is very likely that the debate on that amendment will begin around noon. We will have that at that time. There may be other amendments, germane or nongermane. Any of those that are nongermane I would hope to dispose of at some other juncture or on some other bill. So we will see how that goes.

Let me say that there were, at least originally, 12 to 15 amendments—serious, I would think we would describe them—to the bill. We await those. There has been a notable lack of activity in bringing those amendments to the floor. We are ready to receive them. If there are amendments, we would like to see the text of them and perhaps we could even accept some of those.

We have a fine staff to assist with those amendments so we might better get the essence of them, and perhaps the minority member of the subcommittee and I could accept those.

The majority leader has other business this evening and we shall get ready to conclude our activities tonight. We shall then get back on this bill at approximately noon tomorrow, very likely with the Wilson amendment. It is likely to be a busy day on S. 1200. There could be several votes tomorrow.

Again, I express these thoughts to you without a sense of threat—because that is something I never enjoyed, whether a Member of the majority or of the minority and I have been both—that is something one never wants to forget in this curious arena when you have been both majority and minority.

Very likely we will try to conclude this measure tomorrow if my colleagues and principals are anxious not to be here on Friday. If that is something Senators are hoping for, that they not be here Friday in session, then I urge them to participate with great gusto tomorrow, Thursday. We will then go perhaps into the evening and try to conclude if that is at all possible. I think the essence of it is that we will finish this bill this week. We have time to do that. Obviously we have time to do that: we have assessed that. Certainly I do not want to impel anyone along with the thought that I might ask for third reading tomorrow or something like that; that might galvanize interests of all sorts and varieties here. But at some point I urge Senators to present themselves with amendments. We know that tomorrow we will deal with the amendments that we are aware of and hopefully accommodate my fellow Senators so that they would not be here Friday. If they will not do that, we will continue tomorrow and then go on into Friday to process S. 1200 because the window will not stay open long with the workload we have, with regard to the farm bill, the Superfund, perhaps another revisitation to South Africa on the anti-apartheid legislation.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into a period for the transaction of morning business until 5:45 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 1621. A bill to amend title 25 U.S.C., relating to Indian education programs, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, since 1918, there has been a law on the books, based on language from an appropriations bill of that same year, to the effect that no moneys may be used "to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided." (25 U.S.C. 297)

Enforcement by the Bureau of Indian Affairs [BIA] of section 297 over the years has been lax. Generally, they have granted waivers under rather loose guidelines. About 2 years ago however, the BIA took the view that enforcement of this old law could be a way to save money. In fact, if the children in question are transferred to public schools, many will be eligible for chapter I, the Johnson O'Malley Act title IV, and Impact Aid. So the cost is about the same.

The BIA proposed new regulations on May 10, 1985, with a 30-day comment. At my request the deadline for comment was moved forward by about 3 weeks to July 5. They intended to have final regulations in place by August in time to make reductions in the fall student count. I have the impression they are quite stunned by the strength of opposition to the regulations. The National Tribal Chairmen's Association, the National Congress of American Indians, the National Federation of Federal Employees, and the National Indian School Boards Association, among others, are in strong opposition to the proposed regulations. These regulations, so far have not been implemented.

Put simply, the protestors object to precluding certain Indian children from attending Indian schools in their own communities, thus denying these children the benefit of the cultural heritage and cohesion fostered by the local school and discriminating against them by setting them apart as a separate class of Indian children based solely upon racial factors. All this is, of course, in addition to the difficulty of determining what is meant by adequate public school facility.

All members of federally recognized tribes are routinely eligible for all Federal services provided by the BIA and the IHS regardless of their blood quantum. Other Indians who can prove quarter degree blood are also eligible whether or not they are members of federally recognized tribes.

It is, therefore, an anachronism that certain children are being singled out under the auspices of a law that is nearly 70 years old for unfair and discriminatory treatment.

The most affected tribe is the Eastern Cherokee of North Carolina but the figures on the attached memo from the BIA indicate that problems will be felt throughout the country if the BIA insists on strict enforcement of this law. At Eastern Cherokee, it is estimated that 15 percent of the children now attending the Cherokee Indian School will not receive funds for this school year. Many of the Cherokee Indian children who are less than quarter-degree Indian are descendents of individuals who were enrolled in the tribe by the Federal Government in 1924 over the objection of the Cherokee Indian Council. Since then, however, they have been recognized and treated as tribal members by both the tribe and by the Federal Government.

This bill amends the Indian Education Act Amendments of 1978 by defining children eligible to attend BIA funded schools as those children who are members of federally recognized tribes or who are at least one-fourth degree Indian blood. It also allows children of Federal or tribal employees who reside on or near a school site to attend schools without tuition under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary. It also allows other children to attend local BIA funded schools by paying tuition fees that are comparable to fees charged by the nearest public school district.

The bill grandfathers in those children who attended BIA schools last year for this coming academic year to prevent a critical situation where some who are already enrolled would be forced to transfer to a public school in midyear. The bill repeals section 296 along with section 288 and 289 of the United States Code. These latter sections deal with tuition charges to white children in Indian schools and much of the language is incorporated in the new language. It makes sense to amend the education act rather than amending each of the three offending statutes. The portion of the education act that is being amended deals with the allotment formula for distribution of BIA education funds.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1621

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Section 1128 of P.L. 95-561 (25 U.S.C. 2008), as amended, is amended by—

(1) deleting "Indian students" in subsection (a)(1) and substituting in lieu thereof "eligible Indian students"; and

(2) deleting "Indian child" between the words "for each" and "attending such school", and "for an" and "in public school" in subsection (b), and substitute in lieu thereof "eligible Indian student"; and

(3) by adding the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) For purposes of this section, the term "eligible Indian student" shall include students who are members of a Federally recognized Tribe or who are at least one fourth degree Indian blood.

(2) Any student who is not an eligible Indian student but who is a dependent of an employee of the Federal or tribal government and who resides on or near a school site may, pursuant to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary, attend a school operated by the Bureau under this section without charge for tuition.

(3) Students who are not otherwise provided for in this Section may, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary, be admitted to any Bureau operated school, provided that the local Indian school board agrees to such attendance and provided that the tuition fees charged to such students shall in no cases exceed the tuition fees charged by the nearest public school district providing free public education in the State in which the Bureau operated school is located. Tuition paid under this paragraph shall be added to the Bureau school's allotment received under this section.

(4) Schools operated under contract with the Bureau may, subject to policies established by the governing school board, accept students who are not eligible for funding under this section. Tuition received under this provision shall be in addition to the school's funding allotment under this section."

SEC. 2. Any other provision of law notwithstanding, any student who attended a Bureau funded school during the 1984-1985 academic year shall be deemed eligible to attend the same Bureau funded school under the same circumstances during the 1985-1986 academic year.

SEC. 3. Sections 288, 289 and 297 of Title 25 of the United States Code are hereby repealed.

By Mr. MELCHER (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI and Mr. ANDREWS):

S. 1622. A bill to promote the development of native American culture and art; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

NATIVE AMERICAN CULTURE AND ART DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, late in the 98th Congress, I introduced S. 2762, a bill for the preservation and development of native American Art and Culture. The bill was referred to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs which took no formal action. Nevertheless, in the interim Senator DOMENICI and I have worked closely with numerous groups and individuals with a deep interest in this legislation which has allowed us to clarify a number of issues in the bill.

Today we are introducing another version of the native American art and culture bill which incorporates many of these suggestions. This legislation will provide Federal support for Indian art and culture. While the artistic and cultural heritage of the United States has had numerous influences, the only genuinely native heritage derives from the Indian people. Unfortunately, without impetus from the Federal Government, there is a clear danger not only that much of our existing Indian art and culture will be lost to future generations but continuing artistic expression will be stymied.

The unique aspects of American Indian art and culture must be preserved and fostered by a sensitive and concerned approach both to the historical and ongoing contributions of native Americans. Current Federal initiatives in this area are fragmented and inadequate.

This bill would establish an Institute of Native American Culture and Arts Development directed by a board of trustees, a majority of which will be Indians. The primary functions of the Institute will be to provide the scholarly study of, and instruction in, the arts and culture of native Americans and to establish programs which culminate in the awarding of degrees in various fields of native American art and culture.

It is important to note that the Institute's programs would be designed to complement existing tribal programs for the advancement of native American art and culture. The Institute would play a crucial role in coordinating efforts to preserve, support, revitalize, and develop evolving forms of native American art and culture.

The Institute will have authority to create a Center for Culture and Art Studies and a Center for Research and Cultural Exchange and will incorporate the functions of the existing Institute of American Indian Arts.

The establishment of an Institute encompassing the art and culture of Indian people is not a new concept but, I believe, it is one whose time has come. The Senate Special Subcommittee on Indian Education in its 1969 report, "Indian Education: A National Tragedy—A National Challenge," recommended the creation of such an Institute and emphasized that—

The information such as an Institute could disseminate, as well as the research which it would conduct, would greatly increase public knowledge and understanding of the American Indian (Senate Report 91-501, p. 126).

Sixteen years have passed since the Senate received that recommendation. With the introduction of this bill, the Senate will have the opportunity to consider this proposal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1622

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of American in Congress assembled, To promote the development of Native American culture art.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of American in Congress assembled, That this Act may cited as the "Native American Culture and Art Development Act".

(5) it is appropriate and necessary for the Federal Government to support research and scholarship in Native American art and culture and to complement programs for the advancement of Native American art and culture by tribal, private, and public agencies and organizations;

(6) current Federal initiatives in the area of Native American art and culture are fragmented and inadequate; and

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today, along with my colleagues, Senators MELCHER and ANDREWS, I am introducing a bill whose essence was passed by the full Senate on May 10, 1982. The issue remains before us as the House of Representatives did not act on this measure in the 97th Congress, and we did not act on it in the 98th Congress. Today's Federal initiatives in native American art and culture are quite fragmented and sorely inadequate. This bill, which was sponsored last year, S. 2726, by Senators MELCHER, ANDREWS, INOUYE, DECONCINI, GOLDWATER, MATSUNAGA, COCHRAN, KENNEDY, BURDICK, and BINGAMAN, makes vast improvements in the potential for private participation in furthering native American art and culture.

In this bill we create a marriage between the current Federal commitment and those in the private sector who have expressed a desire to contribute hundreds of thousands of dollars but for the current Federal control over virtually all aspects of the Institute for American Indian Arts in Santa Fe. NM. This reluctance to give freely is directly addressed by this bill. We create a federally chartered Institute of Native American Culture and Arts Development under the control an 18-member board of trustees, 12 of whom must be native Americans widely recognized in the field of native American art and culture. All functions of the Institute of America Indian Arts, established by the Secretary of the Interior in 1962, are transferred to the new institute which will have the power to solicit and receive gifts and grants for the benefit of the Institute of Native American Culture and Art Development [INACAD].

Mr. President, interest in this type of change has come to our attention because of the present restrictions on the Institute of American Indian Arts [IAIA]. This inability to convince potential donors that gifts would be free of Federal control has hampered many potential and significant contributions which have yet to materialize. I am proud of the initiative of the IAIA in seeking and encouraging outside contributions. Our fundamental intent in this bill is to continue Federal support while doing all we can to encourage private donations to further the functions of the INACAD. Primarily these functions will be to "provide scholarly study of, and instruction in the arts and culture of native Americans and to establish programs which culminate in the awarding of degrees in the various fields of native American art and culture."

This will be accomplished by the establishment within the Institute of a Center for Culture and Art Studies (arts and sciences, visual arts, performing arts, language, literature, and museology) and a Center for Research and Cultural Exchange (Museum of native American arts, learning resource center, seminars, and other activities). INACAD will also develop programs to foster further research and scholarship and complement existing tribal programs.

This bill also specifies that the new INACAD be established in Santa Fe, NM, which has been the home of IAIA since 1962. All functions of the Institute for American Indian Arts will be incorporated into the new Institute for Native American Culture and Arts Development.

This legislation is vital to the future development of a national effort to promote Indian art education and scholarship in a manner that can attract private support and tap the special talents of the Indian people of this Nation. The many success stories of the IAIA give me a belief that the future of INACAD will be even brighter with the addition of new energies, talents, contributions, and a better organization. With the continued support of the Federal Government in this newly invigorated institute, our Federal investment will see many improved returns. Education in Indian art and culture will be improved, contributions to the museum can increase, scholarship will have a freer hand, and the story of Indian culture will be available to more Americans in a high quality environment.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 1623. A bill to amend titles XI and XVIII of the Social Security Act to enhance the authority of peer review organizations to review the quality of health care services provided under the Medicare Program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

PEER REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS LEGISLATION

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to close a serious loophole in our ability to protect Medicare beneficiaries from poor quality care in our Nation's hospitals, while taking some necessary steps to assure the financial viability of Medicare's watchdogs—the Peer Review Organizations, or PRO's.

Mr. President, 29 million aged and disabled Americans depend on Medicare to provide the health coverage they need. They have a right to the best quality care available—and Congress has the responsibility to assure that the necessary quality controls are in place and functioning effectively.

Now Congress historically has taken this responsibility seriously, repeatedly acting to tighten up quality controls to protect Medicare patients from incompetent, inefficient and unscrupulous health care providers. Over 15 years ago, this concern for quality assurance led the Congress to create the Professional Standards Review Organizations [PSRO's]. A decade later, in 1982, Congress replaced the PSRO's with the Peer Review Organizations [PRO's], thus providing much improved and stronger safeguards for older Americans.

Finally, Congress' determination to guarantee the very best in health care quality assurance resulted in the 1983 amendments to the Social Security Act. Those amendments further sharpened the teeth of Medicare's watchdogs, the PRO's, arming them to counter the threat of premature hospital discharge inherent in the Prospective Payment System.

I regret to inform my colleagues here today that our work in this important endeavor is yet unfinished. An ongoing investigation by the Special Committee on Aging, Aging, which I chair, shows all too early that perhaps thousands of frail and seriously ill older Americans fall victim to those who would abuse Medicare's new payment system for their greater profit.

Frankly, knowing full well of Congress' intent, I was shocked to learn just this past July that HHS had yet to implement the 1983 amendments—leaving the PRO's powerless to act in behalf of those beneficiaries known to have suffered from substandard care. Since then, I am very pleased to say, HHS has begun to take steps to implement Congress' 1983 reforms. But there is much more to be done before we can rest easy on this issue.

Mr. President, the Medicare Quality of Health Care Act of 1985 will support Medicare's quality assurance program in three key ways:

First, it gives the PRO's—for the first time—the clear and definite authority to deny Medicare reimbursement for poor quality services rendered by a doctor or a hospital. By overlooking this authority in the past, we've made the PRO's the big brothers of review, but withheld the big stick of enforcement. We must close this loophole in the PRO's authority if we are to claim to have done everything possible to protect the elderly from substandard care under the new payment system.

Second, the act reforms an anachronism in the Social Security Act that targets funding levels for the vital Peer Review Organizations at the rock-bottom 1982 levels—levels which were established when the old PSRO program was all but phased out of existence. My bill would bring funding levels closer in line with the realities of a program in full swing—and the expensive quality reviews mandated by the cost cutting incentives of the DRG system.

Finally, I understand that some of these essential Peer Review Organizations are facing a financial crisis caused by Medicare's snail-like reimbursement system. PRO's spend tens of thousands of dollars each month on protecting Medicare beneficiaries, but must often wait between 60 and 75 days to be paid by Medicare under the terms of their contracts with HCFA.

The problem is rooted in our payment mechanism, which is based upon principles established in the Government's dealings with mammoth defense contractors. An organization like General Dynamics can weather a late Government payment without a drought in its cash flow. But to many of the PRO's, which are generally small nonprofit organizations operating primarily because of their Medicare contract, payment delays can be crippling. As many as 14 PRO's, charged with protecting some one-third of Medicare beneficiaries, have indicated they will be forced into a deficit by Medicare's slow reimbursement system now or in the future.

These organizations will be forced to borrow money to make their payrolls, and the interest charges can only come from one place under their fixed price contracts with Medicare. These constraints cannot help but have a severe impact on enforcement of quality. I propose amending current practices to require HCFA to make payments to PRO's within 15 days of the close of each month.

Mr. President, I urge the other Members of the Senate to join me in sponsoring these important reforms to keep our peer review system strong and vigorous, so that it may in turn safeguard our aged citizens from substandard health care.●

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 1624. A bill to make ineligible for certain agricultural program benefits persons who are convicted under Federal or State law of planting, cultivation, growing, or harvesting or controlled substances; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES PRODUCTION CONTROL ACT

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I was recently shocked to learn that individuals who have been convicted of growing marijuana or other illegal drug-producing plants do not automatically lose their access to agricultural program benefits. In fact, while the law makes ineligible for program benefits individuals convicted of harvesting such plants, it fails to speak to the issue of conviction for planting, cultivating, or growing of controlled substances. Furthermore, present law simply prohibits agricultural program benefits in the single year of conviction. Today I am introducing legislation that I believe will remedy this situation and I plan on offering this bill as an amendment to the farm bill when it is brought to the floor of the Senate.

My bill, the Controlled Substances Production Control Act of 1985 would specifically prohibit the participation in agricultural program benefits to any person convicted of planting, cultivating, growing or harvesting of a controlled substance for the year of conviction and the ensuing 4 years. This would apply to cannabis as well as other illegal drug-producing plants.

None of us intended to subsidize the growth of illegal drugs in this country. Yet because of this loophole that is exactly what we are doing. In 1983, the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated that between $16 to $18 million worth of program benefits were going to just these criminals. In fact, the USDA sent a proposed bill to Congress earlier this year that addressed this very problem. (Their proposal differed from mine in that it only sought a 1 year exclusion, but I believe that we need to create a greater disincentive for growing drugs.)

The overwhelming majority of farmers in this country are honest, hard-working people. We are all well aware of the crisis facing farmers as we attempt to meet the competing demands of cutting the budget and insuring that this country continues to provide food not only for herself but for the starving nations of the world as well. It is unfair that honest farmers must share dwindling program benefits with common criminals. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. DENTON:

S. 1626. A bill to create a Disability Advisory Council; to the Committee on Finance.

DISABILITY ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, today, I am introducing the Social Security Disability Advisory Council Act of 1985. The bill would establish a special ad hoc Disability Advisory Council to study and make recommendations on the medical and vocational aspects of disability under titles II and XVI of the Social Security Act. The Council would focus on the evaluation of eligibility for disability and on the effectiveness of vocational rehabilitation programs for Social Security and SSI beneficiaries.

The provisions of the bill are nearly identical to the provisions for the Disability Advisory Council contained in H.R. 2005, the Social Security Minor and Technical Changes Act of 1985. My bill, however, includes a change to ensure that the membership of the Council will include those organizations and individuals representing the interests of the mentally and physically disabled.

The addition arises out of my deep concern for the welfare of people who suffer a mental disability and who are also dependent on Social Security benefits. I believe that the work of the Council could help in the creation of more fair and effective procedures and programs to serve the mentally ill and other disabled populations.

Mr. President, the Social Security Act requires the appointment of an Advisory Council on Social Security every 4 years, at the beginning of each Presidential term, with the mandate to report on the program by January 1 of the second year after appointment. The Council is to be appointed this year, and its report will be due by January 1, 1987. Since 1976, there have been four general advisory panels on Social Security and Medicare. The work of the last Council culminated in the 1983 Social Security amendments.

The House Committee on Ways and Means, and the administration, agree that the primary need now is for a thorough review of the disability program. The House bill therefore, includes provision for a special ad hoc Disability Advisory Council instead of the general quadrennial council required by law. The bill that I am introducing today simply authorizes the creation of that Council.

Unlike H.R. 2005, my bill does not make any other minor or technical changes to the Social Security Act. H.R. 2005 is worthy of support for all its other provisions. My goal with the new bill is simply to ensure the prompt creation of the important panel already required by law.

Mr. President, it pleases me to say that the measure I am introducing has the support of the Mental Health Association. I encourage my colleagues to join in supporting it, given the importance we all place on ensuring the welfare of disabled Americans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) Appointment of Council.—Within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall appoint a special Disability Advisory Council.

(b) MEMBERSHIP OF COUNCIL.—The Disability Advisory Council shall consist of a Chairman and not more than 12 other individuals, appointed by the Secretary without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service. The appointed members shall, to the extent possible, represent organizations of employers and employees in equal numbers, medical and vocational experts from the public or private sector (or from both such sectors), and organizations and individuals representing the interests of mentally and physically disabled people. The Council shall meet as often as may be necessary for the performance of its duties under this Act, but not less often than quarterly.

(c) DUTIES OF COUNCIL.—(1) The Disability Advisory Council shall conduct studies and make recommendations with respect to the medical and vocational aspects of disability under both title II and title XVI of the Social Security Act, including studies and recommendations relating to—

(A) the effectiveness of vocational rehabilitation programs for recipients of disability insurance benefits or supplemental security income benefits;

(B) the question of using specialists for completing medical and vocational evaluations at the State agency level in the disability determination process, including the question of requiring, in cases involving impairments other than mental impairments, that the medical portion of each case review (as well as any applicable assessment of residual functional capacity) be completed by an appropriate medical specialist employed by the appropriate State agency before any determination can be made with respect to the impairment involved;

(C) alternative approaches to work evaluation in the case of applicants for benefits based on disability and recipients of such benefits undergoing reviews of their cases, including immediate referral of any such applicant or recipient to a vocational rehabilitation agency for services at the same time he or she is referred to the appropriate State agency for a disability determination;

(D) the feasibility and appropriateness of providing work evaluation stipends for applicants for and recipients of benefits based on disability in cases where extended work evaluation is needed prior to the final determination of their eligibility for such benefits or for further rehabilitation and related services;

(E) the standards, policies, and procedures which are applied or used by the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to work evaluations in order to determine whether such standards, policies, and procedures will provide appropriate screening criteria for work evaluation referrals in the case of applicants for and recipients of benefits based on disability; and

(F) possible criteria for assessing the probability that an applicant for or recipient of benefits based on disability will benefit from rehabilitation services, taking into consideration not only whether the individual involved will be able after rehabilitation to engage in substantial gainful activity, but also whether rehabilitation services can reasonably be expected to improve the individual's functioning so that he or she will be able to live independently or work in a sheltered environment.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, "work evaluation" includes (with respect to any individual) a determination of—

(A) such individual's skills,

(B) the work activities or types of work activity for which such individual's skills are insufficient or inadequate,

(C) the work activities or types of work activity for which such individual might potentially be trained or rehabilitated,

(D) the length of time for which such individual is capable of sustaining work (including, in the case of the mentally impaired, the ability to cope with the stress of competitive work), and

(E) any modifications which may be necessary, in work activities for which such individual might be trained or rehabilitated, in order to enable him or her to perform such activities.

(d) PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO COUNCIL; COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS.—(1) The Disability Advisory Council is authorized to engage such technical assistance, including actuarial services, as may be required to carry out its functions, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in addition, make available to the Council such secretarial, clerical, and other assistance and such actuarial and other pertinent data prepared by the Department of Health and Human Services as the Council may require to carry out such functions.

(2) Appointed members of the Council, while serving on business of the Council (inclusive of traveltime), shall receive compensation at rates fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding $100 per day, and, while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business, they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government employed intermittently.

(e) REPORTS.—The Disability Advisory Council shall submit a report (including any interim reports the Council may have issued) of its findings and recommendations to the Secretary of Health and Human Services not later than December 31, 1986; and such report and recommendations shall thereupon be transmitted to the Congress and to the Board of Trustees of the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund.

(f) TERMINATION.—After the date of the transmittal to the Congress of the report required by subsection (e), the Disability Advisory Council shall cease to exist.

(g) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 706 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(A) by inserting "except as provided in subsection (e)," immediately before "the Secretary shall appoint" in subsection (a); and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) No Advisory Council on Social Security shall be appointed under subsection (a) in 1985 (or in any subsequent year prior to 1989).".

(2) Section 12 of the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984 is repealed.

By Mr. STEVENS (for himself and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 1627. A bill to provide for the establishment of an experimental program relating to the acceptance of voluntary services from participants in an executive exchange program of the Government; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EXECUTIVE EXCHANGE PROGRAM VOLUNTARY SERVICES ACT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I am introducing, together with Senator LAUTENBERG, the Executive Exchange Program Voluntary Service Act of 1985. This legislation would provide for the establishment of an experimental program relating to the acceptance of voluntary services from participants in the President's Commission on Executive Exchange. It closely resembles S. 2115, as amended by the Subcommittee on Civil Service, Post Office, and General Services during the 98th Congress.

The President's Commission on Executive Exchange was originally established as the President's Commission on Personnel Interchange by President Johnson on January 19, 1969, Executive Order 11451. President Carter renewed executive branch commitment to the exchange concept, renamed the program and made minor modifications in its charge on May 15, 1979, Executive Order 12136. Further improvements were made by President Reagan on December 5, 1984, Executive Order 12493.

The essential purpose of the program is to promote a better relationship between Government and business by placing outstanding executives in challenging and responsible 1-year assignments in order to foster understanding between the two sectors. Five Presidents have supported this goal.

Under current procedures, private sector executives participating in the Executive Exchange Program are paid by their host Federal agencies. Their salaries, while serving as exchange executives, are limited to the maximum salary set for senior executive service level IV employees—currently $72,300 per year.

This limitation on income has become a serious impediment to recruiting private sector executives for service in the Executive Exchange Program. Individuals having the appropriate mix of interest, experience and career potential are generally earning above the maximum Federal salary permissible while serving as exchange executives. Consequently, participation in the program would require a significant economic sacrifice for these executives. In addition to salary limitations, potential exchange executives must consider familial problems, that is, a short-term move to Washington and relocation to ensuing company assignment, and/or out-of-pocket expenses, that is, travel to visit nonrelocated family. These factors further encumber recruiting efforts.

This legislation proposes an experimental program in which a small group of private sector exchange participants, up to 10 per year for 3 years, would be allowed to serve as Federal employees without Government compensation. As volunteers, they would continue to receive compensation from their sponsoring organizations at their usual salary levels. These volunteer participants, however, would specifically be considered Federal employees for all purposes other than pay and related benefits. Conflict of interest statutes, for example, would remain fully in force, as they are currently for all private sector participants.

At the end of the pilot program, the Commission would report to the Congress on the effectiveness of the test in alleviating recruitment problems, as well as its findings on the program's administration, and its recommendations. Congress would then be in a better position to evaluate the workability of the volunteer concept and decide whether to permanently authorize its use, modify it, or end it altogether.

This legislation would enhance an already beneficial program in several ways. First, up to $2 million in estimated savings would result. If 10 Federal agencies per year no longer had to pay their executive participants roughly $70,000 each, budget outlays would be reduced by approximately $700,000 per year for 3 years.

Second, recruiting efforts for the Executive Exchange Program would be significantly enhanced. Success of the program depends, in large measure, on the ability to attract exceptionally talented executives with well-established records of achievement. As noted above, private sector executives meeting this standard are often earning well in excess of what the Exchange Program can offer.

Clearly, if sponsoring organizations were able to continue the usual compensation for their executives participating in the Exchange Program, an important dimension would be added to the Commission's recruiting efforts. This, in turn, would significantly enhance the Commission's ability to achieve its objectives.

Finally, and most importantly, Federal agencies would benefit as they would be enabled to utilize the expertise of the most outstanding executives the private sector has to offer. In short, the pool of available talent for the Government would be enlarged.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator STEVENS in sponsoring the Executive Exchange Program Voluntary Services Act of 1985. The Executive Exchange Program was created by President Johnson in 1969 to encourage improved understanding between the Government and private industry. Government executives were to be placed in the private sector for a year, and executives from the private sector would work in the Government at the same time. The experience of working in another environment with a different set of challenges and problems is intended to broaden the perspective with which Government and private leaders view each other's worlds.

For the year that they spend in the Government, the private executives are Federal employees, paid by the Federal Government and subject to the conflict of interest and ethical codes applicable to all Federal employees. Their pay is based on the compensation the executives would have earned with their companies, but it cannot exceed the ceiling set for pay in the Federal Senior Executive Service.

The pay ceiling in the existing Executive Exchange Program has caused a recruitment problem for the program. Private sector executive salaries frequently exceed the maximum that the Federal Government can pay. Many qualified private sector executives who would be interested in the program are deterred from participating by the prospect of having to accept a cut in pay for the year that they would be working for the Federal Government.

The bill that we are introducing today proposes a solution to the recruitment problem. This legislation sets up a 3-year experiment in which a maximum of 10 private sector executives would be part of the Executive Exchange Program, but paid their usual salaries by their sponsoring company. These executives would be serving as volunteers in the Federal agency to which they are assigned. However, in all respects, except pay and benefits, the executives in this experimental program would be considered Federal employees.

Mr. President, the Executive Exchange Program has been a success. Almost 500 private sector executives have participated since the program began. Significant cross fertilization of ideas, management techniques, and policy analysis has occurred. The program should be revised to permit it to continue. The legislation we are introducing today is intended to help the program overcome difficulties in recruiting. Because it offers an experimental approach to the exchange program, it will need to be closely monitored. To this end, the bill requires a report to Congress at the end of the experiment, and more frequent interim reports may be advisable. As noted, the exchange participants are subject to all the conflict of interest and financial disclosure provisions of the Ethics in Government Act.

Recently, the General Accounting Office made some recommendations to the Executive Exchange Program Administrators to improve conflict of interest controls. With this new experimental program of volunteer service, the need for careful monitoring of potential conflict of interest is more important than ever. With appropriate safeguards, the Executive Exchange Program should be able to go forward with this experiment in volunteer services and maintain the valuable interchange of private and public sector management expertise.

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. DODD, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 1628. A bill to amend part E of title IV of the Social Security Act to revise the provisions relating to Medicaid eligibility of special needs children placed for adoption; to the Committee on Finance.

ADOPTION ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing, for myself and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] legislation, S. 1628, the proposed Adoption Assistance Amendments of 1985, which would make several changes in the adoption assistance program established by the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980, Public Law 96-272. As I will discuss in a moment, two of the provisions in the legislation I am introducing have also been proposed by the Reagan administration.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

Mr. President, I was one of the principal Senate authors of Public Law 96-272, the landmark legislation enacted in the 96th Congress which dramatically reformed the federally funded child welfare and foster care system. That legislation was aimed at bringing about improvements in the child welfare services field by reducing unnecessary family separations, discouraging prolonged foster care placements, and encouraging adoptive placements as an alternative to long-term foster care, where appropriate.

I am particularly proud to have been deeply involved in the development of the adoption assistance provisions of Public Law 96-272 as well as having been the Senate author of the companion adoption legislation, the Adoption Reform Act, contained in title II of Public Law 95-266. Title II of Public Law 95-266 was the first Federal legislation enacted aimed at breaking down the barriers to the adoptive placement of thousands of children with special needs who had been languishing in foster care. I first introduced adoption reform legislation in the 93d Congress and was therefore very pleased to see these proposals finally enacted in 1978 and 1980 in Public Law 95-266 and Public Law 96-272. Together, these laws represent a national commitment to encourage finding permanent adoptive homes for children who had previously been regarded as unadoptable and often left to drift in what has been called the foster care limbo.

Mr. President, there is little doubt that Public Law 96-272 has had a very beneficial impact upon child welfare services through the country. That is evidenced by the report submitted last year by the Department of Health and Human Services. According to the HHS report, the number of children in foster care in this country has been cut in half. The average length of time a child remains in foster care has been reduced by a full year. The number of children leaving foster care for permanent adoptive homes as part of the new Adoption Assistance Program has steadily and dramatically increased. By fiscal year 1984, almost 12,000 children had been moved from foster care to adoptive placements under the Adoption Assistance Program.

Public Law 96-272 has worked and has made a tremendous difference in the lives of countless numbers of vulnerable children.

Mr. President, the success of Public Law 96-272 is demonstrated by the fact that even the Reagan administration, which in 1981 proposed to repeal this law, today supports its continuation.

CHANGES PROPOSED BY THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. President, as I have just indicated, the Reagan administration no longer proposes to repeal Public Law 96-272. Earlier this year, however, the administration submitted legislation to make certain changes in the statute. That legislation was introduced in the Senate as S. 1266 on June 10 by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] who serves as the chairman of the Public Assistance Subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee. Although I was delighted that the administration's proposal contained certain provisions to strengthen the adoption assistance program and contemplated continuation of the basic thrust of Public Law 96-272, I have very grave concerns about the potential impact of certain aspects of the administration's proposals relating to the foster care maintenance provisions of Public Law 96-272. I set forth these concerns in a July 19 letter I sent to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], and the committee's ranking Democrat, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who was one of the Senate coauthors of the 1980 legislation. I will insert that letter into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, because I strongly support the adoption assistance provisions in the administration's legislation but at the same time strongly oppose certain of the foster care provisions of that legislation, I am today introducing legislation which contains these beneficial and noncontroversial adoption provisions so that they can be separated legislatively from the highly controversial foster care proposals. Congress should adopt the adoption assistance provisions in the administration's legislation without being delayed by consideration of the major and very controversial foster care provisions.

SUMMARY OF ADOPTIONS ASSISTANCE PROVISIONS

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would amend the adoption assistance provisions of Public Law 96-272 in the following ways relating to the availability of Medicaid coverage for special-needs children moved from foster care into adoptive homes under the Adoption Assistance Program.

ELIMINATION OF TOKEN PAYMENT REQUIREMENT

First, our bill would eliminate the necessity of making a token adoption assistance payment in order for a child to continue to receive Medicaid coverage in an adoptive placement. Under current law, eligibility for Medicaid for a special-needs adopted child is contingent upon that child also receiving an adoption assistance payment. The result is that where no cash assistance is rquired but medical assistance is critical, the adoptive parents have to be given at least a token assistance payment in order to qualify their adopted child for Medicaid coverage. This entails needless administrative costs and complications. In testimony before the Finance Committee, the American Public Welfare Association [APWA] pointed out that in a number of States a large percentage of the special-needs adoptions required medicaid assistance only and that is one of these States it was costing $70 in administrative costs to make $1 per month token adoption assistance payments to the parents in order to qualify for Medicaid assistance. The APWA also testified that it is sometimes difficult to explain to adoptive parents who neither want nor need the nominal payment that they must accept it in order to establish Medicaid eligibility for the child.

Mr. President, the bill which originally was passed by the Senate in 1979 required only that the children be eligible for adoption assistance payments in order to be covered by Medicaid; the requirement that a payment actually be made arose out of the House-passed legislation and was retained in the conference agreement. There is no reason why this unnecessary requirement should be continued. The administration agrees.

My position in opposing this linkage was first established when I introduced for the Carter administration its legislation, S. 966 in April 1979 in the 96th Congress. At that time, I pointed out in my floor statement that the linkage between actual receipt of an adoption assistance payment and Medicaid eligibility was a step backward from the legislation, S. 1928, which I had also introduced on behalf of the Carter administration in July 1977 and which the Senate had approved in the 95th Congress (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Vol. 125, Pt. 7, April 10, 1979, at 7970).

I subsequently introduced on August 3, 1979, an amendment to the administration's legislation, amendment No. 392 to S. 966, which, among other changes, removed the linkage between Medicaid eligibility and actual receipt of an adoption assistance payment (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Vol. 125, Pt. 17, August 3, 1979, 22679). The legislation that the Senate passed in October 1979 followed the language proposed in my amendment by setting forth Medicaid eligibility separate from adoption assistance payments, and the legislation being introduced today would thus reestablish the original Senate-approved separation of adoption assistance payments and Medicaid eligibility.

MEDICAID IN STATE OF RESIDENCE

Second, Mr. President, this legislation would require that the State in which a special-needs adopted child resides, rather than the State in which the adoption assistance agreement was entered into, provide Medicaid coverage. This provision would affect situation where a family which has adopted a special-needs child with Medicaid needs moves into another State. Under current law, the State in which the adoption was entered into is required to continue Medicaid coverage, but obtaining medical care with an out-of-State Medicaid card can impose substantial difficulties. When the 1980 legislation was developed, it was contemplated that the States would enter into interstate agreements which would resolve this problem. A model interstate compact to facilitate interstate moves by children adopted under the adoption assistance program has been developed by HHS. The initial work on that interstate compact was supported through an HHS grant to the APWA under the 1978 Adoption Reform Act. However, according to HHS, only nine States have actually adopted legislation that would enable them to enter into such a compact. Unfortunately, as the APWA indicated in its testimony before the Finance Committee in June, getting such a compact actually entered into by a large number of States is a cumbersome and time consuming process. In the meantime, an APWA survey last year showed that slightly more than 1,000 children in the adoption assistance program live outside the States in which the adoption originally occurred.

Mr. President, the problems that confront families which adopt special-needs children under adoption assistance agreements and then who move to a different State has been a long-standing concern of mine. When the Senate considered the conference report on the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, I expressed concern that we had not adequately addressed this situation in the legislation (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Vol. 126, Pt. 11, June 13, 1980, at 14768).

During the hearings I chaired on the need for the adoption legislation in the 95th and 96th Congresses, several of the witnesses described the problems that territorial limitations upon then-existing State adoption assistance programs posed for their families. In some cases, adoptive families were forced to turn down employment opportunities in other States because a change of residence would result in a loss of adoption assistance. I congratulate the Reagan administration for proposing this change which would eliminate another one of the barriers to adoption of special-needs children.

CONTINUATION OF MEDICAID COVERAGE

Third, and finally, Mr. President, the legislation being introduced today contains a provision relating to the adoption assistance program which was not included in the administration's proposal, but like the two provisions I have described, resolves a somewhat technical problem which some States have confronted in implementing the adoption assistance program. This change was proposed in legislation, S. 1329, introduced in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] who was also one of the principal Senate authors of Public Law 96-272 and has been a steadfast advocate and proponent of that legislation and in the House companion bill, H.R. 2810, introduced by my good friend and colleague form California, Representative PETE STARK who serves as a member of the House Ways and Means Committee and has long been interested in the adoption assistance and child welfare services program. It would provide for continuation of Medicaid coverage for special-needs children between the time they leave foster care and the time that an interlocutory or final decree of adoption is entered into. Under current law, Medicaid eligibility for a special-needs adoption is tied to issuance of either an interlocutory or final judicial adoption decree. However, in many States, there is a required period of time for a preadoptive placement, often 6 months, before such a decree can be issued. Current law does not provide for Medicaid coverage during this waiting period. To get over this gap in Medicaid coverage, apparently some States are resorting to licensing preadoptive homes as foster care homes and paying the family at the frequently more costly foster care rates. This certainly was neither contemplated nor intended by the 1980 legislation.

This problem in the existing law, Mr. President, also appears to have arisen as a result of our utilizing the House-passed language in the 1980 conference agreement. As I indicated earlier, the House bill, but not the Senate bill, linked Medicaid coverage to receipt of an adoption assistance payment which required in both bills that an interlocutory or final adoption decree be entered before such payment could be made. The original Senate-passed language provided a separate section for Medicaid coverage which required only that the special-needs child meet the eligibility requirements for an adoption assistance payment and have been either adopted or "placed for adoption" (see section 473(b) of the Senate-passed H.R. 3434, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Vol. 125, Pt. 23, at 29495, October 25, 1979). The language in the legislation we are introducing today thus parallels the terminology contained in the Senate-passed bill in 1979.

TITLE XX ISSUE

Mr. President, there is one final issue I want to take a few moments to discuss. As I indicated at the outset, two of the provisions contained in the legislation I am introducing today are derived from the administration's legislation which was introduced on June 10 by Senator ARMSTRONG. In the drafting of the administration's provisions relating to Medicaid eligibility for special-needs adopted children, the reference in existing law to such children being deemed AFDC children for the purposes of both title XIX and XX was changed to refer only to title XIX—that is, Medicaid. Prior to 1981, AFDC recipients had certain priorities for services under title XX and the cross-reference between children receiving adoption assistance payments and title XX gave those children the same priority for services that AFDC children received. In 1981, that priority requirement was repealed in Federal law.

However, concern has been raised that the cross-reference to title XX should not be deleted. First it is pointed out that some States may have established their own priorities for AFDC recipients. Second, it is contended that if at some future time the AFDC priority is restored in the Federal statute with respect to title XX, special-needs adopted children should receive the same priority for services that AFDC children receive.

Although the legislation we are introducing contains the administration's language, I am very sympathetic to these concerns and would be supportive of a modification of this provision if the committee determines that the administration language would or might result in any diminishment of services for these children.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, as one who has been working to promote adoption opportunities for more than a decade, I am delighted to see the growing and diverse congressional support in this area. The active and enthusiastic support which the Reagan administration is now providing in promoting adoption of children with special needs, both through the recent special needs adoption initiative being carried out by the Office of Human Development Services in HHS and through its support for the adoption assistance provisions of Public Law 96-272 as evidenced by its constructive proposals to improve implementation of the program, is also heartening and greatly welcomed. The futures of thousands and thousands of children with special needs waiting for adoptive homes depends on our ability and willingness to work together on their behalf.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill we are introducing be printed in the RECORD at this point preceding my July 19 letter to the Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the bill and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 19, 1985.

Hon. BOB PACKWOOD,
Chairman.
Hon. RUSSELL LONG,
Ranking Minority Member,
Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB AND RUSSELL: I am writing to share with you my very strong opposition to the Administration's proposal to alter substantially the funding mechanism for the foster-care program established under title IV-E of the Social Security Act by the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-272).

As you know, along with Senator Moynihan and you, Russell, I was a principal Senate author of the landmark 1980 legislation and have been deeply involved in issues relating to foster care and adoption for many years.

The Administration's proposed legislation, introduced on June 10 as S. 1266 by Senator Armstrong, contains two proposals to improve and enhance the adoption-assistance components added by P.L. 96-272. These proposals (in section 4) include eliminating the need to maintain a 'token' adoption-assistance payment in order to preserve a child's Medicaid eligible for Medicaid from the state where they reside, regardless of whether that is the state which was a party to the adoption-assistance agreement. I support both of these changes which should make the administration of and the provision of services in the adoption-assistance title IV-E program more effective.

However, I strongly oppose those provisions (sections 2, 3, and 5) of the Administration's proposal which would fundamentally alter the funding mechanism for foster care. These changes include (1) lowering the title IV-B funding level 'trigger' for imposition of the foster-care-payment ceiling from the current $266 million to $200 million, (2) eliminating the requirement that the triggering amount for title IV-B be included in an advance appropriation, (3) moving the base year for such a ceiling from 1978 to 1984, (4) reducing the adjustment factor for each state's allotment from the lesser of 10 percent or twice the Consumer Price Index (CPI) to the lesser of 5 percent or the CPI, (5) limiting foster-care appropriations for FY 1986 to $485 million, and (6) placing a one-year limit on submission of state claims, rather than the current two years allowed.

In 1980, I supported the enactment of the provisions in the current law which provide for placement of a ceiling on foster-care reimbursement when the funds appropriated for the child-welfare-services program authorized under title IV-B reached a certain level—currently $266 million. Those provisions were adopted after painstaking negotiations to achieve a formula which would encourage states to reduce unnecessary foster-care placements without hampering their ability to provide abused and neglected children with the foster-care protection that can be essential to their safety and well-being.

The 1980 law works.

That is evidenced by the report submitted last year by the Department of Health and Human Services. According to this report, the number of children in foster care in this country has been cut in half. The number of children leaving foster care for permanent adoptive homes has been steadily and dramatically increasing. The average length of time a child remains in foster care has been reduced by a full year.

We must not jeopardize the progress and success that has been achieved as a result of the 1980 law by cutting back funding for this program and altering the balance that was achieved in P.L. 96-272. The success of the 1980 law lies in great part in our recognition at that time that adequate federal funding was necessary to support provision of the services which would enable the states to do a better job of preventing unnecessary foster care.

I have worked for over a decade to achieve reforms in the federal child-welfare services system, to discourage unnecessary, prolonged foster-care placements, and to encourage adoptive placements as an alternative, where appropriate. However, I have been convinced from the start, and still am, that adequate support for necessary foster-care placements is an integral and vital component of any child-welfare services system.

Last month, I visited the overcrowded emergency shelter facility for abused and neglected children operated by Los Angeles County. I saw infants who were being housed in this institutional setting because the foster-care rates being paid were inadequate to find foster-family homes. I heard child protective services workers and law enforcement personnel describe the increasing number of cases of severely physically and sexually abused children coming to the attention of child-welfare authorities as a result of new child abuse reporting laws and procedures adopted by my state. These experts also uniformly indicated that the children in foster care today present more difficult and complex problems than ever before. It appears that many of the "easier" cases, quite appropriately, have been removed from the foster-care system as a result of the reforms implemented in the past several years.

Although we can justifiably rejoice in these results—which were intended by P.L. 96-272—we must not forget that for many children foster care is a necessary protective service. Cutting back on title IV-E foster-care assistance could well lead to such children being inappropriately or prematurely removed from foster care and returned to an unsafe environment.

I am also not at all persuaded that the Administration's other proposal contained in S. 1266, which would provide a $3,000 payment to those states whose foster-care placements have been reduced by at least three percent below the prior year for each child removed from foster care who has been in that care for more than 24 months, represents responsible child-welfare policy. Creating this kind of fiscal incentive could well encourage inappropriate placements being made. The P.L. 96-272 amendments placed great emphasis on the development of an individualized case plan to help reduce unnecessary or prolonged foster-care placements. That individualized approach is working; we ought not risk undermining our success by adopting a well-intended, but untested and highly questionable, arbitrary fiscal incentive approach which does not take into account the individual needs of the vulnerable children involved.

I believe the evidence is clear that the mechanisms and policies contained in the P.L. 96-272 amendments work. Although the two proposals in S. 1266 relating to improving the adoption-assistance components would be beneficial, any substantial changes in the other provisions enacted in P.L. 96-272 could very well undermine success under the existing law.

I strongly urge that you reject these latter changes.

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am joining with Senator CRANSTON in introducing legislation designed to eliminate a particular barrier to the adoption of children with special needs. Currently, there are problems with providing Medicaid payments for many of these children, tending to prevent their adoption across State lines. These are not new problems, but there is no better time than now to correct them.

Our society has no difficulty finding qualified homes for healthy new-born infants. There are many parents waiting for each available baby. However, the situation is entirely different for special-needs children. These are children with physical or mental handicaps, children who are school age, minority children, and children in sibling groups. It is estimated that there are 50,000 children legally free for adoption lingering in foster care because of various public and private obstacles preventing their placement into permanent homes.

This summer, I chaired 2 days of hearings addressing the multiple barriers to adoption of these special-needs children. Both problems and solutions were explored. The Committee on Labor and Human Resources received testimony from witnesses wanting to adopt special-needs children as well as from representatives of public and private agencies responsible for the placement of these children. One Federal barrier cited by many witnesses can and must be addressed by Congress—that is the issue we are addressing today in this legislation.

This bill specifically addresses benefits provided to certain children pursuant to part E of title IV of the Social Security Act. Under current law, if a Medicaid-eligible child in foster care is adopted by parents residing in a different State or if the adopting family moves to another State after the adoption process is finalized, it is extremely difficult to retain Medicaid coverage because of disputes over which State is responsible. Because many special-needs children require extensive, ongoing medical treatment, the costs associated with their care are sometimes prohibitive. Therefore, uninterrupted, continued Medicaid coverage is critical, and, indeed, Congress has overwhelmingly endorsed this continued coverage. However, questions as to which State should continue payment of Medicaid have caused continued problems and heartaches for the families and children who want to be united through the means of adoption.

This legislation would correct the problem by specifying that children eligible for Medicaid within one State retain equal eligibility and coverage within the new resident State, regardless of whether that State was a party to the adoption process. Furthermore, the legislation would amend current law to allow Medicaid coverage to continue through the finalization of an adoption. Under current law, a gap in coverage occurs between the initiation and finalization of the adoption process.

A similar provision is contained in legislation currently before the Senate Finance Committee as part of a comprehensive policy change on the entire Foster Care Program. However, this adoption initiative is worthy of individual attention. It should be very noncontroversial and must be enacted as soon as possible. That is why I am joining others in introducing this bill and in strongly encouraging my colleagues to expedite its enactment.

This legislation is only one element in removing the many barriers to the adoption of children with special needs. But it is an important step. I urge my colleagues to join with me in this effort to improve the child welfare system of our country. We must accept the challenge to do everything possible to break down the barriers which thwart the placement of our Nation's "special needs" children.

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 1629. A bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to treat certain agricultural products as like products for purposes of antidumping and countervailing duty investigations; to the Committee on Finance.

APPLICATION OF ANTIDUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY STATUTES TO AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to clarify the intent of Congress with regard to the application of the antidumping and countervailing duty statutes to agriculture products.

Specifically, this legislation would require the International Trade Commission, in cases determining whether or not imports are causing material injury to our domestic industry, to treat producers of raw initially processed agriculture products as members of the same industry, provided that the latter is produced in a "single continuous line of production" from the raw product.

My legislation covers all agriculture commodities, including livestock and other animals. It covers those instances where the raw product would have completely or substantially been devoted to the production of the processed product, and likewise, the processed product would have to be produced completely or substantially from the raw product. Producers of raw and initially processed products who otherwise manifested a high degree of economic interdependence would also be deemed to be members of the same industry.

The need for this legislation became apparent when on July 25, 1985, the U.S. International Trade Commission ruled, in its countervailing duty determination involving live swine and fresh, chilled and frozen pork from Canada, that hog producers and pork packers were not producers of a like product, and therefore not members of the same industry. The ITC drew this conclusion even though it agreed that fresh, chilled and frozen pork is produced from live swine through a single continuous line of production.

It should be noted that Congress, during its consideration of the 1979 Trade Agreements Act, emphasized the "special nature of agriculture" relative to the countervailing duty and the antidumping statutes. This legislative history can be found in Senate Report 96-209, 96th Congress, 1st session 88 (1979).

Based on this legislative history, the ITC has found producers of raw and processed commodities to be part of the same industry where there exists a single continuous line of production or other evidence of economic interdependence.

In sharp contrast, however, the Commission diverted from this line of reasoning and held that hog producers and pork packers were not producing a like product because there was not sufficient legal integration between producers and packers regardless of the economic interdependence.

What the Commission was apparently looking for was a legal connection among the industry such as instances of packing facilities being owned by producers or contractual relationships between hogs and pork prices.

Regardless of the reasoning for this major shift, the flaws of the outcome are obvious in light of the purpose of these laws. The ITC's mission was to determine if the U.S. pork industry is being materially injured by Canadian imports. The Commission found that material injury was created by the import of live Canadian hogs, but not by Canadian pork products. This logic is hard to understand since our producers must compete for the same consumer market, regardless whether that competition comes from live hogs or slaughtered hogs.

Hogs are transformed to fresh, chilled and frozen pork by a process (slaughter) which fully embodies the concept of the single continuous line of production as much or more than all other industries previously examined by the ITC.

Pork can only be produced from hogs. Hogs are completely devoted to the production of pork. And you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. Moreover, the value of hogs represents approximately 90 percent of the value of fresh, chilled and frozen pork produced by pork packers. In short, it is hard to imagine an agriculture product whose producers are more closely aligned.

The Commission's decision is devasting not only to our pork producers, but also to other producers of agricultural products which come to the ITC for assistance in the future.

It is obvious how our pork producers will be affected. Since the ITC found injury resulting from only live imports and therefore imposed a duty of $3.21 per hundredweight on Canadian live imports, Canadian can easily circumvent the effects by simply slaughtering the hogs in Canada and ship the product to the United States in the form of fresh, chilled and frozen pork. The severe damage to our domestic producers will continue.

This injury has been substantial. The estimated impact of Canadian hog and pork imports on U.S. pork producers range from $1.19 to $2.97 per hundredweight in 1982; $1.12 to $2.80 per hundredweight in 1983; $1.86 to $4.67 per hundredweight in 1984; and $2.14 to $4.88 per hundredweight in 1985.

In short, since 1982 our pork producers have lost between $1 billion to over $2.5 billion because of unfairly subsidized Canadian pork imports. Now, after more than a year of investigation and hearings, the ITC has annouced a decision that recognizes this damage and agrees that countervailing duties are in order, but offers a ruling that undermines any hopes of resolving our problem.

Other agriculture producers may be affected in the same manner in the future if my legislation is not passed. In fact, some producers may even lack standing to bring a trade case in the first place if this ruling stands.

Under existing trade laws and treaties, we have a legal right to defend ourselves against unfair foreign trade subsidies. We cannot, however, afford to allow the ITC to misinterpret those laws and undermine those rights.

My legislation restores the rights of our producers to defenses against unfair trade practices. It will confirm the intent of Congress, as manifested in the 1979 legislative history, that raw and initially processed agricultural products whose producers are economically interdependent are to be considered producers of a like product for the purposes of the trade laws. The bill does not expand current law beyond what was originally intended by Congress, nor does it represent an attempt to cover processed products which are not fully interdependent with the raw product in question.

I urge my colleagues in joining as cosponsors of my bill, and hope that the Senate Finance Committee can soon hold hearings and act favorably on this important legislation.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. SASSER, Mr. LAXALT, and Mr. STENNIS):

S.J. Res. 194. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning October 1, 1985, as "National Buy American Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL BUY AMERICAN WEEK

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am today introducing a joint resolution to designate the first week of October 1985 as "National Buy American Week." Senators SASSER, LAXALT, and STENNIS join me in cosponsoring this joint resolution.

Our country today faces an unprecedented foreign challenge. That challenge doesn't come from foreign planes or troops or missiles.

No, Mr. President, we are under assault today by billions of dollars worth of imported products that have in recent years literally flooded the American market. And tragically, that all-out assault has disrupted industries, taken away millions of jobs, and caused pain and suffering for people in every part of the country.

As recently as 15 years ago, made-in-America products dominated U.S. and world markets.

In 1970, only 11 percent of the goods purchased by Americans bore foreign lables. Today, the percentage of imports purchased here has tripled.

In 1970, we had a trade surplus of $2.6 billion. Today, we are quickly approaching an unheard of trade deficit of $150 billion.

The flood of foreign imports—and our inability to sell sufficient goods overseas—threatens the very structure of our economy. This year alone, the mammoth trade deficit will reduce our gross national product by 2 percentage points and will result in the loss of as many as 3.75 million jobs.

Make no mistake, Mr. President, this disastrous trade imbalance is not the result of a decline in the quality of American goods or a lack of faith in the skills of American workers. Rather, it is tied directly to massive budget deficits, high interest rates, an overvalued dollar and the continued unfair trade practices of foreign governments.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that we can turn this situation around by the simple expedient of proclaiming a "Buy American Week."

I wish we could.

But one thing that this proclamation can accomplish is to remind the consumers of this country that every American has an interest in helping to create the prosperity that comes from a healthy and productive economy. And perhaps, Mr. President, this reminder will help Americans realize that the time has come to think of "we" instead of "me."

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. J. RES. 194

Whereas the Nation accumulated record merchandise trade deficits in 1982, 1983, and 1984, and a record deficit is predicted for 1985;

Whereas it is predicted that by the end of 1985 the United States will have become a debtor nation for the 1st time since the onset of World War I;

Whereas in many cases the prices of imported goods are artificially low because of illegal subsidies by foreign governments; and

Whereas record merchandise trade deficits cause loss of jobs, loss of productivity, loss of tax revenues, and a decline in the American standard of living: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning October 1, 1985, hereby is designated "National Buy American Week", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

By Mr. KASTEN:

S.J. Res. 195. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 20, 1985, through October 26, 1985, as "National Temporary Services Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL TEMPORARY SERVICES WEEK

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today, in recognition of the American temporary services industry. This relatively young industry is quickly growing into a significant business force, contributing 500,000 jobs and bringing 5 million people into the U.S. economy each year. It is therefore with honor that I introduce a joint resolution to designate the week of October 20 to 26, 1985, as "National Temporary Services Week."

The temporary help industry contributes to a strong economy as a labor intermediary and as a private sector employer. As an intermediary, it brings together workers and employers for temporary work assignments that benefit both. As a business, its companies employ temporary workers and create employment for those who might not otherwise be a part of the work force.

Over the past 10 years, the temporary services industry has distinguished itself as one of the nation's fastest growing sectors. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the industry ranked third last year in terms of job growth and people entering the work force.

Recently, USA Today conducted an industry stock analysis which cited the temporary service sector's strong performance record and projected even greater future growth in these stocks.

How do these impressive statistics relate to the Nation's work force and the U.S. economy?

First, they generate a significant portion of the Nation's annual payroll. In 1984, the temporary services industry paid out over $5.5 billion in salaries.

Second, they contribute to a healthy business climate which will ensure continued growth in both earnings and employment.

Finally, they add up to greater tax revenue to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, the temporary services industry has built an impressive record. I believe that we should now take the time to recognize the contributions the industry has made to our Nation and to encourage its continued success.

I am particularly proud to sponsor this joint resolution because of the contributions the largest temporary service company, Manpower, Inc., has made to the State of Wisconsin. That organization alone employs over 200,000 people throughout the State.

No doubt there are temporary service companies and employees making great contributions in every State throughout the Nation. I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing those companies and their employees by lending their support to National Temporary Services.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 195

Whereas the temporary services industry is the second fastest growing business sector in terms of job creation in the United States;

Whereas the temporary services industry employed over five million people at various times in 1984;

Whereas the temporary services industry payroll has increased between 1970 and 1984 from $547,000,000 to $6,000,000,000;

Whereas one out of every two hundred nonagricultural jobs in the United States was provided through temporary services in 1984; and

Whereas the temporary services industry provides flexibility for employers to meet short-term labor needs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 20, 1985, through October 26, 1985, is designated as "National Temporary Services Week" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate conferences, programs, ceremonies, and activities.

By Mrs. HAWKINS:

S.J. Res. 196. Joint resolution designating September 22, 1986, as "American Business Women's Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMERICAN BUSINESS WOMEN'S DAY

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which requests the President to designate September 22, 1986, as "American Business Women's Day."

This day would not only afford American businesswomen the honor and recognition they deserve as vital participants in the business conmmunity, but would also be an encouragement to future young businesswomen anxious to seize new opportunities and meet the challenges of the business world.

This legislation has the full endorsement of the American Business Women's Association [ABWA] which is a national educational association dedicated to promoting professional and educational advancement of women. Deeply committed to the belief that education remains the key to aiding eager young women who are embarking on business careers, this association has developed a two-part educational program which consists of both a local and national scholarship program. Last year alone, the ABWA awarded nearly $2 million to 5,700 women. Since 1949, they have awarded more than $18 million in scholarships.

A primary strength of this association lies in the fact that these scholarship funds are awarded not only to women entering colleges, universities, or vocational training programs, but also to women who need to refresh job skills before reentering the work force and women who need certain courses in order to qualify for promotion and career advancement. Clearly, this is an organization that deserves not only recognition for their very worthy programs but also our gratitude for their hard work on behalf of American businesswomen. I hope that my colleagues will join me in this effort and in celebrating September 22, 1986, as American Business Women's Day.●

"(4) ASSOCIATION'S VIOLATION DOES NOT NECESSARILY DISQUALIFY MEMBERS.—If an association representing agricultural employers as an agent, joint employer, or employer is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (c)(2) results in the suspension of certification with respect to the association, the suspension shall apply only to the association and does not apply to any individual member of the association unless the Attorney General determines that the member participated in, or had knowledge of and derived benefit from, the violation.

"(e) EXPEDITED ADMINISTRATIVE APPEAL OF SUSPENSION OF CERTIFICATION UNDER SUBSECTION (c)(2)—

"(1) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.—The Attorney General shall provide for an expedited procedure for the review of a suspension of certification under subsection (c)(2) or, at the applicant's request, for a de novo administrative hearing respecting the suspension. In such a case, the court shall determine the matter de novo and the burden is on the Attorney General to sustain his suspension.

"(2) PRECEDENCE OF CASES.—Except as to cases the court considers of greater importance, proceedings before the district court, as authorized by this and appeals therefrom, take precedence on the docket over all cases and shall be assigned for hearing and trial or for argument at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way.

"(D) consult with Secretary of Agriculture, and

"(E) consider the recommendation of the Commission on Agricultural Worker Programs on a numerical limit as provided under section 124(c)(5).

"(5) CHANGES IN NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS IN EXTRAORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCES.—

"(A) INADEQUATE MONTHLY AND REGIONAL LIMITATIONS.—If—

"(i) a numerical limitation has been established under paragraphs (2) or (4) for a region for a month, and

"(ii) a petitioner described in section 217(b)(1) establishes that extraordinary and unusual circumstances have resulted in a significant change in the petitioner's need for seasonal agricultural workers specified in the petition or in the availability of domestic workers who are able, willing, and qualified to perform seasonal agricultural employment, the petitioner may apply to the Attorney General (in such form and manner as the Attorney General shall provide) for an increase in the numerical limitations otherwise established under paragraphs (2) and (4) to accommodate the circumstances.

"(B) DETERMINATION.—The Attorney General shall make a determination on such an application within 72 hours of the date the application is completed. To the extent the application is approved, the Attorney General shall provide for an appropriate increase in the appropriate monthly and regional numerical limitation. The Attorney General may expand the number of workers admitted into the region for which the application is approved by transferring seasonal agricultural workers from another region with a lesser need or by admitting additional workers from foreign countries. In the event the limit on the admission of seasonal agricultural workers for all regions in the United States established under paragraph (4) has been reached at the time the application alleging extraordinary and unusual circumstances is filed, the Attorney General shall follow the procedures in subparagraph (C).

"(C) INCREASE IN THE NUMERICAL LIMITATION ESTABLISHED BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—If—

"(i) a numerical limitation on the admission of seasonal agricultural workers into all employment regions has been established by the Attorney General under paragraph (4) and

"(ii) a petitioner described in section 217(b)(1) establishes under the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) that extraordinary and unusual circumstances require an increase in the numerical limitation, the Attorney General may provide for an increase in the appropriate numerical limitation in an amount not to exceed 20 percent of the total number authorized for admission into all regions. Any such increase authorized by the Attorney General shall terminate upon the end of circumstances requiring it and shall not result in a permanent expansion of the numerical limit established by the Attorney General under paragraph (4).

"(j) ENTRY OF SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—

"(1) ANNUAL TIME LIMITATION.—An alien may not be admitted to the United States as a seasonal agricultural worker under section 101(a)(15)(O) for a period of more than nine months in any calendar year. An alien admitted under section 101(a)(15)(O) during any calendar year will not be eligible for readmission into the United States until he has returned to his country of origin for a period of 3 months.

"(2) VIOLATORS DISQUALIFIED FOR 5 YEARS.—An alien may not be admitted to the United States as a seasonal agricultural worker if the alien was admitted to the United States as such a worker within the previous five-year period and the alien during that period violated a term or condition of such previous admission.

"(k) WAGES AND WORKING CONDITIONS.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretaries of Agriculture and Labor, shall establish through regulation appropriate wages and working conditions as will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of United States workers similarly employed in the area of intended employment.

"(l) ALLOCATION AND USE OF VISAS UNDER THE PROGRAM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Nonimmigrant visas for seasonal agricultural workers, within the numerical limitations established under subsection (i)(2), shall be made available as follows:

"(A) PREVIOUS WORKERS.—Visas shall first be made available to qualified nonimmigrants who have previously been admitted as seasonal agricultural workers and who have fully complied with the terms and conditions of any such previous admission, providing priority in consideration among such aliens in the order of the length of time in which they were so employed.

"(B) OTHERS.—Any remaining visas shall be made available to other qualified nonimmigrants.

"(C) TREATMENT OF SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—A spouse or child of a seasonal agricultural worker is not entitled to a nonimmigrant visa as such a worker by virtue of such relationship, whether or not accompanying or following to join the nonimmigrant, but may be provided a nonimmigrant visa as such a worker if the spouse or child is qualified as such a worker.

"(D) NO INDIVIDUAL EMPLOYER VISA PETITION REQUIRED.—An alien admitted pursuant to section 101(a)(15)(O) shall not be required to obtain any petition from any prospective employer within the United States in order to obtain a nonimmigrant visa under the program.

"(E) NO LIMITATION TO PARTICULAR EMPLOYER OR CROP.—A nonimmigrant visa issued under the program shall not limit the geographical area (other than by agricultural employment region) within which a seasonal agricultural worker may be employed or limit the type of seasonal agricultural employment services, in perishable commodities, the worker may perform.

"(F) DISQUALIFICATION FROM FEDERAL ASSISTANCE.—A seasonal agricultural worker under the program is not eligible for any program of financial assistance under Federal law (whether through grant, loan, guarantee, or otherwise) on the basis of financial need, as such programs are identified by the Attorney General in consultation with other appropriate heads of the various departments and agencies of Government.

"(G) ALLOCATION OF VISAS TO CARIBBEAN BASIN COUNTRIES.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretaries of State and Agriculture, shall establish through regulations the allocation of visas to workers in specific countries under this section. A percentage of the visas issued shall be allocated to qualified workers in countries located in the Caribbean Basin.

"(m) TRUST FUND FOR PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Attorney General shall establish by regulation a trust fund the purpose of which is to provide funds for the administration of the program and to provide a monetary incentive for seasonal agricultural workers in the program to return to their country of origin upon expiration of their visas under the program. The Attorney General shall promulgate such other regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

"(2) PAYMENTS INTO TRUST FUND.—In the case of employment of a seasonal agricultural worker under the program—

"(A) EMPLOYER PAYMENT.—The employer shall provide for payment into the trust fund established under this subsection of an amount equivalent to 11 percent of the wages of the worker.

"(B) WORKER PAYMENT.—There shall be deducted from the wages of the nonimmigrant and paid into such trust fund an amount equivalent to 20 percent of the wages of the worker.

"(C) WAGES DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'wages' has the meaning given such term in section 3121(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, except that for these purposes paragraph (1) of that section shall not apply.

"(3) USE OF AMOUNTS IN TRUST FUND.—

"(A) EMPLOYER PAYMENTS AND INTEREST.—Except as provided in paragraph (B), amounts paid into the trust fund, and interest thereon, shall be used for the purpose of administering the program.

"(B) WORKER PAYMENTS.—Amounts described in paragraph (B) paid into the trust fund with respect to a worker and interest thereon shall be paid to the worker if—

"(i) the worker applies for payment within 30 days of the last day of employment under the program (as verified by the Attorney General) at the United States consulate nearest the worker's residence in the country of origin, and

"(ii) the worker complies with the terms and conditions of the program, including the obligation to be continuously employed (or actively seeking employment) in seasonal agricultural employment in perishable commodities.

"(4) EXPANSION OF CONSULATES.—The Secretary of State is authorized to take such steps as may be necessary in order to expand and establish consulates in foreign countries in which aliens are likely to apply for nonimmigrant status under the program.".

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 404 (8 U.S.C. 1101), as amended by sections 101(b) and 102(b) of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(A) of recruiting domestic workers for temporary services which might otherwise be performed by seasonal agricultural workers described in section 217, and

"(B) of monitoring terms and conditions under which such temporary and seasonal agricultural workers (and domestic workers employed by the same employers) are employed in the United States.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1986, such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the Secretary's duties and responsibilities under section 217.".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) of this section apply to petitions and applications filed under section 217 of the Immigration and Nationality Act on or after the first day of the twelfth month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act (hereafter in this section referred to as the "effective date").

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, final regulations to implement such sections shall first be issued, on an interim or other basis, not later than the effective date.

(9) DEPORTATION OF SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS FOR FAILURE TO BE EMPLOYED OR SEEK EMPLOYMENT.—Section 241(a) (8 U.S.C. 1251(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (19) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or "; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(20) entered the United States as nonimmigrants under section 101(a)(15)(O) and failed to be continuously employed or actively seeking employment in seasonal agricultural employment in perishable commodities (as defined in section 217(h)(1) in accordance with the usual and customary employment patterns and practices.".

(h) SENSE OF CONGRESS RESPECTING ADVISORY COMMISSION.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should establish an advisory commission which shall consult with the Government of Mexico and the governments of other appropriate countries and advise the Attorney General regarding the operation of the seasonal agricultural worker program established under section 217 of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

PROTECTIONIST LEGISLATION

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, many Members of Congress say many things when they were home during the recess. Some of these matters were clearly understood. Others might be a little bit misinterpreted. I spent my recess in my home State and in several other States, visiting military establishments, and wherever I went, the issues were the deficit and balancing the budget or approaching it. There was no great interest in South Africa. There was no expressed great interest in excluding foreign trade. In fact, there was more interest in the economy—the way it has been more or less burgeoning and the reasons for it—which are very clearly a return on the part of young people to those habits and practices that made America the great economic power it once was.

Now, we return and the Congress is once again in session. And what do we find? Some 300 different bills that may be introduced to protect American industry and American business. We find a continuing interest on the part of some to weaken the defense of this country. Why can we not get down to work and do what the American people think we should be doing? Isn't is about time that we in the Congress recognize the fact that America is no longer the dominant economic world power? Isn't it important that we recognize that our chances of becoming that again are on the remote side? Isn't it time we become honest with ourselves and our constituents and admit that this country lost its economic power because of a decline in our management ability, a decline in our willingness to risk our money, and most of all because of a decline in the productivity of our workers, brought on by the excessive power of unions?

Look at any country in this world that is becoming successful in an economic way and you find their percentage of productivity far, far ahead of the United States. Is cutting off trade with some country going to correct that? No. Other countries will take those countries' place. This country can get along in this world of competition exceedingly well, if not perfectly well, if we quit looking to the Federal Government to solve all our problems; if we listen to the young entrepreneurs of our country who are saying to the Federal Government, "Get off my back. I can make money the old fashioned way, I earn it."

America has changed. The world has changed. Everything is changing and that is not going to stop. Before the U.S. economy winds up at the bottom of the pile, I plead with my colleagues, I plead with those special interest groups around this country, let this great free economy roll. Get off its back. Let it make money. And, let's get this Government in the shape it should be in and not the dangerous terrible shape we find it in today.

In the Wall Street Journal of Tuesday, September 10, appeared a very excellent editorial entitled "The Thundering Herd," and that title should give you an idea of who they are referring to—us.

I ask that this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Tuesday, Sept. 10, 1985]

THE THUNDERING HERD

It was only necessary for Congress to return to Washington to remind us what a peaceful month August had been. And what a prosperous month. The American economy added something over 300,000 jobs as American industry restaged itself for a strong autumn selling season. Even with summer not yet over, Americans streamed into the auto dealerships in late August to buy new cars at a 71% faster clip than a year ago.

But what did we hear from those returning congresspersons? We heard that things were really terrible out there in the country and that the only cure would be to protect American workers from having to compete with all those non-Americans around the world who speak strange tongues, eat raw fish, hold their forks in their left hands, play futbol instead of football and listen to Lohengrin rather than Lauper on their lunch hours. Congress, it seems, returned from holiday determined to exploit the politics of xenophobia, hatred of all things foreign.

That determination will be manifested, if you believe the news reports out of Washington, in violent behavior. More than 300 protectionist bills will be brought forth seriatim in the House with each sponsor vowing to lie down on the tracks in front of a speeding presidential veto if necessary. Sponsors of a 15% import surcharge say they won't rest until American consumers have been made to pay the $32 billion the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland estimates this levy will cost. The president's promise over the weekend that he will press Japan, Brazil and Korea to open up markets for cigarettes, insurance and computers and will strong-arm the Common Market into letting in canned fruit is being scoffed at as "cosmetic" by the congressional protectionists.

What the returning congressmen don't understand, but will soon find out, is that if they really mix it up with the president on this issue, they will lose. On their side they have some antiquated industries and a beleaguered labor movement. On the president's side are 240 million consumers, men, women and children, who have all the usual consumer wants and needs—things like food, transportation and clothing.

American consumers are not xenophobes. They love things foreign. They love Sonys, brie cheese, BMWs, Colombian coffee, Indian tea, Irish woolens, Scotch whisky, Vespa scooters, Portuguese sardines, Argentine corned beef, New Zealand lamb, Mexican tomatoes, Canadian bacon. They also love Detroit cars, California oranges, New York PCs, Kansas City steaks and Indiana prefabs. Americans, except for those few who have just come back to Washington from whatever planet they were inhabiting in August, know one thing: They are living and working in an international economy. They see its artifacts around them very day and they know, instinctively if in no other way, that their lives have been materially enriched by what this awesome international network produces and distributes.

Legislators miss this obvious truth so easily because they are preoccupied with such issues as law, national sovereignty, and, not least, the campaign contributions that come in from American producers who want special privileges or protections. They have been told, time and time again, that interference with the world's commerce is an invitation to economic disaster, but they persist, for the reasons mentioned above, in ignoring that truth.

The president understands it very well. His new Special Trade Representative, Clayton Yeutter, went on the David Brinkley show Sunday and declared to all and sundry that he was wearing foreign-made shoes. "This administration is not at all interested in aiding industries that really give no hope of being price competitive, and it seems to me that's the way it should be."

Indeed it should be. The American productive economy, which is truly awesome whatever the protectionists might say, was built on competition. Corporate executives who come crying to Washington about imports simply are not earning their large salaries. If they can't compete in the business they're in they should try another business. Judging from the explosion of new business formations in the last five years, there is no shortage of opportunities.

As to Washington, we are reminded of one Bill Alexander (D., Ark.), who somehow managed to arrange for a special Air Force plane to haul him and his entourage down to Brazil for a fact-finding trip during the summer holiday. That cost a lot of money. But now that Congress is back in town clamoring for "trade bills" we wonder how much it would cost to offer every legislator a special plane to any destination providing he or she promised to not come back until this latest wave of hysteria has passed. Five million dollars? Cheap at the price.●

TRIBUTE TO MORTON BAHR

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, at its recent convention, the Communications Workers of America elected as its president, Morton Bahr, a native New Yorker and an effective, enlightened trade union leader.

"Morty" Bahr's succession to the presidency of CWA represents the latest milestone in a distinguished trade union career with which those of us in the Empire State are well acquainted.

Indeed, in the period from 1969 through July 1985, Mr. Bahr served as vice president of CWA's District 1, a region which includes not only New York, but also New Jersey and the New England States. During those years, CWA enjoyed unprecedented growth, with union membership more than doubling in the States over which Vice President Bahr had jurisdiction. Today, membership in district 1 totals 120,000.

Much of the credit for CWA's surge in membership development rests with Morty himself, who has always placed a premium on the value of organizing the unorganized. Indeed, one of his first accomplishments on behalf of CWA, between 1957 and 1961, was to direct a major organizing campaign that resulted in bringing more than 24,000 workers employed by the New York Telephone Co., into the union.

Of course, Morty's interest have extended to the greater community. He is a trustee of Nassau, NY, Community College, a member of the board of governors of the United Way of America and has served as labor chair for the Greater New York Blood Bank.

Similarly, Morton Bahr has been intensively immersed in Democratic party policitics. He was a delegate to the 1976, 1980, and 1984 Democratic National Conventions. He also chaired the statewide labor campaign committees in New York, playing a vital role in the elections of New York Governors Hugh Carey and Mario Cuomo.

A native of Brooklyn, Mr. Bahr is a graduate of Samuel J. Tilden High School and also holds a bachelor of science degree from Empire State College.

He is married to the former Florence Slobodow. They have two children and four grandchildren.

Mr. President, in the near future, those in Washington and throughout the Nation will come to appreciate and admire the innovative, foresighted leadership that was Morty Bahr's trademark in New York. I wish him and the CWA well as they embark together on a historic new era of leadership.●

VITAMIN A DEFICIENCY

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, Senator RUDMAN and I have introduced S. 1451, which would earmark money in the AID budget that would fund nutrition programs aimed at reducing vitamin A deficiency. This condition results in blindness and other severe human health problems. It is a special problem in the Third World and developing nations. An estimated 500,000 children in developing countries go blind because they don't get enough vitamin A. Ten million children suffer annually from the disorder as witnessed in such places as Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, the Philippines, Haiti, Latin America, Africa, and even in some regions of the United States.

I would like to commend to my colleagues' attention the following article on the eradication of vitamin A deficiencies. This article was prepared by the faculty of the FSN at the University of Rhode Island. The university is one of the leading research institutes in the world on vitamin A. I call on my colleagues to take note of this article and to support this important, humanitarian effort. Mr. President, I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

PROGRAMS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF RHODE ISLAND TO ERADICATE VITAMIN A DEFICIENCY

The Food Science & Nutrition (FSN) Department of the University of Rhode Island, is one of the major centers in the U.S. for education and research on foods and nutrition. The Food Science and Nutrition Department has established provitamin A and vitamin A as one of the principal thrusts. With the commitment of 6 of 18 faculty and 10 of 70 graduate students in the department of Food Science and Nutrition providing a critical mass, and combined with related activities from other departments such as Plant Science, Chemistry and Pharmacology, and the International Vitamin A Consultative Group, the University of Rhode Island is clearly one of the leading institutions in the world for the study of provitamin A and vitamin A.

The provitamin A and vitamin A research program is active in both international and national arenas. International applications include the participation of Dr. Kenneth L. Simpson, Professor, Department of Food Science and Nutrition, (FSN) and Drs. C.O. Chichester and Paul D. Maugle in the International Vitamin A Consultative Group (IVACG). In 1979-1982, the International Secretariat worked with groups at the University of Rhode Island and in 1981 became an integral part of the International Center located in the College of Resource Development. These FSN faculty members are actively involved in organizing an international laboratory network to analyze for the provitamin A content of foods from countries where vitamin A deficiency exists. This information will be applied to the development of food supplies with higher vitamin A content and methods of preparation that may render more of the provitamin available to populations in parts of the world where vitamin A deficiency results in xerophthalmia. On the national level, the Department's interest in beta carotene and vitamin A is focusing on possible use as anticancer nutrients. Drs. Kenneth L. Simpson and Leonard Gerber are supervising research on the metabolism of the provitamin A and other carotenoids which will provide knowledge useful in determining whether the carotenoids do indeed provide protection against some forms of cancer.

Dr. Kenneth L. Simpson and Dr. C.O. Chichester have been active researchers in the area of carotenoid analysis and biochemistry for more than 20 years. Among their accomplishments was the development of an advanced analytical method for the rapid, and accurate measurement of provitamin A carotenes. The method was the first dependable separation of carotenes. The application of this analytical technique to foods in this laboratory has shown that the Association of Official Analytical Chemists (AOAC) method currently used for the determination of provitamin A greatly overestimates the vitamin A values of some fruits and vegetables. This points out the need to reevaluate the food tables that have been compiled using the AOAC procedure. It also supports the need for the IVACG network to analyze vegetables from countries where vitamin A deficiency is a problem. Several people from the countries participating in IVACG such as Taiwan, Brazil, and Indonesia have come to Dr. Simpson's laboratory to learn the techniques of carotenoid analysis. Dr. Samson Tsou, from the Asian Vegetable Research and Development Center, spent one year as a visiting scholar in Dr. Simpson's laboratory learning these analytical techniques, developing new techniques, and applying them to the analysis of vegetables. The development of other simplified techniques that can be utilized in areas of the world where it would not be feasible to use the technologically advanced techniques is currently being carried out in Dr. Simpson's laboratory. It is hoped that this technique will be an improvement on the current available methods. With this new method, samples may be screened in the field before sending them to a central analytical laboratory.

Advanced analytical techniques have also been used for the determination of provitamin A and vitamin A in human milk from lactating women in Northeastern New England. The work with breast milk found that the carotene content of the milk reflected the diet of the nursing mother, indicating that dietary carotenoids can be another approach in treating nutritional blindness, xerophthalmia and reducing the incidence of infectious diseases in young children. This research into the vitamin A and provitamin A content of breast milk is continuing.

In addition, this laboratory has determined that vitamin A content of various sources of bovine milks available to the public in the Northeast Region of the United States. Large differences between milk available to the consumer were found. This work is continuing in conjunction with the Food and Drug Administration.

Another aspect of the research effort is assessing the utilization of provitamin A carotenes in mammals. The study encompasses the metabolism of carotenoids beginning with the digestion in the small intestine, absorption of retinol and uncleaved carotenes, and their metabolism. The information obtained from this research will be used to better assess the potency of different carotenoid precursors of vitamin A, as possible anticancer nutrients. An epidemological study has shown that those who smoke and consume more carotene containing vegetables have a lower incidence of lung cancer. Some modified forms of vitamin A have been shown to inhibit cancer in cell cultures, but whether these forms of vitamin A are produced within the body and transported to the proper tissues must be assessed before there is a definite link between consumption of carotene rich foods and lower risk of cancer. A cause and effect relationship has not been established and will not be established until more is known about the metabolism of beta carotene and other carotenoids.

Dr. Leonard Gerber, a faculty member in the Department of Food Science and Nutrition, has centered his vitamin A research on the effects of retinoic acid (a form of vitamin A) on serum triglycerides and the effects of retinoids on wound healing. This work on wound healing showed that dietary beta carotene aided in the formation of scar tissue after surgery. Current research on the role of carotenes in wound healing has shown that protein and carotene supplements increased the strength of scar tissue in rats after surgery. Dr. Gerber is also involved in a project to determine serum carotenes and carotene metabolites in humans whose diets are supplemented with carotenes.

A research project directed by Dr. C.O. Chichester III in the Department of Pharmacology at the University of Rhode Island is currently investigating the effect of retinoids and carotenes on cancer cells in tissue culture.

The research efforts of Dr. Phyllis R. Brown and D. Wilfred Nelson in the Chemistry Department support the analytical research to determine the provitamin A content of foods. Dr. Byung Dong Kim in the Plant Science Department has research experience in genetically engineering the provitamin A content of fruits and vegetables.

INTERNATIONAL INVOLVEMENT

Dr. C.O. Chichester, Professor in the Department of Food Science and Nutrition and a participant in the deliberations of the thirty-seventh World Health Assembly at the 1974 May meeting, aware that safe, effective and relatively inexpensive techniques exist to prevent vitamin A deficency and xerophthalmia, such as increased consumption of local foodstuffs rich in provitamin A. periodic mass distribution of large oral doses of vitamin A and vitamin A nutrifiction of certain foods, was among those who passed a resolution urging all member states to give high priority to the control of the worldwide vitamin A deficiency problem through appropriate nutritional programs or as part of primary health care. Coordination was advised with other intergovernmental organizations and appropriate nongovernmental organizations as well as the launching and management of intensive and extensive international action to combat vitamin A deficiency. This includes the mobilizatin of financial and other resources required for such action.

For over half a century, numerous organizations have long recognized the serious nature of vitamin A deficiency. These reports have been summarized on a global survey by the World Health Organization (WHO) in 1963. WHO documented the high mortality rate associated with the disease. Efforts to deal with the problem centered mainly on individual organizations and countries acting essentially independently of one another. The central problem was that vitamin A deficiency increased the risk of infection which compounded with other factors of malnutrition resulted in increased mortality and morbidity. Its most serious manifestation, and its most obvious one, centered around xerophthalmia, nutritional blindness in large numbers of individuals in Southeast Asia, Africa, Southwestern hemisphere and the Indian south continent. Primary intervention efforts work toward the implementation vitamin A nutrification, nutrition education, and the encouragement and support for the consumption of foods providing vitamin A.

In 1965, the FAO/UNICEF Joint Policy Committee advocated preventing vitamin A deficiency in children through increased production of local foods combined with nutrition education. In the early 1970's, WHO and UNICEF executive boards proposed the distribution of periodic large doses of vitamin A as a safe and effective approach to protection against vitamin A deficiency. These discussions stimulated an increase in public awareness of the vitamin A problem.

INTERNATIONAL VITAMIN A CONSULTATIVE GROUP

In 1972 the Office of Nutrition of the Agency for International Development of the United States State Department through a Nutrition Advisory Committee undertook a review of hypovitaminois A in humans worldwide to see how it might attack the problem or how it could encourage others to pursue coordinated efforts to eradicate vitamin A deficiency.

This endeavor resulted in the preparation of a three volume report by members of the A.I.D. Nutrition Advisory Committee dealing with vitamin A, xerophthalmia and blindness. These volumes are entitled: (1) "A Global Survey of Mass Vitamin A Programs"; (2) "Vitamin A Problems with Special Reference to Less Developed Countries"; (3) "Vitamin A Technology and Xerophthalmia".

With these documents, the Advisory Committee to AID on nutrition suggested the formation of a coordinating group whose function would be to monitor worldwide efforts in combating hypovitaminosis A, to act as a liaison group between sponsoring agencies, to encourage the individual countries where the problem existed to recognize the devastating effects of vitamin A deficiency and to initiate intervention measures.

In 1973 "The International Vitamin A Board" was proposed and was formalized in the spring and summer of 1973. The purposes of the board were outlined as follows:

1. Advise international regional and national technical assistant agencies and governments on the assessment and control of vitamin A deficiency and xerophthalmia.

2. Serve as a clearinghouse for the collection and dissemination of information on vitamin A deficiency and xerophthalmia.

3. To advise on, promote and coordinate scientific, technological, operational and financial resources toward the control of vitamin A deficiency and xerophthalmia.

4. To recommend priorities for research and action for the control of deficiency and xerophthalmia.

A meeting on the "Vitamin A Deficiency Control and Priorities for Action Programs", was planned during the early part of 1974 under the auspices of the National Academy of Sciences and sponsored by the Office of Nutrition, Agency for International Development (USA). The meeting, however, presented a potential conflict with a workshop sponsored by WHO in Jakarta, Indonesia scheduled for September, 1974. A decision was made to combine efforts. The Agency for International Development worked with WHO to expand the meeting which was then scheduled for November 1974. Extensive simultaneous discussions of vitamin A deficiency took place at the 1974 World Food Conference in Rome where Resolution V called for greater efforts to combat vitamin A. The then Secretary of State of the United States, Dr. Henry Kissinger, pledged substantial support from the United States government for efforts to extripate vitamin A deficiency, and iron deficiency anemia.

WHO–AID (USA) meeting in Jakarta, Indonesia pressed for establishment of priorities for research and for action programs. The participants agreed upon an international classification of xerophthalmia, criteria for the diagnosis of xerophthalmia and vitamin A deficiency, treatment prevention protocols, intervention strategies and research needs.

Early in 1975, a meeting was held in UNICEF-New York and the International Vitamin A Consultative Group (IVACG) was established. The concept behind the organization was to maintain flexible participation by policy makers, programmers and scientists concerned with vitamin A deficiency and representatives from countries where hypo-vitaminosis was a problem. Thus, IVACG continues to be dedicated to reducing the prevelance of vitamin A deficiency worldwide. Presently, it's chairman is Dr. Lester J. Teply, (UNICEF/USA) and Dr. Barbara A. Underwood, (National Eye Institute/USA) is the chairperson of it's planning committee, which also includes Drs. Fred Sai, (World Bank), Florentino Solon, (Ministry of Health/Philippines), Edouard DeMaeyer, (WHO/Switzerland), John I. McKigney, (AID/USA/Secretary), C.O. Chichester and Paul D. Maugle, (University of Rhode Island/Secretariat). In fulfilling this mandate, IVACG sponsors periodic international meetings, and scientific reviews of the problem and convenes task forces to analyze issues related to the detection of etiology, treatment and prevention of vitamin A deficiencies. IVACG sponsors international meetings on an almost annual basis to provide a forum for the interchange of ideas and the presentation of new research findings. A major portion of the meetings includes discussions about central programs and survey data. In addition, IVACG also organizes special sessions that are relevant in international and national meetings.

To address issues central to vitamin A deficiency, IVACG has published several guidelines and monographs resulting from the work of task forces and special consultants. These include:

Guidelines for the Eradication of Vitamin A Deficiency and Xerophthalmia (1977) (English and French);

Recent Advances in the Metabolism and Function of Vitamin A and Their Relationship to Applied nutrition (1979);

The Safe Use of Vitamin A (1980) (English and French);

The Symptoms and Signs of Vitamin A Deficiency and Their Relationship to Applied Nutrition (1981) (English and Spanish);

The Biochemical Methodology for the Assessment of Vitamin A Status (1982);

Periodic, Large Oral Doses of Vitamin A for the Prevention of Vitamin A Deficiency and Xerophthalmia: A Summary of Experience, (1984).

An international directory of some 327 administrators and scientists involved in the alleviating Vitamin A deficiency was recently published under the sponsorship of the International Union of Nutritional Sciences, the Nutrition Foundation and the International Vitamin A Consultative Group.

To no small extent, IVACG has stimulated a widespread and successful attack on the problem of vitamin A deficiency. This is evidenced by a major effort by many United Nations groups to mount an assault on this devastating nutritional inadequacy.

BENEFITS TO THE UNIVERSITY OF RHODE ISLAND

The benefits to URI of the proposed legislation to expand Vitamin A programs worldwide would be three-fold. First the international laboratory network to analyze the provitamin A content of foods has been established with URI as the central reference and coordinating unit. URI would train personnel, conduct methodology research and serve as the ultimate reference for the satellite units. This program could establish essential food tables for target countries to improve diets and aid in the development of new crops rich in provitamin A. Secondly, the biopotency effects of vitamin A which contribute to maintaining health, such as inhibiting cancer or promoting would healing are poorly understood. These effects must be more completely understood, and have both national as well as international benefits. Funds to support this type of research and development have been difficult to obtain at URI.

Third. An expansion of the coordinating function of IVACG is badly needed. With the expansion of Vitamin A programs in the world it is imperative that the coordination between scientists and field workers be maintained to prevent splintering. Thus, additional funds are needed to allow IVACG to meet the needs of expanded programs to eradicate vitamin A deficiency.●

DEDUCTIBILITY OF STATE AND LOCAL TAXES

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I would commend to the attention of my colleagues and editorial in the September 9 Washington Post, entitled "Mr. Reagan's Tax Bill." It is a nononsense discussion of those principles which ought to guide any attempt here to reform present tax arrangements.

One matter in particular: Take care of the impact of changes in the Tax Code on the Nation's public schools. As the Post states the case, "the administration bill would put a severe new burden on the fiscal system that supports public education in this country."

By eliminating the Federal tax deduction for State and local taxes, the President's plan could, in short order, cut revenues for school districts by an estimated 20 percent nationwide, or the quivalent of $606 for every American elementary and secondary schoolchild.

The educational community is well aware of the devastating potential of repealing the tax deduction for moneys paid as State and local taxes. Every major educational organization in the country has now joined the effort to head-off such a serious misstep. The National School Boards Association, the National PTA and the Nation's two largest teacher organizations, the American Federation of Teachers and the National Education Association, are joined by the American Association of School Administrators; the American Association of State Colleges and Universities; the American Council on Education; the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; the Council of Great City Schools; the Council on Exceptional Children; the International Reading Association; the National Association of Elementary School Principals; the National Association of Federally Impacted Schools; and the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

It is not just the educational community which is, or should be, concerned. Every American will suffer if the deductibility of State and local taxes is repealed and thus the financing of public schools is undermined. The Post states this point quite nicely, and I ask that the full text of the editorial appear in the RECORD.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 9, 1985]

MR. REAGAN'S TAX BILL

With great enthusiasm, President Reagan has now renewed his drive to push his tax reform bill through Congress. But a tax bill, more than almost any other kind of legislation, is a collaboration among many authors, and the final version will differ significantly from the present one. It's a good moment to consider the directions that the remodeling ought to take and the standards that Congress needs to apply to any tax bill attempting this kind of broad revision. There are five tests that deserve special attention:

"Revenues. Let's begin at the beginning. The purpose of the tax system is to raise enough money to run the government. Mr. Reagan's 1981 tax bill has failed that test, and Congress has to be particularly careful that this one raises at least as much as the present law. Supply-side malarkey about the alleged dynamic effects of another tax cut should be dismissed. The present version barely equals the present level of revenue, and any backsliding here would be sufficient reason to abandon it.

Fairness. Traditionally the income tax has taken a bigger share of a large income than of a small one, and that has seemed to most Americans a good definition of fairness. The Reagan bill decreases the tax burden on the poor and near-poor, and that's welcome. But it also lowers the burden, and on a much more substantial scale, for the wealthy. Mr. Reagan's bill would lower the top tax rate on personal income from 50 percent to 35 percent. Why? There's no commanding logic to justify larger reductions at the top of the income scale than in the middle. The president's bill does not meet the test of fairness, and Congress has a responsibility to protect the principle of a progressive rate structure.

Simplification. The administration forfeited its chance to accomplish real simplification when it decided to perpetuate the lower tax rate for capital gains. The lower rate is crucial to most tax shelters, and without it they would have vanished. The right way to handle them—as the then secretary of the Treasury, Donald T. Regan, proposed last fall—is to index capital gains against inflation and then tax them as ordinary income. As the administration bill now stands, it does nothing to make your tax return any simpler.

Economic Effects. Here Congress has to give special concern to the devices by which the administration bill would find new revenue to compensate for the lower tax rates. Abolition of the investment tax credit is overdue. Similarly, the administration is right to eliminate the inequities, from one industry to another, that it established with the fast depreciation allowances in its 1981 bill. More troubling is the attempt by the current bill to recapture some of the benefits already distributed, in past years, by fast depreciation. The amounts of money are large, and would be paid mainly by those heavy industries that are already under great pressure from foreign competition. Those are not the places to find the money to pay for the rate cuts.

But much more important than the technicalities of capital cost, the administration bill would put a severe new burden on the fiscal system that supports public education in this country. The quality of the educational system is the primary determinant of the country's economic growth over the long term. By abolishing the federal tax deduction for state and local taxes, the bill would shift resources away from the treasuries that pay for schools and colleges. To add to the constraints on education merely to achieve another federal tax rate cut would jeopardize future productivity in a way that no tax incentives could repair.

Although you have heard the federal tax system denounced as disgraceful and catastrophic by a succession of eminent public figures, its flaws are not fundamental. Neither are the administration's currently proposed reforms profound. While the administration bill contains a number of improvements over present law, its central and driving purpose is another tax rate reduction. The need for that is not obvious. When Mr. Reagan speaks of reform, what he mainly means is lower tax rates. The other reforms have become incidental to that one. If Congress cannot refashion the administration bill to sustain more adequately the standards that apply to any tax law, there will be no very strong reason at the end of the process to pass it.●

WHO WON LEBANON?

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, the June 24, 1985, edition of the New Republic contains a perceptive article entitled "Who Won Lebanon?" written by Charles Krauthammer. Krauthammer disputes the conventional wisdom that Israel's war in Lebanon was a failure. Instead, he argues that the campaign, costly as it was, realized its principal objective: "to defeat the PLO militarily and cripple it politically." As a direct result, progress in the peace process may now be possible.

Krauthammer disputes a central criticism leveled against Israel even by those who recognize its legitimate security concerns in southern Lebanon: that Israel's drive all the way to Beirut was, literally and figuratively, going too far. Krauthammer assets that the move on Beirut was essential. The 1978 "Litani Operation" demonstrated that entry into southern Lebanon alone was a total waste. As soon as Israeli forces returned home, so did the PLO to southern Lebanon, and so did terrorist attacks on northern Israel.

With the drive on Beirut, and the PLO's expulsion from Lebanon, however, the PLO was removed as a military factor in the region. No longer could it terrorize at will the population of northern Israel. Equally important, the PLO's state-within-a-state in Lebanon was destroyed, robbing Yasser Arafat of much of his freedom of action. His opponents now follow Syria's lead, and to survive he has had to align himself closely to Jordan and Egypt.

This has important ramifications for the peace process. So long as the PLO was a major independent actor, irredentist and unwilling to consider recognition of, or negotiation with, Israel, the peace process could go nowhere. King Hussein's moves over the past 6 months were made possible by the PLO's weakness, not by any change of heart on Arafat's part. PLO weakness may even permit the emergence of other Palestinians who recognize that only by dealing with Israel can they hope to gain any of their political goals or the return of any of the remaining territory Israel acquired in the 1967 war.

Krauthammer points out that there were indeed Israeli misconceptions and mistakes—and very dear costs. Israel's central mistake, he contends, lay in its belief that the invasion would lead to Israeli hegemony over a reshaped, Christian-dominated Lebanon that would then enter into a de facto state of nonbelligerency with Israel. As a result of this misconception, Israel occupied Lebanese territory 2 years longer than was necessary or prudent. It was the occupation and the numbing stream of casualties that so demoralized Israeli society and that raised the animosity of Lebanese Shias.

Ironically, Krauthammer argues, the two powers that have emerged strongest in Lebanon, the Shi'ite Amal Organization and Syria, may now provide Israel with what it sought from the Christians—de facto nonbelligerency. Both Amal and Syria want a tranquil border with Israel, fearing Israel retaliation. Amal knows that further Israeli action in Lebanon could jeopardize its newfound political power. Damascus knows that it too would be held accountable for a resurgence of terrorism. For all its militancy, Syria has not permitted the use of its territory to launch attacks against Israel.

As Krauthammer notes, therefore, "Pretending that, for Israel, the price was paid for nothing in a lost war is a simple denial of the facts." I agree.●

ARMENIAN MASSACRE, 1915

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, last month the United Nations Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities affirmed a historical reality which, despite attempts by others, can never be denied. It voted 14 to 1 to accept a study which calls the Armenian massacre by Ottoman Turkey in 1915, a genocide.

"At least 1 million, and possibly well over half the Armenian population, are reliably estimated to have been killed or death-marched," the report said.

The approval of this report marks a victory for justice and humanity. It represents a victory for Armenians everywhere. Not only does it confirm what students of history know to be Ottoman Turkey's direct role in carrying out the first genocide of the 20th century, it thwarts the current Government of Turkey's attempt to distort history relative to its claim that the genocide never occurred.

I hope this now provides the impetus for the Senate and House to approve pending resolutions that will designate April 24, 1986 as a day of remembrance to victims of genocide, especially those victims of the Armenian genocide.

Mr. President, I ask that the following documents be printed in the RECORD.

The documents follow:

U.N. REPORT REVIVES ARGUMENTS ABOUT 1915 ARMENIAN MASSACRE

(By Burton Bollag)

GENEVA.—A United Nations human rights panel last week fought a fight that opened old wounds as Turkey tried to keep one paragraph out of an official report.

The single paragraph is at the center of a struggle to set the historical record straight—a struggle that has led to the murders of more than 30 Turkish diplomats in the past 10 years.

The paragraph is a mention of the massacre of at least one million Armenians by the Ottoman Empire (what is today Turkey) in 1915 and 1916. The wording appears in an update of a U.N. report on genocide.

The report is being considered by the U.N. Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, meeting in Geneva. Turkey succeeded in having mention of the massacre taken out of an earlier version of the genocide report in the mid-1970s.

Since then, Armenian groups have lobbied hard to prevent the same thing from happening to the new report. Since the time of the killings, Armenians have been demanding—unsuccessfully—that Turkey at least admit that the massacre took place.

"We're here to preserve historical facts," says Harut Sassounian, 34, of Los Angeles, who coordinates the U.N. lobbying work of the Armenian National Committee.

"I've grown up with stories of terror and killings as told to me by my own grandfather and grandmother," Sassounian says.

The updated genocide report—a decision on it is expected in about two weeks—was written by Ben Whitaker, a Briton who directs the London-based Minority Rights Group and is a member of the U.N. subcommission.

The subcommission's 26 members are supposed to be independent experts who do not represent governments. There is no Turkish member, but Turkey is present as an observer. Turkey maintains that there were killings during fighting between Armenian and Turkish communities during World War I. The Turks deny, however, that any wholesale massacre of Armenians took place and say that evidence to the contrary is based on forged documents.

Numerous press reports from the period refer to the deportation and killings of Armenians by the Ottoman Empire. The U.N. report says that the truth of the massacre is confirmed by reports in the diplomatic archives of the United States, Britain and Germany. The German archives are considered particularly significant because Germany was allied with Turkey during the war.

In 1975, the 60th anniversary of the killings, Armenian terrorists began a campaign of attacks against Turkish diplomats outside their country. More than 30 have been killed.

Armenians now live in communities in many countries, including the United States. They are demanding national rights in their former homeland and reparations from Turkey, similar to what Germany paid after World War II to survivors of the Nazi Holocaust.

Whitaker thinks that emotions would die down if Turkey admitted that a massacre took place. "The Germans admitted it [genocide against the Jews] and now they're respected for that," he says.

Turkish diplomats at the meeting, however, tried again to have the paragraph mentioning the massacre deleted.

The issue has repercussions in the United States. In September, Congress is scheduled to again consider an Armenian massacre commemoration bill that supporters have been presenting for 10 years. The Reagan administration is thought to oppose the bill because it wants to avoid offending Turkey, a NATO ally.

UN PANEL ACCEPTS REPORT CITING ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

GENEVA.—A UN human rights body has voted to accept a study backing charges that 1 million Armenians were massacred by Turkey's Ottoman empire, a UN statement said yesterday.

But Western envoys said the decision contained no request that the study be passed on to the UN Human Rights Commission.

Recent Turkish governments have repeatedly rejected the charges as unfounded, and Turkish delegates attacked the findings, which were prepared by a British human rights advocate, Benjamin Whitaker.

Whitaker defended his study against critics wanting to delete its most contentious paragraph, which cited nine instances of genocide this century, including what it called the 1915-1916 Ottoman massacre of Armenians.

"At least 1 million, and possibly well over half the Armenian population, are reliably estimated to have been killed or death-marched," the report said.

The report, revising a 1978 study on prevention and punishment of genocide, was accepted by 14 votes, one against and four abstentions by the UN Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

UN Panel Adopts Report Calling 1915 Armenian Massacres a Genocide

Turkish efforts to distort history soundly defeated

Geneva.—On Thursday, Aug. 29, the United Nations Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities adopted a Report on Genocide which, in paragraph 24, calls the Armenian massacres by Ottoman Turks in 1915 a genocide.

Voting 14 for, 1 against, and 4 abstentions, the UN human rights panel resisted heavy Turkish governmental pressures to delete any mention on the Armenian Genocide, and approved Resolution L. 15, defeating those efforts.

Proposed by Mr. Jules Deschenes of Canada, Mr. Olufemi Ayewale George of Nigeria, and Mr. Mubanga-Chipoya of Zambia, the resolution numbered by its UN document reference number E/CN.4/Sub. 2/1985/L. 15 reads:

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recalling Economic and Social Council Resolution 1983/33 of May 1983 by which the Council requests the Sub-Commission to appoint one of its members as a Special Rapporteur with the mandate to revise as a whole and update the Study on the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide taking into consideration the views expressed by the members of the Sub-Commission and the Commission on Human Rights as well as replies of Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations to a questionnaire to be prepared by the Special Rapporteur;

Recalling also the decision of 1982 August 9 by which the Sub-Commission appointed Benjamin Whitaker to revise and update the study;

Having read the preliminary report prepared by the Special Rapporteur for the Sub-Commission's 37th session;

Having now considered and debated the revised and updated study submitted by the Special Rapporteur at the Sub-Commission's 38th session;

Noting that divergent opinions have been expressed about the content and the proposals of the report:

1. Takes note of the study of the Special Rapporteur, the Revised and Updated Report on the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide;

2. Expresses its thanks and congratulations to the Special Rapporteur for his proposals;

3. Recommends that the U.N. renew efforts to make ratification by member-states of the Convention on Genocide as soon as possible.

Voting for the resolution were: Despouy (Argentina), Joinet (France), Carey (US), Martinez-Baez (Mexico), Tosevsky (Yugoslavia), Gu Yijie (China), Takemoto (Japan), O.A. George (Nigeria), Yimer (Ethiopia), Simpson (Ghana), Bhandare (India), Bossuyt (Belgium), Deschenes (Canada) and Baquero (Ecuador).

The sole vote against the resolution came from Sofinsky, the expert from the Soviet Union.

Abstentions were marked by Khasawneh (Jordan), Martinez (Cuba), Dahak (Morocco) and Chowdhury (Bangla Desh).

Some of the experts who did not vote were outside the meeting when the vote was taken.

The passage of this report and its incorportion as an UN document, along with the documentation calling the 1915 Armenian massacres a genocide, means that, for the first time. Turkish efforts to distort historical facts have been defeated on the international arena.

Their constant attempts to revise history and distort documented facts have been foiled. Turkish anger at the passage of the report was expressed by a vicious attack on the Special Rapporteur in a 10-page statement distributed to the delegates during the last meeting of the Sub-Commission. Calling him a prejudiced Rapporteur, the 10-page statement indulges in a clear attempt to besmirch the character of Mr. Whitaker. Despite considerable political pressures, which has been characterized by the European press as "a major scandal," he has remained steadfast in support of his inclusion of the mention of the Armenian Genocide in his report.

The adoption of the UN Report also means that an 11-year effort by the Armenian National Committee was culminated in success for the rights of the Armenian people. Now, at last, there is an official mention of the Armenian genocide in an UN document.

Review of Further Developments in Fields With Which the Subcommission Has Been Concerned

Paragraph 24 of the revised and updated report on the question of the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide

(Prepared by Mr. B. Whitaker)

Toynbee stated that the distinguishing characteristics of the twentieth century in evolving the development of genocide "are that it is committed in cold blood by the deliberate fiat of holders of despotic political power, and that the perpetrators of genocide employ all the resources of present-day technology and organization to make their planned massacres systematic and complete". The Nazi aberration has unfortunately not been the only case of genocide in the twentieth century. Among other examples which can be cited as qualifying are the German massacre of Hereros in 1904, the Ottoman massacre of Armenians in 1915-1916,[1] the Ukrainian pogrom of Jews in 1919, the Tutsi massacre of Hutu in Burundi in 1965 and 1972, the Paraguayan massacre of Aché Indians prior to 1974, the Khmer Rouge massacre in Kampuchea between 1975 and 1978, and the contemporary Iranian killings of Baha'is. Apartheid is considered separately in paragraphs 43-46 below. A number of other cases may be suggested. It could seem pedantic to argue that some terrible mass-killings are legalistically not genocide, but on the other hand it could be counter-productive to devalue genocide through over-diluting its definition.

My Experience During the Armenian Genocide

(By Arthur H. Dadian of Washington, DC)

The genocide of the Armenians in Turkey during World War I was executed in successive stages. In the city where we lived, in peace with our neighbors and miles away from any Russian border, the genocide started with a bang. One morning the city was startled to find that a few of its leading Armenians had been arrested during the night, hung in a public square and left hanging for all to see.

This was followed by arrest of able-bodied men and sending them to work on road projects near the Russian front. My father was arrested and sent to such a project. These men were killed in groups after working on such projects. My father was in a building in a deserted mountainous area where these men were brought to be slaughtered.

Before all this and during it all the Turkish police started coming to Armenian homes, time and again, to take the "census". One time my grandmother complained and

[1] At least 1 million, and possibly well over half of the Armenian population, are reliably estimated to have been killed or death-marched by independent authorities and eye-witnesses. This is corroborated by reports in United States, German and British archives and of contemporary diplomats in the Ottoman Empire, including those of its ally Germany. The German Ambassador, Wangenheim, for example, on 7 July 1915 wrote "the government is indeed pursuing its goal of exterminating the Armenian race in the Ottoman Empire" (Wilhelmstrasse archives). Though the successor Turkish Government helped to institute trials of a few of those responsible for the massacres at which they were found guilty, the present official Turkish contention is that genocide did not take place although there were many casualties and dispersals in the fighting, and that all the evidence to the contrary is forged. was told by one of the policemen that they were following orders from Istambul.

Then came the "deportation" of the remaining men, women and children. Sometimes it meant taking people out on forced marches and starving and torturing them to death. Often it meant taking them to the country under "police protection" to make sure that none escaped and butchering them. When my father was being brought home under guard from the road project he had been sent to, he and his guard happened to come upon a field where a massacre had taken place, under "police protection". Turkish civilians were searching the dead bodies for valuables and gold in their teeth. (The Turkish pasha who had "bought" father's business while he was away needed father to run the business and had orders issued to have him brought back under guard.)

At first this deportation did not apply to Armenians who were members of the Latin-Catholic-Church. My family was so registered and was thus exempt from this first deportation. During this exemption period two police came to our house and told my mother—my father was still away—that my younger sister and I were baptized in the Armenian Church and that we were subject to deportation and they had come to take me and my sister away. But they eventually left without taking us because they felt that as Armenians we were all going to get killed sooner or later and that we might as well get killed a little later with my mother.

Soon the exemption of the Catholics was removed and we were deported. We were the only ones from that group to survive and eventually return to our home in the city. When we were deported, my father was still away, my older brother was staying with the pasha who wanted to adopt him and my older sister was at the American College run by American missionaries at a nearby town. My mother had enrolled her there during our exemption to save her.

One day our pasha told my brother to go and bring my sister home from the American College. A few days after my sister came home, the American College was raided by the Turkish military police. The Armenian male students were taken outside the town and slaughtered. The girls were brought to a vacant house in our block, the owners had been deported. One day we heard screams from that house and went from rooftops to see what was happening. Where we stood we could see the courtyard of the house. I can never forget what we saw. Turks in military uniforms were dragging out to take with them the girls they had selected.

When the Turks along with the Germans lost the war and peace came, the Turks became horrified and frantic. They were sure that the allies will punish them as individuals and as a nation for what they had done to the Armenians. They started doing what all criminals and murderers do—deny everything, cover up, destroy all evidence and kill any survivor who might be used as a witness. My father was arrested. A Turkish leader who had known him for years got him out of jail before they shot him. He advised father to leave the city immediately. They went to the market place and hired a wagon with a driver, came to our house, packed up bare essentials and we left for Adana.●

MRS. ALICE NEW HOLY BLUE LEGS, 1985 NATIONAL HERITAGE FELLOWS AWARD WINNER

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, tomorrow, I have the privilege of cohosting a reception for the 1985 National Heritage Fellows honoring 12 master artists and artisans selected by the National Endowment for the Arts to receive this important honor.

I am proud to point out that one of the artists receiving this illustrious award is Mrs. Alice New Holy Blue Legs. Mrs. Blue Legs is from Pine Ridge, SD, and is renowned for the lost art of quillwork. We are especially proud of our cultural diversity in South Dakota and Mrs. Blue Legs embodies this diversity in her unique and rich art form.

Mr. President, I should also like to include a short biography of Mrs. Blue Legs which was prepared by the National Endowment for the Arts.

The biography follows:

ALICE NEW HOLY BLUE LEGS

According to the director of the Museum of the American Indian, "the art of porcupine quill decoration . . . is a singularly North American Indian craft practiced by no other people in the world." Before European explorers and settlers introduced trade beads to Native Americans, porcupine quills were a primary medium used in the decoration of clothing, horse trappings, and other artifacts among Woodland and Plains Indians, most especially the Lakota Sioux. Quillwork, however, is extremely complex, requiring not only the highest degree of painstaking skill and experience, but great patience, as well. Therefore, once trade beads became readily available, the faster, easier beadwork techniques rapidly replaced quillwork among the majority of Indian artisans.

In fact, quillwork has been rapidly becoming a lost art. The New Holy family of Lakota Sioux who live on the rolling prairie land of the Pine Ridge Sioux reservation is given much of the credit for the survival of the art form during the seventies and eighties. Among this family, Alice New Holy Blue Legs has done more than any other single person to maintain the ancient skills, to preserve the excellence of quillwork art, and to pass it on to others. She has taught her five daughters and her grand-daughters well, so well that not only her own work, but that of her daughters, is part of the permanent collection of the Smithsonian Institution.

Further, she has shared knowledge with members of other Indian tribes and non-Indians, as well through workshops, demonstrations, and school residencies in many states. She uses these occasions to communicate the cultural values of the Lakota people telling the ancient tales, discussing the native plants, on which she is considered to be a genuine authority, and transmitting her knowledge across cultural barriers. She plays an exemplary leadership role in the small community of Grass Creek on the Pine Ridge Reservation where she lives, especially demonstrating her concern for the education and welfare of the children. Overall, she is a source of pride to her people, and her art makes clear the shared values of industriousness, generosity, honesty, and wisdom which are the primary virtues of Sioux women.●

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection to proceeding as the distinguished assistant majority leader has indicated.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, with that I ask unanimous consent that the calendar items just identified be considered en bloc and indefinitely postponed en bloc.

A resolution (S. Res. 220) authorizing the appointment of a special delegation to host a delegation of members of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move for adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 220) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 220

(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the expenses of such delegation shall include such special expenses as the co-chairmen may deem appropriate, including reimbursements to any officer or agency of the Government for—

(1) expenses incurred on behalf of such delegation;

(3) expenses incurred in connection with providing appropriate hospitality, including such expenses incurred by the Secretary of the Senate before the date of adoption of this resolution.

(c) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to advance funds to the co-chairmen of such delegation in the same manner provided for committees of the Senate under authority of Public Law 118, Eighty-first Congress, approved June 22, 1949.

PROGRAM

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, on tomorrow, following routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 1200, the Immigration Reform and Control Act.

I think it is obvious that rollcall votes could be expected throughout Thursday's session. I previously expressed to my colleagues what is anticipated there and what our anticipation is on that issue. But with that, I express that there will be rollcall votes throughout the day. It is hoped that, with progress and alacrity, perhaps there will not be a session on Friday, if we are able to dispose of the immigration issue, even at perhaps a later time tomorrow evening. That is subject to the will of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 11, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We remember, O God, those people whose good deeds and service to others are known only to the few but whose acts of charity are motivated by genuine compassion and concern. In Your divine understanding, gracious God, we acknowledge that You encourage us to do justice not so our names will be known, but rather that healing and righteousness will take place. In the silence of our own hearts we honor those saints, whose names are known to You, for their good works and for their devotion to making our homes and communities places of peace and good will. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerk's, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 31) "Joint resolution to designate the week of November 24 through November 30, 1985, as 'National Family Week'."

THE REPUBLICANS' $2 TRILLION DEBT

(Mr. COELHO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, U.S. News & World Report, a magazine not known for its liberalism, points out this week that before the Republicans took over in 1981, our Nation's entire 205-year history had produced a $1 trillion debt.

But later this month, in 1985, President Reagan is going to ask Congress to approve a $2 trillion debt. That's right, after campaigning in 1980 on a platform of fiscal responsibility, the Republicans started buying $600 toilet seats and allowing the rich corporations to pay no taxes. The result? A $2 trillion debt that America's young people will have to pay.

There's even an excellent chart here to illustrate how the Republicans have doubled the debt in 5 short years.

How much is 2 trillion? U.S. News says that "2 trillion $1 bills placed end-to-end would stretch 186 million miles—from the Earth to the Sun and back."

That's a pretty long way, Mr. Speaker, but not nearly as far as the Republicans and their corporate welfare queens will have to go in explaining this one to the voters in 1986.

OFFSHORE OIL EXPLORATION NEGOTIATIONS

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, talks broke down between Secretary Hodel and the California Members—after 6 weeks of difficult and often controversial negotiations on offshore oil exploration. The Members left the room angry and disappointed.

The dispute centered around a preliminary agreement negotiated last July. It called for leasing 150 tracts off of California. Secretary Hodel claimed the tracts offered very low potential, and thus are worthless to the oil industry. He wants better tracts.

The majority of the California delegation wants the Secretary to honor the preliminary agreement. Neither side was in the mood to budge and the agreement fell apart.

Now that the heat of yesterday has subsided, cooler heads must prevail. We are all responsible legislators and the long-term need for agreement still exists.

I call on Mr. Hodel to present immediately what he wants and for the California delegation to return to the bargaining table. In the meantime, the moratorium ought to be extended until consensus is reached.

ADMINISTRATION SHOULD BE WORKING ON SUBSTANTIVE ISSUES IN GENEVA

(Mrs. KENNELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the President told the visiting Danish Prime Minister that the upcoming summit should be a "starting point for better relations—a starting point for progress." No one could disagree with that. But the other things this administration has been saying raise doubt about whether they are interested in a meeting of substance.

Every day, it seems, we are warned not to expect much from Geneva. The State Department never mentions the summit without cautioning against optimism in the same breath. Yesterday, the President himself made a point of minimizing hopes.

If this is the subtle and delicate language of diplomacy, fine. But my worry is that both sides are becoming more concerned with public relations than with the substantive issue, which is nothing less than human survival.

Our statements and actions should make that clear. As the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] has suggested, we should be working on the "essential elements" of an arms control agreement with the Soviets. I hope the President will do just that.

THE KIDNAPING OF PRESIDENT DUARTE'S DAUGHTER

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I and I am sure all of my colleagues were shocked and saddened to hear about the kidnaping of President Jose Napoleon Duarte's daughter yesterday in El Salvador. We do not know who did it, but we know that whoever did, is despicable and has committed an extreme act of terrorism which we all condemn.

I am sure all of my colleagues join me in extending our sympathy and best wishes and hopes for the recovery of Jose Napoleon Duarte's daughter unharmed.

When President Duarte was here a little over a year ago, he told us that he was willing to endure anything including risking his own life, for democracy in El Salvador. What happened yesterday shows that indeed that is what can happen when you take the kind of risks that he has taken.

So, Mr. Speaker, I ask all of my colleagues to join me in extending sympathy and best wishes to him, and for continued wishes for success in a very difficult job.

HON. SONNY MONTGOMERY RECIPIENT OF THE MENDEL RIVERS' AWARD OF EXCELLENCE

(Mr. NICHOLS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I know our colleagues would be interested to know that our distinguished colleague from Mississippi, the Honorable G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY, had been named by the Noncommissioned Officers' Association as the 1985 recipient of the prestigious Mendel Rivers' Award of Excellence.

This award is made annually honoring a Member for his service in behalf of the men and women in our military service, and certainly our friend from Mississippi, the very able chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, is most deserving of this honor.

During Sonny's 19 years of dedicated service in the Congress, he has been a strong champion of providing educational opportunities for men and women in the military service, and his efforts in this field have been very helpful to recruitment and retention in all branches of the service.

Sonny's long time concern for our missing in action in Vietnam and Indochina, together with his dedication supporting our National Guard and Reserve forces, entitles him to receive this outstanding award, and I know his many friends on the floor of the House want to join me in extending our sincere congratulations.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, this is a terribly important statement the gentleman from Alabama is making, because it tells us something about a man who has done so well in his life in so many fields. And yet he takes the time to do the little things that affect so dramatically our enlisted personnel in the service. This is a trait that more of us ought to have. I wish I had more of it. The finest thing you can say about SONNY MONTGOMERY, particularly in the South, is that he is a true southern gentleman. He looks like a Congressman, he acts like a Congressman, and he is a credit to the body.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

CONRAIL

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the question recurs: What should the U.S. Congress do about Conrail?

The administration proposes, pursuant to its duty, to sell the system to Norfolk, an existing railway system, for $1.2 billion.

There are many of us who can prove conclusively that that is a very inexpensive price to place upon such a worthy asset. We prefer, many of us—and we wish we could impress our colleagues to the same extent—that the system ought to be put up for a public offering. This would have two guaranteed elements: First, it would produce, without question, more than the $1.2 billion now in the picture, and thus would help our revenue picture just that much more; and second, it would guarantee the continued existence of Conrail and its management as we now know it, which we know is a profitable, workmanlike operation in its present circumstance.

That is why I am asking all of the Members to look very closely at the proposed sale as now constituted. We owe our taxpayers more than just the automatic adoption of the sale to Norfolk.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California started out this morning by talking about the national debt, how the President has now asked us to double it. Reagan started with a $1 trillion debt and now he's driven it to $2 trillion.

I think it is very important to break the debt down even further and show what this means to every individual American. What this means is every American today portion of the debt is $7,736 per every man, woman, and child.

As we go around, crowing about our wonderful gross national product, let us not forget that 50 percent of that gross national product is on the cuff, it is because of this debt, whereas in 1981, when the administration took over, the debt was 34 percent of the GNP. That is a phenomenal increase.

But the projections as to what we are going to have to pay in interest on this national debt are phenomenal, $138 billion in interest payments will be required next year.

Somebody is going to have to pay. The debt is going to come due eventually. And I think it is incredible that a President that campaigned saying that they were really fiscally responsible have turned out to be the most fiscally irresponsible in the history of the country.

THE KIDNAPING OF INES GUADELUPE DUARTE DURAN

(Mr. BARNES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I am about to introduce a resolution condemning the kidnaping of Ines Guadelupe Duarte Duran, the daughter of the President of El Salvador, Jose Napoleon Duarte. This is an outrageous act. As was said by my friend and colleague from California just a few minutes ago, we have no idea who did it, but whoever did it has engaged in a dispicable action that cannot be justified in any way, under any circumstances.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon I will convene a meeting of the subcommittee that I have the privilege to chair, the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs. I hope that we will unanimously report out the resolution that my friend from California, the ranking Republican, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, has agreed to cosponsor. We hope to move this resolution quickly on a bipartisan basis. I know that all Democrats and all Republicans will want to join us in calling upon those responsible for this kidnaping to release the President's daughter unharmed and to desist in engaging in this kind of reprehensible action.

SAY IT AIN'T SO

(Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, without in any way diminishing the problems of trade, unemployment or the debt, this today is a brief cry for something I do not even believe the Congress can solve.

Last night I watched, again, baseball players, who have been giving evidence and therefore are free from prosecution, about dealing with and taking drugs. None of these players exhibited much remorse, nor have I heard from baseball owners that they would somehow unite to make sure this cannot happen again, nor from the players' organization. This kind of thing has got to stop. We are not talking about poor farm boys or ghetto youths who are unemployed. We are talking about people who make $300,000 a year, who, for our children, are the models and examples.

Can you imagine my hero, Stan Musial, shooting it up, or maybe Bob Gibson saying, "It was a tough day, therefore I am going to take some pills."

In 1919, a little kid said, "Say it ain't so, Joe." I can only ask today the baseball teams again: Please say it won't be so.

UNFAIR FOREIGN TRADE PRACTICES

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, like the historic figure of Emperor Nero fiddling away while Rome burned, the United States is still fiddling around the edges of a problem which burns at the very heart of the American economic base. Unfair foreign trade practices combine with an administration policy of ignoring those inequities to daily rob Americans of jobs and erode the mining and manufacturing base of the Nation. Our policy seems to be to promote mining and manufacturing jobs everywhere except here on good U.S. soil.

Mr. Speaker, there is a broad gulf-wide difference between protectionism and trade reciprocity. Protectionism implies the artificial support of inefficient operations. Trade reciprocity implies equal and fair treatment of products on the international market.

It is time, Mr. Speaker, for the United States to tell our major trading partners that we will no longer tolerate imbalances in trade restrictions, tariffs, and quotas, that we are prepared to match them item by item, commodity by commodity, until everyone comes to their senses and balance is restored.

Only then will we have real and free and fair trade. And in that kind of economic environment, Americans can compete against anyone in the world.

NEVER MIND THE PROBLEMS WITH CHEMICAL WEAPONS

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, this House will soon face another vote on chemical weapons.

Two months ago, the House tentatively approved the production of new nerve gas weapons with two important conditions: First, that a 2-year deadline be set to give the arms control negotiations in Geneva a chance; and second, that we borrow the estimated $20 billion that new nerve gas weapons will cost if our closest NATO allies agree to accept them.

As I predicted at that time, the conference stripped those important conditions from the House bill and left a naked commitment to nerve gas.

Never mind that without our allies' approval, these weapons will not get within 3,000 miles of where they would be needed. Never mind the $20 billion added to the deficit. Never mind three GAO reports stating that the weapons proposed are not ready for production.

The GAO says they won't work, our allies say they won't deploy them, and I say we cannot afford them. Let's reject the conference's open endorsement of chemical weapons.

OPERATION TIGER: A TRIBUTE

(Mrs. BYRON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to 749 American soldiers who lost their lives during Exercise Tiger, a secret preparatory operation for the Normandy invasion during World War II.

During this operation, the U.S. 4th Infantry Division losses were numbered at approximately 749 men and many more were wounded.

The Allied Military Command did little to recognize those individuals who participated. Few people have heard of this tragedy some 41 years later.

Mr. Speaker, a memorial was recently erected to honor these men who lost their lives in the line of duty. The memorial, which stands in Torcross, was not established by a military authority, but by a distinguished gentleman from England. Yesterday I had the privilege of meeting this gentleman. Mr. Ken Small of Torcross in Devon County, England, pursued, at his own expense, the idea of establishing a memorial for over 10 years. On November 9, 1984, Mr. Small's dream became a reality. On that day his memorial to those who served in the operation was dedicated.

I, personally, am proud of Mr. Small's actions and hope others will recognize his efforts to pay tribute to those who served in Operation Tiger, those fallen soliders.

SERVITE ORDER MARKS 700TH ANNIVERSARY; SERVITE FATHER LAWRENCE JENCO HELD HOSTAGE IN LEBANON

(Mr. O'BRIEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, August 25, members of the Order of Servants of Mary in the Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago met to celebrate the 700th anniversary of the death of St. Philip Benizi, an early leader of the order, known as Servites.

The Servites have been in the Chicago area for 111 years. The order has 10 religious communities in the Chicago Archdiocese and staffs 7 parishes.

Conspicuously absent from the celebrations was Father Lawrence Jenco, a Servite priest from Joliet, IL. Father Jenco has been held hostage in Lebanon since January 8, 247 days. Not a missionary nor an evangelist, Father Jenco was the head of Catholic Relief Services in Beirut when he was kidnaped. To get his help there was only one qualification—that you be in need of help.

Today also marks the 544th day of captivity for William Buckley, a U.S. Foreign Service officer.

Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister, has been held hostage in Lebanon for 491 days.

Terry Anderson, the Associated Press bureau chief in Beirut, was kidnaped March 16, 179 days ago.

Today is the 106th day of captivity for David Jacobsen, the director of the American University Hospital in Beirut.

Today is the 93d day of captivity of Thomas Sutherland, dean of the American University Agriculture School.

Today also marks the 281st day since the disappearance of Peter Kilburn, the American University librarian.

Mr. Speaker, the hostage crisis in Lebanon continues.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

(Mr. FAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the ranches and growers of our country are on the ropes. The farm economy is in shambles; the deficit has driven the dollar so high that the most efficient producer in the world, the American farmer, has been driven from world markets and into foreclosure.

If any situation demands leadership, the exercise of the bully pulpit, the President's attention and his concern, it would be the condition of American agriculture.

And what does our President engage his advisers' valuable time? And how are the unique and irreplaceable leadership qualities of the Presidency brought to bear on this crisis? The answer can be found on the pages of the style section of the Washington Post. In those pages, I learned that Patrick Buchanan has spent his valuable time arranging an Amtrak train to carry Merle Haggard and his band from Bakersfield, CA, to Illinois.

Now, I am not a cynic. I believe that Merle and Willie Nelson and Neil Young, and other country stars, are properly trying to highlight our greatest domestic crisis. But let us get the President and his hired sages working on farm policy. Time is short, Mr. Speaker, and the President should set Mr. Buchanan to work today on a speech on agricultural policy that will point the way out of this morass rather than having him acting as a train ticket agent on a rail passenger system he has tried to terminate.

We can all enjoy the music when this administration decides that it has a governmental role to play other than associating itself with good causes.

IMMIGRATION REFORM

(Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Judiciary Committee began hearings again on the issue of immigration reform, and again the legislation it is considering, H.R. 3080, includes amnesty for illegal aliens. There is no doubt that the American people want immigration reform and there is no doubt they want to see an end to the problem of illegal immigration. But there is one more important thing, Mr. Speaker, the American people do not want amnesty for illegal aliens or any lawbreakers. For those Members of this body that can't bring themselves to supporting H.R. 3080, there is an alternative, H.R. 2267, a bill I introduced in April of this year. This legislation does not contain amnesty for illegal aliens, but does include substantial increases in manpower for the INS and employer sanctions. I invite my colleagues to take a close look at H.R. 2267. It is time to regain control of America's borders.

WE MUST MAINTAIN A NETWORK OF AMERICAN FAMILY FARMS

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this week about 150 North Dakotans came to Washington, DC. They met with many Members of the House and Senate and visited with the Speaker of the House to talk about the farm problem that is creating chaos in the central part of our country.

One of them, a friend of mine, a farmer and a State legislator, Representative Allen Richards, left something with us and I read it last evening. I wanted to share a couple of paragraphs with the House because it describes in real terms what is going on out in the country. He talks about the economic devastation out in rural America. He says:

In my township, in 1980, there were 12 farmers; now there are 7. Only one retired. On the main street of my hometown, which has 1,000 people, there are 4 businesses which have closed in the last 4 years, and 3 more are on the brink.

My legislative district has 25 townships and 5 communities. Five years ago, there were 4 new car dealers; now there are 3. Five years ago, there were 4 farm tractor dealers; now there are 2. Five years ago, there were nearly 20 percent more farmers than there are today, and in 1986 there will be 10 percent less than there are today.

The point of all of this is that he says, the group that came from North Dakota says, quite appropriately, "This country had better start developing a policy that many of our allies have already developed. A policy that says it is important for this country's future to maintain a network of family farms." Our farm program does not now have that policy, and we had better get about the business of developing it. We can do it without spending a great deal of money if we spend that money the right way.

IN TRIBUTE TO JUDGE VELDE

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of our August recess—as a matter of fact, on September 1—a former distinguished Member of this body passed away. He happened to be my predecessor in the Congress, Judge Harold Velde, who served during the 81st 82d, 83d, and 84th Congresses. It was Judge Velde who gave me my start in politics because my first position here in Washington was serving as his administrative assistant.

I was asked by the family then, for memorial services held in Pekin, IL, last Saturday, to deliver a eulogy. Mr. Speaker, I include the text of that eulogy for the RECORD. Thank you.

EULOGY OF HON. HAROLD H. VELDE

Dolores, Pete, Joyce, Joan and Jim, I'm deeply touched and honored that you asked me to deliver a eulogy for your husband and father, Judge Velde.

Aside from my parents and wife, no one has played a more pivotal role in my life than the Judge, for it was he who gave me my start in politics 37 years ago.

Dolores, I suspect you may recall as I do very vividly the first time I met the Judge, because you were the Court reporter then and participated in the interview that led to my being hired, fresh out of Bradley, as a sort of "Boy Friday" or general handy man for the Judge's first general election campaign.

At the conclusion of the interview, the Judge seemed to be favorably disposed and said: "We're running our campaign on a shoestring and we can't pay you very much, but if you do a good job and I get elected, you may want to think about coming along to Washington and we can talk again about the pay."

Then in a very apologetic way, he said: "But as for now we can only pay you $30 a week."

Well, needless to say, we saw more in the association and the opportunity than in the salary. We shook hands and that was the beginning of what would become a very close relationship, kinship and friendship.

I also got to know Pete and Joan, who were just teenagers then and their mother, Olive, with whom I had to go over the mail and check the scheduling. It was a family affair. As a matter of fact when the Judge and I first went to Washington, we actually shared an apartment with our wives.

For the record, we could never forget the Judge's birthday, because it fell on April Fool's Day, and we would always make the most of that. He was a Tazewell County boy all the way and liked to talk about his early years in Manito and Sand Prairie Township.

Those were his formative years and they had a great deal to do with his makeup as a man.

We often compared notes about our respective years at Bradley University. From there he went on to graduate from Northwestern and then Law School at the University of Illinois.

The Judge began the practice of law right here in Pekin. During World War II he served in the Army Signal Corps before being tabbed for service as a special agent with the FBI.

It was his counter-intelligence work with the FBI that alerted him to the depth and magnitude of the Communist Conspiracy in our country at the time. The built-up frustrations of observing and reporting first hand knowledge to his superiors of what was really going on and seeing so little done about it would later be one of the compelling reasons for his running for Congress.

Between his service in the FBI and the U.S. House of Representatives he was elected Tazewell County judge and I know he really enjoyed sitting as a judge, for he loved the law.

When the late Everett Dirksen decided against running for reelection to the Congress, it was a natural for Judge Velde to make the race. First a spirited Primary and then a successful fall election.

It was during the next 8 years as the Judge's Administrative Assistant that I got to know him so well and learned so much.

He was a delight to work for. He had a great sense of humor. He worked long hours, but he also knew when it was time to hang it up—take a break—and have a little fun.

He was a bonafide conservative Republican in his politics. It was natural, therefore, that his best friends in the Congress on both sides of the aisle were of similar persuasion. He carried no brief for screaming liberals and they were usually his most caustic critics.

The Judge was indeed at times a very controversial figure during his tenure in the House. And he was that because there were controversial issues at stake.

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Labor Act was a red-hot issue at the time and one of the Judge's Committee assignments was the Education and Labor Committee, that dealt with it.

The Korean War was going on and the firing of General MacArthur provoked the greatest volume of mail we ever received.

The Judge had a meteoric rise in seniority on his House Committee on Un-American Activities, being elevated to the Chairmanship in only his second term. That was unprecedented!

It was on that Committee with the advent of televised coverage of committee hearings and the tenor of the times that made Judge Velde a national figure.

He didn't crave the spotlight. He just had a nasty job to do and it had to be done. The pressures and tensions of his job at the time were awesome. Yet, he acquitted himself so well with his mild mannered demeanor and judicial temperament.

There's no question in my mind that with all that he had to endure in those hectic days, it was taking its toll and certainly was a factor in his decision not to seek reelection after completing his fourth term.

Judge Velde went to Congress with a specific goal in mind—to expose to public view and attention what he rightly perceived as a clear and present danger to the security of our country. He played a very vital role at a critical time in our history.

We all should be grateful for what he did in his time to make this a better country. His was indeed distinguished service to the Republic. And when he retired voluntarily from the Congress, he went back to practicing law for another twenty years.

When he really retired he became all that much more active in his church and in Sun City, Arizona politics. He also served on the White House Conference on Aging.

As a matter of fact, his own Congressman, Eldon Rudd, told me Thursday on the House Floor that the Judge's precinct had the highest percentage of voter turnout in the State of Arizona in the last several elections.

Dolores, Pete, Joan, members of the family.

We've traversed very briefly with a lot of gaps the life of the Judge—who was a loving, devoted, strong, but gentle, good natured, wonderful husband, Dad, grandfather, dear friend to all of us and much, much more to some of us.

It's a sorrowful time for us because we all loved the Judge and we know he loved us. 75 years in this day and age is too young to die, particularly when one is so sound of mind and physically fit for his years as the Judge was, but we can never tell what the Lord's plan is for any one of us.

We do know that Hal, Harold Judge Velde lived those 75 years to the fullest. He always gave a full measure to his family, to his friends, to his community, and to his country.

Judge, we now say our farewell, grateful that you were so much a part of our lives. That will always be a cherished memory for each and every one of us.

NOW, MORE THAN EVER, WE NEED A STRONG SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

(Mr. LEHMAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, the Nation's farm credit system is on the verge of total collapse. The reason is simple: Farm income is not sufficient to permit farmers to pay their debts. In many commodities, farm prices are significantly below the cost of production, leaving farmers with little to live on and nothing with which to pay their bills.

This crisis can no longer be considered temporary or cyclical. It is chronic and systemic, and will be terminal unless properly treated. We need a trade policy that looks out for our interests. The Reagan administration has adopted a policy of unilateral disarmament in trade. We need a credit structure sensitive and flexible enough to recognize the difference between a farmer struggling through an economic crisis and a common deadbeat who willingly walks away from his bills.

Now, more than ever, we need a strong Secretary of Agriculture who is bold and imaginative and vocal and willing to make policy instead of excuses.

SUPPLY SIDE SUFFER

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, we have heard the statistics which pat the administration on the back because the poverty level is down, but the President cannot claim credit for this. It is the House Members who stood up for Social Security COLA's and rescued this country's seniors from poverty which accounts for the reduction that is really not actually true.

Figures just announced by the Census Bureau show that the poorest 40 percent of all families enjoy just 15 percent of all income. The richest 20 percent of all families enjoy 43 percent of all income. The rich get richer, the poor get poorer, and we have a new economic theory in America: It is called Supply Side Suffer.

We have an administration which merely slaps on the wrist E.F. Hutton officials for perpetrating a major fraud on the American people, but is content to watch the farmer and people lose their jobs and homes by practicing ineffective trade policies. We have yet to attack poverty and unemployment. There are at this point 3.3 million more poor children in America than there were a short 6 years ago. So today, my colleagues, I would like to give my own definition of the economic practices of America. They are called Supply Side Suffer.

THE BEHAVIOR OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT DOES NOT WARRANT A WEAKENING OF SANCTIONS

(Mr. FRANK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I have been puzzled that some people have seen a question of partisanship in the generally negative approach many of us have had to the President's effort to preempt the statutory enactment of sanctions by his own action. In the first place, the President's sanctions are, in some significant areas, weaker than those that are pending before the Congress. Many of us do not feel that the recent behavior of the South African Government is such that it should be rewarded by a weakening of sanctions.

But there is a broader institutional issue at stake as well. Traditionally, Presidents of the United States, out of a respect for democracy and the institutional strength of this country have sought to get joint legislative executive alignment behind important foreign policy arguments. Presidents of both parties have sought to do that.

Here we have the extraordinary spectacle of a President saying to a Congress, instead of us joining together so that both of the elected branches are united here, I will act unilaterally and keep you from acting. That is a reversal of what we have traditionally held to be the best way to present a united picture of America.

LET US NOT FAIL THE HOSTAGE FAMILIES IN THIS MOMENT OF NEED

(Mr. MINETA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, once again I rise to call the attention of our colleagues to the plight of seven Americans who have for so long been held hostages in Lebanon.

Now, more than ever, the families of these hostages are working together, sharing their efforts and their energies to explore every possible hope of ending this said captivity.

I urge my colleagues to join in this effort. I am convinced that if the full influence and prestige of this body and its many Members was brought to bear, we would soon be welcoming the hostages home.

I have never met the Reverend Benjamin Weir, but I have come to know and love his family. They want their father and their husband to be free. The Weir's are brave people, but there is a limit to their endurance.

Let us end their ordeal, and the ordeal of the other families.

The hostage families want to know that their Government and this Congress stands with them. Let us not fail them in this moment of need.

THE PRESIDENT'S SO-CALLED SANCTIONS

(Mr. HAYES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, once again President Reagan has misread the handwriting on the wall and has declined an opportunity to take the side of Americans who stand for the principles upon which our great Nation was founded. Rather than joining with the majority of the House and Senate in issuing concrete sanctions against the racist South African apartheid regime, the President has announced his own so-called sanctions in an attempt to sidestep a congressional veto override and to buy time for his failed policy of constructive engagement.

Even Mr. Reagan's advisers agree with administration critics who say that the President's proposals would have no significant effect upon the South African economy. Mr. Reagan has only succeeded in giving lipservice to the intent of legislation which was worked out by the House-Senate conference committee while creating a series of conditions, preconditions, and other loopholes which virtually assure the continued impotence of our Nation's southern Africa policies. Mr. Reagan's so-called sanctions call for no immediate or substantial change in our relationship with South Africa. They are merely an attempt to deflect criticism from the most tyrannical regime since Adolf Hitler's Third Reich. As a Member of Congress who has fought throughout my life for justice, equality, and opportunity for all people, I find Mr. Reagan's position to be dishonest and repugnant.

I warn our distinguished Senate colleagues and the American people not to be fooled by the President's "wolf in sheep's clothing" approach to South African apartheid. I sincerely hope that the Senate will go ahead with our efforts to align the United States of America with those people throughout the world who sincerely support the cause of democracy and self-determination for South Africa's black majority by passing the conference committee's bill.

SKEPTICISM ABOUT THE PRESIDENT'S STEPS ON APARTHEID AND TRADE

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the President's recent pronouncements on apartheid and trade have been greeted with wide skepticism by proponents in both parties of action on these two vital fronts. The source of the skepticism is clear.

The President has moved in each case, not out of choice, but because of current pressures from Congress and the American public. Whatever one may have thought of the results, the President's first term was characterized by action. The first months of the President's second term have been characterized by reaction.

As American industries have lost ground before the onslaught of subsidized imports, it has been necessary to push the President to get off the dime. As South Africa's minority has imprisoned or shot hundreds of its black majority, the President has moved only when he faced the cliff's edge of a vetoproof congressional majority.

That is why we are not, and should not, be willing to rely on executive actions or orders alone. They do not spring from clear commitment. Congress must act legislatively in each case to be certain that appropriate steps are fully and effectively taken.

CONFUSION OVER CONFERENCE REPORT ON ANTI-APARTHEID ACT

(Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I rise because there is some confusion that is being raised by those who are questioning the sincerity of those who support the Anti-Apartheid Act and the bipartisan coalition with regard to the conference report on the Anti-Apartheid Act.

Let it be known now that it is not a problem of the Democrats versus the Republicans. It is a question of what does America stand for—its values, its principles—and that should not be a partisan issue. That is why this House, by a vote of 380 to 40, voted for the conference report to impose modest but realistic restrictions on our economic activity with the apartheid regime of Pretoria.

I urge the other body not to be fooled by the political diversionary tactics of the White House to avoid any real restrictions, but to support bipartisanly the anti-apartheid conferance report.

I urge the other body today to vote for full legislative action and send the right signal to Pretoria, not the good news that the President announced, which is good for Pretoria but bad for the victims in Soweto.

WAIVING CERTAIN POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3244, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION ACT, 1986

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 261 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 261

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3244) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 2, line 4 through page 3, line 8; beginning on page 4, line 8 through page 5, line 7; beginning on page 6, lines 16 through 20; beginning on page 14, line 18 through page 15, line 9; beginning on page 16, lines 4 through 19; beginning on page 18, line 10 through page 19, line 20; beginning on page 19, line 23 through page 20, line 10; beginning on page 21, lines 16 through 19; beginning on page 21, line 23 through page 23, line 7; beginning on page 24, line 3 through page 26, line 5; beginning on page 26, line 19 through page 27, line 9; beginning on page 30, lines 7 through 16; beginning on page 31, line 20 through page 32, line 5; beginning on page 32, line 12 through page 33, line 16; beginning on page 34, lines 1 through 8; beginning on page 37, lines 14 through 17; and beginning on page 40, line 1 through page 46, line 7; and all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 6 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 2, line 4 through page 3, line 8; beginning on page 4, line 8 through page 5, line 7; beginning on page 16, lines 4 through 19; beginning on page 19, lines 3 through 20; beginning on page 24, line 3 through page 26, line 5; beginning on page 26, line 19 through page 27, line 5; beginning on page 31, line 20 through page 32, line 5; beginning on page 40, lines 6 through 12; and beginning on page 41, line 1 through page 42, line 4. It shall be in order to consider the following amendments: (1) an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of September 10, 1985, by, and if offered by, Representative Coughlin of Pennsylvania, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived; (2) an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of September 10, 1985, by, and if offered by, Representative Lewis of California, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived; and (3) an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of September 10, 1985, by, and if offered by, Representative Waxman of California, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 261 is a rule waiving points of order during the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3244, the Department of Transportation appropriation for fiscal year 1986.

Mr. Speaker, the rule does not provide for the bill's consideration since general appropriation bills are privileged under the Rules of the House. Provisions relating to time for general debate are also excluded from the rule. Customarily, general debate is limited by a unanimous-consent request by the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee prior to consideration of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 261 waives clause 2 of rule 21, which prohibits unauthorized appropriations and legislative provisions in general appropriation bills, against specified provisions of the bill. House Resolution 261 also waives clause 6 of rule 21, which prohibits reappropriations or transfers in general appropriation bills, against specified provisions in the bill. Mr. Speaker, the specified provisions of the bill which have been protected by these waivers are detailed in the rule, by reference to page and line of the transportation appropriation bill. These waivers are necessary for some of the provisions because, while authorizing legislation for the programs involved are under consideration in the legislative process, they have not yet been enacted, and because a number of paragraphs contain legislative provisions.

House Resolution 261 also makes in order the following amendments printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 10, 1985: An amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], an amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], and an amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN]. The rule waives all points of order against consideration of the amendments for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule 21, which, as I stated earlier, prohibits unauthorzed appropriations and legislative provisions in general appropriation bills.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3244 appropriates $11.1 billion in new budget authority for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for fiscal year 1986. The main provisions in the bill are in title I which provides a total of $10.5 billion in funding for the Department of Transportation. Title I appropriates $2.5 billion in new budget authority to the U.S. Coast Guard, $4 billion to the Federal Aviation Administration, $82 million for the Federal Highway Administration, $723 million for the Federal Railroad Administration, and $3 billion for the Urban Mass Transportation Administration.

Title II of the bill provides $554 million in new budget authority for transportation-related agencies. This includes appropriations of $48 million for the Interstate, Commerce Commission and $428 million for the Panama Canal Commission.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3244 would provide funding for our Nation's transportation system that is essential to commerce, industry, and a healthy economy. This is an important measure that is vital to the Federal Government and to the American people. I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 261.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker. Just by starting consideration of this rule the House has already progressed further on the Department of Transportation appropriation bill this year than it did last year.

Last year, the Rules Committee reported one rule, then went back and reported a second rule, and neither of the two rules was ever called up on the floor. The problem was that the authorizing committee and the appropriation committee did not agree on either procedure.

Mr. Speaker, this rule is similar to other rules reported for other general appropriation bills. It waives points of order because many of the appropriations in this bill are not yet authorized, and because there are provisions in this bill which constitute legislation on an appropriation bill. In addition there are some transfers of funds which could be knocked out on a point of order if not protected.

Besides providing the usual waivers requested by the committee, this rule makes in order three additional amendments and waives points of order to allow their consideration.

First, the amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] deals with the Wastway project in New York City.

Second, the amendment by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS] deals with two demonstration projects in California.

And third, the amendment by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] deals with the construction of the Los Angeles Metro rail subway system.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I insert the stated reasons for the committee's requested waivers, as follows:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

The appropriations for Office of the Secretary, salaries and expenses, and Coast Guard, operating expenses, may technically be subject to a point of order since they contain transfers of funds.

The appropriation for Coast Guard, reserve training, is not yet authorized. The necessary authorization for this appropriation is contained in S. 1160, the conference report for which is pending in the House.

The Federal Highway Administration, limitation on general operating expenses, language under highway beautification, and appropriations for railroad-highway crossings demonstration projects and Baltimore-Washington Parkway may technically be subject to a point of order.

The Federal Highway Administration appropriations for the airport highway demonstration project and the rail line consolidation project may technically be subject to points of order since the authorizing legislation for these appropriations has not been enacted and they contain transfers of funds. Authorization for these items is pending in the Public Works and Transportation Committee.

Part of the appropriation for National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, operations and research, is not authorized. The necessary authorization for this appropriation is pending in the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The appropriations for Federal Railroad Administration, railroad safety and redeemable preference shares are not authorized. The authorizations for these appropriations are contained in H.R. 2372, which passed the House on September 5, 1985. Of these, the appropriation for redeemable preference shares contains a transfer of funds.

The appropriation for Grants to the National Railroad Passenger Corporation is not authorized. Authorizing legislation for this appropriation is contained in H.R. 2266 which was reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee on May 23, 1985. This appropriation also contains a transfer of funds.

The Federal Railroad Administration appropriations for rail service assistance and Conrail commuter transition assistance may technically be subject to a point of order.

Part of the appropriation for Research and Special Programs Administration, research and special programs, is not authorized. The authorization for this item has been reported by the Public Works and Transportation, Energy and Commerce, and Judiciary Committees.

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

The appropriation for Interstate Commerce Commission, salaries and expenses, may technically be subject to a point of order since it includes a transfer of funds.

The appropriations for Panama Canal Commission, operating expenses and capital outlay, are not authorized. Authorization for these items is contained in H.R. 1784, which passed the House on May 14, 1985.

The appropriation for United States Railway Association, administrative expenses, is not authorized.

In addition, certain sections in title III of the bill, General Provisions, may be subject to a point of order. Specifically, section 311 and sections 316 through 325 are of interest to several Members.

Mr. Speaker, there was one other amendment, sought by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON] which should have been made in order, but failed to get in by a vote of 4 to 5. It would have provided for a reduction of $30 million for a railroad line in New Jersey.

Mr. Speaker, if this House is serious about ever reducing the deficit, we must have greater reductions in expenditures than appear in this appropriation bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3244, with Mr. MOAKLEY (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the gentleman for Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we submit for your consideration and for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole the bill, H.R. 3244, making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for fiscal year 1986.

Before I get into the details of this particular bill, I first want to express my appreciation to the Members who serve on the transportation appropriations subcommittee. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CARR], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK], all provided insight and perspective during the 3-month indepth review we gave to Federal transportation programs and policies during our hearing process. It is a real pleasure to serve with them. The subcommittee minority members have been equally diligent. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL], and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF], all are to be commended for the spirit of cooperation they have displayed and the commitment they have shown to developing a safe and effective transportation system for this Nation. I want to make special mention of the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], who has spent long hours in committee hearings and has displayed a broad knowledge of our transportation programs and policies. I pay tribute to his knowledge and dedication, and I want him to know of my great appreciation for his sound judgment and cooperation. We have tried to work as a team on this bill, rather than on a partisan basis. And I think that has been to the benefit of this country.

Mr. Chairman, in preparation for this bill the committee developed a hearing record contained in eight volumes amounting to 7,273 pages. Testimony was received from more than 240 witnesses including 29 Members of Congress.

The committee, I believe, has carefully reviewed the programs of the Department of Transportation and related agencies, and is recommending what we consider to be sufficient funds in light of current budgetary constraints to enable these agencies to help meet the requirements of our Nation's transportation system.

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

Mr. Chairman, the bill before you totals $26,544,587,569—of which approximately $11.14 billion is new budget authority and $15.41 billion is liquidating cash.

In addition, the bill places limitations on contract authority obligations for various programs totaling over $16.18 billion.

The bill provides for approximately 110,000 permanent positions for the agencies funded in the bill. This is slightly fewer than in fiscal year 1985 and includes 38,728 military positions for the Coast Guard, 48,002 positions for the FAA, and 5,793 civilian positions for the Coast Guard.

Mr. Chairman, in terms of new budget authority, the bill is $537.2 million, or 4.6 percent below the fiscal year 1985 level.

BUDGET RESOLUTION TARGET

I think the Members would also be interested to know that the bill as reported by the full Appropriations Committee is about $19 million under our section 302(b) allocation. With regard to just discretionary authority, we are about $200,000 below our section 302(b) allocation. As the Members know, under the Budget Act, the Budget Committee provides a lump sum allocation to the Appropriations Committee pursuant to section 302(a) and the Appropriations Committee then subdivides that among its 13 subcommittees. Our target for discretionary budget authority that was provided to us by the Committee on Appropriations is $10.75 billion and we are within that amount.

SELECTED MAJOR RECOMMENDATIONS

With respect to the major funding recommendations in this bill, I would call the attention of the Members to pages 2 and 3 of the report. The major bill highlights are as follows:

First, the appropriation of $2,449,000,000 for urban mass transportation formula grants, the same as the fiscal year 1985 appropriation;

Second, a provision providing for obligations of not to exceed $13,800,000,000 for Federal-aid highways;

Third, the appropriation of $2,679,600,000 for operations of the Federal Aviation Administration, $49,670,000 less than the budget request;

Fourth, the appropriation of $1,785,200,000, including funds derived by transfer, for operating expenses of the Coast Guard;

Fifth, a total of $616,000,000 including funds derived by transfer, for Amtrak grants;

Sixth, a provision providing for obligations of not to exceed $1,100,000,000 for the discretionary grant program of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration;

Seventh, the appropriation of $1,059,000,000 for facilities and equipment of the Federal Aviation Administration;

Eighth, a provision providing for obligations of not to exceed $1,000,000,000 for airport development and planning grants;

Ninth, the appropriation of $267,300,000 for the capital acquisition, construction, and improvement programs of the Coast Guard;

Tenth, the appropriation of $190,000,000 for the research, engineering, and development activities of the Federal Aviation Administration;

Eleventh, an increase of $38,700,000 over the budget for certain railroad-highway crossings demonstration projects; and Twelfth, the appropriation of $250,000,000 for transit projects substituted for interstate highway segments.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Chairman, for the Office of the Secretary of Transportation, the bill provides a total of $89,500,000—an increase of $33.8 million from the current level and $31.947 million above the budget. The bulk of this increase is for continuation of essential air service subsidies, which the administration proposed to eliminate. In addition, office-by-office statutory dollar breakdowns are specified in the bill for the Office of the Secretary.

COAST GUARD

With respect to the Coast Guard, the committee recommends a total program level of $2,511,622,000—which is $79.6 million below the fiscal year 1985 program level. This decrease is composed almost entirely of reductions in the Coast Guard's acquisition, construction, and improvements capital account. The committee believes such reductions are reasonable in light of the large, unexpected amounts appropriated for this activity in Defense Appropriation Acts over the last several years and the large unobligated balance of over $550 million in this account. Excluding AC&I, the bill reflects more than a $33 million increase in Coast Guard program levels between fiscal years 1985 and 1986.

The committee believes this level provides for a balanced program with emphasis on maritime law enforcement—especially drug interdiction; national defense commitments; search and rescue capabilities; dependability and safety of Coast Guard ships, boats, aircraft, and shore facilities; and the welfare and safety needs of Coast Guard personnel. We believe that this level will support a reasonable level of Coast Guard requirements for fiscal year 1986.

For Coast Guard operating expenses, the bill provides a program level of $1.785 billion for fiscal year 1986. In addition, $15 million is expected to carry over from previous appropriations and another $15 million is designated for transfer from the Navy to the Coast Guard in the 1986 defense authorization conference report. This would bring the total amount available for fiscal year 1986 Coast Guard operating expenses to $1,815,200,000—which is $46.6 million more than the amount provided in fiscal year 1985.

The bill would also provide that not less than $325 million of the operating expenses appropriation be available for drug interdiction activities. This is the first time we have carried such a provision, but it is in keeping with the committee's strong commitment to adequately funding such activities.

The operating expense funding level of $1.785 billion will support 37,051 military positions and 4,655 civilian positions. These levels are 469 military and 70 civilian positions above the budget request. The additional $15 million in the pending 1986 Defense Authorization Act would support an additional 500 military positions. Included in the recommended increase is $5 million and 150 military positions for the continued operation of all Great Lakes stations that were proposed to be closed or "seasonalized" by the administration.

For acquisition, construction, and improvements, we are recommending $267.3 million. This is comprised of $93.8 million for vessel acquisitions and improvements; $37 million for aircraft; $64.3 million for shore facilities; $18.3 million for aids to navigation; $28.4 million for command, control and communications, and related systems; and $25.5 million for administration, planning, and design.

The bill also includes $7.195 million to alter or remove bridges that are unreasonable obstructions to waterborne commerce, and $23 million for research, development, test, and evaluation.

The sum of $351.8 million is provided for the pay of retired military personnel of the Coast Guard and Coast Guard Reserve. This is based on an average of 24,298 personnel on the retired rolls.

For reserve training, the full budget request of $61.502 million is recommended. This will provide for a ready reserve of 17,800 including a selected reserve of 12,500.

For the State Recreational Boating Safety Assistance Program, we recommend an appropriation of $13.625 million. This is the same as last year's level.

The bill also contains appropriations of $1 million each for the deepwater port liability fund and the offshore oil pollution compensation fund.

FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

For the Federal Aviation Administration, we are recommending a total program of $5,040,400,000 for fiscal year 1986. This is $260,461,500 less than the enacted fiscal year 1985 level, and $166,048,000 less than the budget request. This level will provide sufficient funds to continue the restoration of the air traffic control system, continue modernization of the national airspace system, improve our airports, and continue important safety regulatory and research initiatives.

For FAA operations, the committee recommends appropriations of $2.744 billion, including $64.4 million for headquarters administration. This represents an increase of $52.5 million over the fiscal year 1985 level of $2,691,500,000. This would provide for 44.965 positions including 19,551 controllers, supervisors and support personnel for centers and towers, and 4,603 flight service station personnel.

According to FAA testimony, the air traffic control system resumed handling 1981 traffic levels in April 1984. Since then, significantly higher levels have been handled. The FAA is currently staffed at about 92 percent of its goal of 11,285 operational controllers for terminals and centers. The shortfall is mainly in the centers, which are continuing to use high levels of overtime to compensate for shortages in experienced controllers. The FAA testified that it is "shooting for" attaining 100 percent of its goal by the end of fiscal year 1985. New controller staffing goals for 1985 will be set by the FAA later this month. The FAA administrator has testified that a complement of 11,285 operational controllers "will be adequate to handle the projected traffic." We have based our budget recommendation on that assurance.

With regard to controller training, the committee has expressed concern in the report accompanying this bill about the fact that as of April about 69 percent of the FAA's controllers were "full performance level qualified." This compares to about 82 percent immediately prior to the strike. The FAA Administrator testified that he intended to reach the 82-percent figure in 1987—with interim goals of 72 percent in September 1985, and 76 percent in 1986. The committee recognizes that attaining these goals will take time, and that any shortcuts in such training could be counterproductive. Attaining these training levels has to come primarily from on-the-job experience. However, options do exist to increase the experience level of the controller work force on a short term basis, such as hiring reemployed annuitants, which the committee has directed the FAA Administrator to plan for on a contingency basis. If the FAA reports to us that additional flexibility is desirable, we will consider any necessary supplemental request.

Moving on to trust fund contributions, of the $2.744 billion provided for FAA operating expenses in fiscal year 1986, the bill specifies that $644 million, or 23.5 percent of the total, be derived from the airport and airway trust fund.

For facilities and equipment, the bill contains $1.059 billion for fiscal year 1986. This is a decrease of $299 million from the fiscal year 1985 level of $1.358 billion and is also $87.5 million below the budget request. The major reductions in this account include deletions of $13.3 million for three new turboprop aircraft, $12.75 million for construction and field site preparation for the advanced automation system, $19.2 million for various tower projects, and $5 million to begin a Loran-C navigation system.

With respect to the NAS plan, the committee has been generally satisfied with the FAA's progress in its implementation. However, we have concerns about several managerial aspects of this program, and we plan to continue to maintain close oversight of this plan throughout its implementation. Of particular concern to the committee is the FAA's ability to: First, minimize program slippages that now show up in about 30 percent of NAS plan project schedules; second, prevent large cost overruns; and third, achieve the large number of facility consolidations that will be required. We also have specific concerns about the host computer, advance automation system, and weather radar procurements that are described in the accompanying report.

With respect to FAA research, engineering, and development, the committee recommends $190 million, which is a decrease of $7.925 million from the budget request.

The bill also includes a $1 billion obligation limitation on airport development and planning grants. This is the highest funding level ever provided for this program.

The Airport and Airway Development Act of 1982 specifically provides that "the safe operation of the airport and airway system will continue to be the highest aviation priority." And it further provides that "all airport and airway programs should be administered consistent with the section of the FAA Act which specifies the assignment and maintenance of safety as the highest priority in air commerce * * *." Therefore, I believe that safety is to be the highest priority in the administration of the airport improvement program.

The bill also includes $35.4 million for the operation and maintenance of metropolitan Washington airports, and $12 million for construction projects at those airports.

The committee has also reduced the FAA's authority to borrow from the Treasury to pay defaulted aircraft purchase loans from $125 million to $10 million. Testimony indicates that the FAA has paid approximately $153 million a result of defaulted loans. The committee is alarmed at the extent of these defaults and believes that the requested borrowing authority of $125 million for fiscal year 1986 would offer virtually no incentive for the parties invloved to employ options, such as rolling over the loan or extending the payment time, to attempt to work out a potential default. The committee, therefore, has reduced the amount of borrowing authority to $10,000,000. If this is insufficient, the committee, of course, would consider a supplemental request for the payment of loan defaults.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY ADMINISTRATION

Under the Federal Highway Administration, the bill provides for a total fiscal year 1986 program level of $15.054 billion in highway aid. This includes a limitation of Federal-aid highway contract authority obligations of $13.8 billion. The total FHWA program level is $767.8 million more than the budget request and almost $696 million more than that provided in fiscal year 1985.

The bill provides a total of $204.5 million for FHWA administrative expenses, an increase of $739 thousand from the budget request. Included in this amount is $5 million to support a minority business bonding demonstration program. The committee expects the FHWA to implement this program without further delay.

The bill also contains an appropriation of $38.7 million for railroad-highway crossings demonstration projects in six different cities.

A $10 million limitation on highway-related safety grants is also contained in the bill for fiscal year 1986, the same as the budget request, and an appropriation of $8.5 million is recommended for highway safety research and development, which is the same as last year's level.

The committee recommends funds for four additional items not in the budget request: $2.75 million for an airport-highway demonstration project, $5 million for a rail line consolidation demonstration project, $6.5 million for reconstruction of a section of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, and a provision extending the availability of highway beautification funds.

The committee also recommends continuing the motor carrier safety grant program at $14 million, which is the current rate, and providing $13.9 million for the operations and research of the bureau of motor carrier safety.

NATIONAL HIGHWAY TRAFFIC SAFETY ADMINISTRATION

For the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the bill includes $89.365 million for operations and research. This is $8.736 million less than the program level proposed in the budget request, and $7.823 million more than the fiscal year 1985 level.

The bill also reserves $10 million of this appropriation to initiate a 3-year pilot project to implement the recommendations contained in the National Academy of Science's report Injury in America. The committee is hopeful that the research recommendations in that report can produce larger payoffs in the injury-related research work currently funded by the NHTSA.

The committee also recommends a limitation on obligations for the State and Community Highway Safety Grant Program of $126.5 million—the same as the current rate.

For the Alcohol Safety Incentive Grants Program, we have established a limitation on obligations of $28.8 million in fiscal year 1986. This corresponds to NHTSA's estimate of fiscal year 1986 obligations for this program.

For safety education and information grants, we have established a combined fiscal year 1983, 1984, 1985, and 1986 obligation limitation of $5 million. The committee expects to assess the results of past and ongoing media campaigns before it will recommend additional funding for such purposes.

FEDERAL RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Chairman, for the Federal Railroad Administration, major recommendations include $28 million for rail safety, $11.2 million for research and development, $20.2 million for rail service assistance, $35.5 million for the redeemable preference share program (including $5.5 million by transfer), and $10 million for Conrail commuter transition assistance.

For Amtrak, we are recommending the sum of $616 million (including $15 million derived by transfer). Of course, the President proposed deleting all Amtrak funds. The amount we are recommending is a 10-percent reduction from last year's level. We expect that all existing routes and services will be maintained at this funding level—including section 403(b) and 403(d) service under the existing funding formulas. Bill language is also included continuing the statutory conditions for rehabilitating and operating a new route between Philadelphia and Atlantic City, and establishing a 60-percent Federal match for the Westside connector project in New York City.

In addition, the bill includes $12.5 million for Northeast corridor capital improvements. This sum will be of direct benefit to Amtrak.

URBAN MASS TRANSPORTATION ADMINISTRATION

For the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, the committee recommends a total program level of $4,108,603,000 for fiscal year 1986. This is $2,731,198,000 more than the budget request, but $42,897,000 less than the enacted fiscal year 1985 level.

Under the Formula Grant Program, the committee recommends an appropriation of $2,449,500,000, which is the same as the fiscal year 1985 level. The administration proposed the elimination of this appropriation for fiscal year 1986. The committee's recommendation would provide operating assistance in accordance with the formulas established in the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 which was signed by the President on January 6, 1983.

The bill also includes language limiting obligations for transit discretionary grants to $1.1 billion. This amount corresponds to the authorized level in the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982. The committee report also makes various allocations under the discretionary grant program.

The bill includes $250 million for transit projects that have been substituted for interstate highway projects. Of this amount, 50 percent is to be distributed on a formula basis and 50 percent on a discretionary basis. The discretionary funds will be distributed as stated in the committee report.

The bill would also appropriate $250 million under the so-called Stark-Harris authorization to continue construction of the Washington Metrorail system.

The bill provides $59.1 million for research and administrative expenses of UMTA.

Under the general provisions title of the bill, letters of intent are mandated for three new start rail transit projects, authorization is provided for the reallocation of certain section 5 funds apportioned in fiscal years 1982 and 1983, a directive is given to UMTA to reapportion lapsing section 5 funds, and authorization is provided for the use of certain UMTA funds for construction management activities.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

The bill limits the administrative expenses of the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation to $1.890 million, $52,000 less than the budget request.

RESEARCH AND SPECIAL PROGRAMS ADMINISTRATION

For the Research and Special Programs Administration, the bill contains $19.4 million, $500,000 more than the fiscal year 1985 level.

INSPECTOR GENERAL

For the Office of the Inspector General, the bill includes an appropriation of $27,950,000. This is $258,000 more than the budget request.

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

Title II of the bill contains $554,127,569 in new buget authority for six transportation-related agencies and commissions. This is $20,939,000 below the cumulative budget requests, and $56,593,376 below last year's level.

More specifically, the committee is recommending $2 million for the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board, $22,400,000 for the National Transportation Safety Board, a total of $50.48 million for the Interstate Commerce Commission, $427.784 million for the Panama Canal Commission, $2.1 million for the United States Railway Association, and $51,663,569 for the Federal share of interest payments for the bonded indebtedness of the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority.

Mr. Chairman, last, I would inform the Members that at the appropriate time I plan to offer an amendment to reduce the amounts in the bill by $1 billion to bring the bill more in line with congressional efforts to reduce the deficit. I will explain my amendment in detail during the reading of the bill.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3244, the fiscal year 1986 transportation appropriations bill. The bill provides, as the chairman has pointed out, more than $11 billion in new budget authority, which is an increase of $3 billion over the $7.8 billion requested in the budget. However, the amount is $537 million less than the amounts enacted to date for similar activities in fiscal year 1985. So it is very fair to say that this bill is a freeze at last year's levels and is certainly not a budget buster. It is a freeze.

There are $15 billion recommended to liquidate contract authorizations, and $16 billion are recommended to limit obligations on contract authority programs.

I might say that it is a tremendous pleasure for me to have the opportunity to work with Chairman BILL LEHMAN, who is a friend and who knows the transportation field like he knows the back of his hand. Certainly there is no more fair and compassionate Member in this body, and also no better salesman, I might add, and no better advocate for transportation.

With other subcommittee members, such as SILVIO CONTE, CARL PURSELL, FRANK WOLF, MARTY SABO, BILL GRAY, BOB CARR, DICK DURBIN, and BOB MRAZEK, it is a treat to be associated with such an illustrious group. My thanks go as well to the staff who worked on this bill, Jeff Jacobs and Kenny Kraft for the minority, Tom Kingfield, Greg Dahlberg, Lucy Hand, Linda Muir, and Janet Oakley for the majority.

Chairman LEHMAN has already explained what is in the bill, so I will not go into great detail to repeat what he has said.

I might say that this is a tremendously important bill, however. It does indeed provide the funding for critical programs for highways across this great Nation of ours, for all airports and airways, for the Coast Guard and waterways, for Amtrak and for mass transit.

Let me say, as I have said so often in the past, that the Federal Government has assumed a responsibility for transportation that is historic. Going back indeed to the days of the Roman Empire and before, federal governments have always assumed responsibility for providing transportation between communities.

These are the ties that bind our great land, allow our people the ability to move from place to place, provides the mobility for which Americans are so famous, and, indeed, bring this land together.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

(By unanimous consent, Mr. JONES of North Carolina was allowed to speak out of order.)

THE TITANIC MARITIME MEMORIAL ACT OF 1985

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am today introducing a bill to designate the shipwreck of the ocean liner, the Titanic, as a maritime memorial to the men and women who were aboard when she sank on April 14, 1912. This bill is intended to protect the wreckage, which is of national and international historical, scientific, and cultural signficance.

The Titanic was the largest, most luxurious oceanliner of its time. She was considered invincible when, on her maiden voyage, an iceberg cut a 300-foot gash below the water line. Although more than 700 passengers were saved, well over twice that number perished. This major maritime disaster resulted in improved vessel safety regulations.

The wreckage of the Titanic lies off the coast of Newfoundland, in international waters. It is well preserved in the cold, anoxic North Atlantic waters, 2.5 miles below the ocean's surface. The ocean environment in which the Titanic rests provides a unique opportunity for scientists to conduct deep ocean scientific research and exploration. Through well-planned, collaborative research efforts, much can be learned about the processes of corrosion and preservation at the depths of the sea floor. This knowledge could result in better understanding of whether the deep ocean may be the proper environment for other ocean activities.

An objective of this bill is to ensure that the Titanic is maintained intact, where she rests on the sea floor, while the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] establishes national guidelines for conducting research on, and exploration and salvage of the wreckage.

Because the Titanic was originally owned and insured by British firms, sank off the coast of Canada, in international waters, was discovered through the collaborative efforts of an American expedition and a French expedition, and is the gravesite of men and women from several different nations of the world, the shipwreck is of international significance. Therefore, this bill directs the United States to negotiate with Great Britain, France, Canada, and other interested nations to establish an international agreement which will protect the scientific and cultural significance of the Titanic. This agreement shall be consistent with the guidelines promulgated by NOAA.

In 1975, NOAA designated the Monitor National Marine Sanctuary to protect the shipwreck of the U.S.S. Monitor off the coast of North Carolina. Together with the National Trust for Historic Preservation, NOAA convened a national conference to develop a structured research program to document, map and survey the shipwreck. Since then a master plan has been designed to govern activities related to the shipwreck. Research is being carried out in a highly productive manner. The experience with the U.S.S. Monitor demonstrates the importance of a carefully planned research effort, and could serve as a model for activities relating to the shipwreck Titanic.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the gentleman from Florida would engage in a colloquy with me.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Yes, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. WISE. As the gentleman may know, I have been active in trying to promote the increased use of methanol as a transportation fuel in automobiles and buses. In this regard, I have been working with officials of my regional transportation district [KRT] in Charleston, WV, to put together a mass transit demonstration program employing methanol buses. KRT's intent would be to analyze the performance of this fleet in operations maintenance, and other characteristics to see if methanol is indeed the way to go. Is it the committee's intention that the funding under the appropriation for the Urban Mass Transportation Administration can be used for just this sort of purpose?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Yes, the gentleman is correct. Funding under the research, training, and human resources, the formula grants, and the discretionary grants programs may be used for just the sort of purpose that you indicate.

Mr. WISE. Is it the committee's intent that the Department of Transportation should be encouraged to look favorably on UMTA grant proposals that deal with the development of methanol bus fleets?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. The committee certainly feels that the Department of Transportation should give these applications a high priority. Methanol development has been a high priority of the gentleman from West Virginia, and I can understand his desire to see it grow. I would encourage the gentleman from West Virginia to pursue with the Department his desire to expand the use of methanol-powered buses, and am glad to assist him in this regard.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from Florida.

I would ask the Chairman, the gentleman from Florida, his subcommittee has been very supportive of aviation airports and I want to thank the gentleman and also the ranking minority member and all of the members for that support. I think it is very important for economic growth.

During the hearings with the FAA this year, the need for a glide slope at the Ardmore Industrial Airport was discussed. I visited with Mr. CARR. He has been down in that area also.

As the gentleman knows, the addition of a glide slope to the localizer equipment at Ardmore would provide this particular area with a needed complete instrument landing system, which is very much needed.

The use of Ardmore's landing site for both private and military aircraft continues to rise due in large part to its prime location between Dallas and Oklahoma City and its runways in that area.

Would the chairman agree that it is the intent of the committee that the FAA continue to work with the city of Ardmore in meeting the pending request for a glide slope at the Ardmore Industrial Airport?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Yes. I would hope that the FAA would work closely with Ardmore and make every effort to look seriously at the glide slope request and move forward on it in the future.

I want to commend the gentleman for bringing this up.

I visited with his constitutents from the city of Ardmore yesterday. I enjoyed the meeting with them and if the gentleman keeps working as hard as he has with this committee, this will not be the Ardmore Industrial Airport. This will be the Ardmore International Airport.

Mr. WATKINS. I will relay that back down there.

I want to thank the chairman for concurring and I want to thank the ranking minority member and the entire committee and Mr. CARR for taking some precious time to come to my area and to be there at the Ardmore Airport and seeing the potential for a high unemployment, low per capita area, strategically located between Dallas and Oklahoma City and the great potential it has if we can actually provide the structure; so again, I thank the chairman.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend my colleagues on H.R. 3244, the Department of Transportation appropriations for fiscal year 1986, which is below last year's level and has been brought into conformity with the budget resolution. The committee has exhibited significant restraint in the struggle to deal with our staggering deficits.

I also applaud my colleagues on the Transportation Subcommittee for accomplishing this while at the same time preserving adequate Coast Guard protection for the recreational and commercial users of the Great Lakes.

Earlier this year, the OMB directed the Coast Guard to cut $5 million from the Guard's operating expenses and mandated that all of these cuts be made in the Great Lakes region. The Coast Guard responded with a plan to close down a number of stations and manning others during the summer months only.

It was obvious to all that this would have greatly increased the rescue response time in many parts of the Great Lakes. On Lake Michigan, the planned closure of the Chicago Air Station in Glenview, IL, would have largely eliminated all airborne rescue services from southern Lake Michigan. The planned closure of Chicago Air Station was announced only days after the station's helicopters conducted a dramatic rescue of fishermen locked in ice off Waukegan harbor.

I applaud the committee's efforts in bringing this bill under last year's level without cutting life-saving services vital to those who use the Great Lakes.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman. I rise in strong support of H.R. 3244, the Fiscal Year 1986 Department of Transportation Appropriations Act and I wish to commend Chairman BILL LEHMAN, the ranking minority member, LARRY COUGHLIN, and the other members of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Transportation for their fine work in developing this bill.

I especially applaud the work of the members of the subcommittee in recognition of the importance of maintaining our Nation's transportation systems, which are essential to maintaining the quality of life for our Nation's citizens. In many of our urban areas, such as the Cleveland metropolitan area, the availability of Federal assistance is especially critical to correcting safety and traffic problems caused by rapidly deteriorating roads and bridges. H.R. 3244, which includes appropriations totaling $55.4 million for interstate substitute transfer grants for highway and transit projects in the Cleveland metropolitan area., Will go a long way toward helping our region maintain a high quality of public transportation services. The funds provided in this bill will also help to fulfill the Federal commitment made to Ohio in 1979, when Cleveland relinquished funds for a 7.9-mile segment of Interstate I490 because of other highway and transit needs were more important to the maintenance of Cleveland's transportation system. These interstate substitute investments were then, and remain today, vital to Ohio's economy. Six years later, however, Ohio has received less than 43 percent of the substitute highway funds and only 27 percent of the substitute transit funds committed when the initial agreement was approved.

Mr. Chairman, the Cleveland metropolitan area has a strong record of utilizing Federal transportation dollars in a wise and effective manner. The projects which will be funded utilizing the resources provided in H.R. 3244 entail the reconstruction and renewal of basic transportation services. Commitments have already been made by local governments for the requisite non-Federal matching funds. These projects were identified as urgent in 1979 by local, State, and Federal agencies. They are needed even more critically now 6 years later.

Mr. Chairman, we can be proud and take comfort in the fact that Federal transportation dollars help our Nation's cities make needed investments in their infrastructures, their economies and their people. H.R. 3244 deserves our strong support.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. MINETA

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. MINETA: Page 9, line 10, strike out "$2,679,600,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,694,600,000".

Page 10, line 7, strike out "$1,059,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,044,000,000".

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will add $15 million to the Aviation Standards account of the Federal Aviation Administration's operations to increase the staff of FAA's air carrier and general aviation operations and maintenance inspection program. The $15 million will not add to the overall Department of Transportation appropriation because I am also offering a companion amendment to reduce the facilities and equipment account by $15 million. Savings of far more than $15 million have been achieved recently in activities financed by the facilities and equipment account as a result of lower than expected contract award costs for modernization of the enroute air traffic control computers.

Beginning in 1983, the House became very concerned over administration cuts in the FAA's airline safety inspection work force. At that time, we were in the middle of nearly a 25-percent cut in the field inspectors and support staff charged with ensuring that airlines transporting the travelling public are being operated and maintained safely.

This 25 percent cut came at the same time that the number of airlines was increasing and many of the more established airlines were fundamentally changing the nature of their operations. This past cut was simply the wrong direction to go at the wrong time, given the changed environment resulting from the 1978 deregulation of entry to domestic routes and of domestic airline fares.

When we deregulated domestic route entry and fares, the Congress did not deregulate the safety standards we expected the airlines to meet. Nor did we ease up on the responsibilities of the Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration to administer aviation safety requirements and regulations.

Congress succeeded in getting those cut inspector positions restored in 1984, but my honorable and distinguished colleague, Chairman LEHMAN, and I have continued to be concerned that the FAA did not have enough people to adequately inspect the Nation's airlines. We commissioned the General Accounting Office to conduct a survey of FAA's inspections of 92 airlines in 1984. What they found was very disturbing. Some airlines received virtually no inspections by FAA. In other words, for those airlines, FAA had no means to know whether those airlines were being operated and maintained according to regulations and standards. At the same time, there appeared to be no strong correlation between the extent and type of services provided by various air carriers and the level and nature of safety inspections performed by FAA. It has become very clear to me that the FAA does not have the staff and resources required to assure the public that our Nation's air carriers are conducting safe operations.

This amendment will increase the authorized positions for aircraft operations and maintenance inspectors by 200. It will also provide an increase in the support staff so that the FAA can best utilize these additional inspectors as well as their existing field inspectors. As pointed out by the GAO study, there is overwhelming need for FAA to standardize the air carrier and general aviation operations and maintenance inspection and certification procedures, handbooks and guidance. In view of the disparities found throughout FAA's regions, 100 directional, administrative, and clerical support positions are being added here for FAA headquarters and the field structure.

Mr. Chairman, recent tragic events have generated much public concern about the safety of the Nation's air transportation system. I want to assure my colleagues and the public from my perspective as chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation that flying is safe. However, it does not matter how safe the system may be or how good aviation safety statistics may look if the public is not confident that it is safe to board an airplane. I believe my amendment will be an important step toward keeping it that way and toward restoring the public's confidence in aviation safety.

I urge my colleagues to join in support of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the very distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN], who chairs the Subcommittee on DOT Appropriations.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I certainly have no objection to the amendments of the gentleman from California. We have both expressed concern about the effectiveness of FAA's aircraft certification and inspection activities and have jointly requested a GAO review of these activities. The initial GAO report indicates that there are inconsistencies and, perhaps, inadequacies in the FAA Certification Program.

I commend the gentleman for his leadership in this area and support his amendments.

Mr. MINETA. I thank the chairman very much.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield to our very fine colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

Mr. COUGHLIN. I want to commend the gentleman for his amendment.

This certainly has not been a good year for aviation in this country or abroad. I guess there are tremendous concerns about the safety of our aviation equipment, and I support the gentleman's efforts. I think it is a very valuable amendment.

Mr. MINETA. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINETA. I am pleased to yield to my very fine colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT], the ranking Republican on the Aviation Subcommittee of our Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that citizens everywhere have been shocked and saddened by the number of recent airline accidents. It has been reported that 1985 is the worst year ever for aviation safety. This is particularly troublesome since it follows several years where the airlines established records for their safety performance.

I am convinced that the airline system in this country remains basically safe but I am equally convinced that constant vigilance is necessary to maintain a high level of safety. Therefore, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA], the chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee.

As he has stated, this amendment would add $15 million for 200 additional Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] safety inspectors and 100 additional support staff. Since 1981, FAA staffing in the flight standards safety area has decreased substantially. This occurred at a time when many new carriers were starting or expanding service as a result of deregulation.

I believe that Secretary Dole recognizes the problems that this reduction in inspectors can cause. Last month she released a report prepared by her safety review task force which recommended improvements in the FAA Flight Standards Safety Program. The Administrator of the FAA, Donald Engen, in commenting on the task force report, acknowledged that improvements were needed and committed his agency to carrying out its recommendation.

I believe that the addition of the new safety inspectors funded by this amendment would go a long way toward helping Secretary Dole and Administrator Engen carry out their commitment to safety.

It is also important to note that this amendment will not increase the overall transportation appropriation. The additional $15 million for inspectors will come out of the more than $1 billion that this bill would appropriate for aviation facilities and equipment. The amendment therefore would not in any way affect the overall budget figures or the deficit.

Of course, as a practical matter, the FAA will not be able to hire all the new inspectors at once and thus may not be able to spend all of the $15 million in 1 year. But this amendment will get them started in the right direction. I am confident that Administrator Engen will do his best to comply.

I, therefore, support this amendment and commend Mr. MINETA for offering it. I would also like to thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. WHITTEN, the ranking Republican, Mr. CONTE, and the leadership of the Transportation Subcommittee, Mr. LEHMAN and Mr. COUGHLIN for their fine work on this difficult and important appropriations measure.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINETA. I am pleased to yield to our very fine colleague on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI].

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in very strong support of this amendment. I commend the gentleman for something that is long overdue.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, when we deregulated domestic route entry and fares, the Congress did not deregulate the safety standards that we expect the airlines to meet, nor did we ease up on the responsibilities of the Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration to administer aviation safety requirements and regulations.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join in support of this amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Aviation Subcommittee chairman, Mr. MINETA. The Committee on Public Works and Transportation has been deeply involved in the Federal Aviation Administration's airline safety inspection program and has consistently resisted administration efforts to cut inspectors. We must allow no deterioration in the Government's ability to ensure that our Nation's airlines are being operated and maintained safely.

This amendment to provide $15 million to increase the inspection work force by 300 people is a relatively small dollar amount in the grand scheme of things, but each of these dollars will be a dollar spent directly on aviation safety. The public is concerned about the safety of the air transportation system in light of some of the recent accidents, and they are asking what is being done to ensure that flying is safe. More safety inspectors and a better inspection program will have direct benefits for aviation safety. I urge my colleagues to join in support of the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] to increase the number of air safety inspectors.

As we all know, there has been a recent surge in the number of airline accidents. Although none of these accidents have yet been tied directly to a lack of inspectors, there can be no doubt that these accidents raise doubts in the traveling public's mind about aviation safety. The reduction in the number of safety inspectors over recent years certainly does nothing to reassure them. This amendment should help restore that confidence.

In addition, there have been rapid and significant changes in the aviation environment in recent years. These changes have resulted from vastly accelerated technological advances and economic deregulation. These have raised concerns that the changes could lead to a reduction in aviation safety. Studies have shown that the airline industry is adapting well to these changes and that overall there has been no diminution in safety. But the question remains whether a reduced FAA inspector work force can keep pace with the industry and the changing environment. I believe that now is the appropriate time to move forward and increase the number of safety inspectors in order to better meet the challenges they now face.

I am also pleased that this amendment will not have any effect whatsoever on the overall budget or the deficit. The $15 million for additional inspectors will come out of the facilities and equipment account. Prior savings in that area allow this to be done without any harm to other important aviation programs.

I therefore support this amendment and urge my colleagues to do the same.

I would also like to thank Mr. MINETA for offering this amendment and the members of the Appropriations Committee for their fine work on this appropriations bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to page 8 for the purpose of offering one amendment only.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman explain why he is going back to this earlier portion of the bill?

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that I was on the other side of the aisle discussing another amendment and was not aware of the fact that that section was being called at that time. I intended to offer the amendment at that time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Is this in regard to the Coast Guard?

Mr. MOLINARI. Yes; it is.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Is this in regard to the recruiting methods and funding that deals with recruiting methods of the Coast Guard?

Mr. MOLINARI. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MOLINARI

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOLINARI: On page 8, after line 17, add the following new section: "With regard to section 2901(a)(1) of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (98 Stat. 1207), the Coast Guard will conform to the standards adopted by the Department of Defense.".

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment, which does not add any money to the bill, is to ensure that the Coast Guard will have within its budget the same authorizations and restrictions imposed upon the Department of Defense with regard to its ability to provide training for its regulars and reservists.

The restriction of funds previously authorized and funded to the Coast Guard for training purposes, travel, and per diem relating thereto, has seriously curtailed the necessary training of reservists, Regulars, and recent volunteers just coming on board. In this day of high tech and new programs introduced affecting intelligence gathering and drug interdiction it is imperative we give this line of defense the best available training to go along with the equipment this Congress has previously authorized.

It is my understanding that the Departments of State, Treasury, Justice, and Defense have exempted themselves from restrictions under section 2901 of the act. The importance of the Coast Guard, with its missions of defense and drug interdiction along with others, is vital to our national security and should be permitted to exercise the same options in its training programs as the agencies I have mentioned.

Repeating what I have previously stated, this amendment does not add 1 cent to the budget. In fact, with the end of this fiscal year just a few weeks away, it will not even restore to the Coast Guard funding previously appropriated. It will, however, insure against administrative cuts in this category from funds appropriated for the next fiscal year.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLINARI. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection on this side to the gentleman's amendment, and we will be glad to accept it.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the overall effect of the amendments we are now considering en bloc is to reduce the spending authority provided in this bill by $1 billion. None of these reductions is desirable, but I think that they are all necessary given the large budget deficits this country faces and the expressed desire of this body for greater efforts to get our budget under control.

The net effect of this amendment is to reduce the amounts in the bill by roughly 4 percent. But I have considered the unique requirements of each and every account in the bill and have taken great care to spread the reductions more fairly than the administration proposed to do.

Some may ask why I simply did not make this a 4-percent across-the-board reduction—which seems the fairest approach at first glance. The reasons I rejected this approach are simply that some accounts are better able to absorb reductions than other accounts, and some accounts already have taken more reductions than other accounts. For instance, a 4-percent reduction in FAA operations would yield about $110 million, but would lay off many air traffic controllers and, in my view, jeopardize the safety of the air traffic control system. A 4-percent cut in Coast Guard operating expenses could jeopardize our Federal drug interdiction efforts. The bill has already reduced FAA's facilities and equipment appropriation by $299 million from last year's level, and has similarly reduced the Coast Guard's acquisition, construction and improvements account by $113 million.

Specifically, these amendments would make the following reductions:

First, reduce the airport grant limitation on obligations by $75 million—from $1 billion to $925 million. The effect of this reduction would be to continue this program at last year's rate—which was the highest funding level in this program's history.

Second, reduce the Federal-aid highway program limitation on obligations from $13.8 billion to $13.25 billion. This also would have the effect of continuing the Federal-aid highway program at the fiscal year 1985 rate—still the highest rate in this program's history.

Third, rescind $8 million from the unobligated balance of Conrail labor protection. Conrail now has in excess of $900 million in the bank and should, therefore, be required to pay its labor protection requirements from its own funds.

Fourth, reduce Amtrak grants by $12.5 million—from a total of $616 million to a total of $603.5 million. This represents a cumulative reduction of 11.4 percent from the fiscal year 1985 level of $684 million.

Fifth, reduce UMTA mass transit formula grants by $239.5 million—from $2,449,500,000 to $2,210,000,000. This represents a 9.8-percent reduction from the fiscal year 1985 level. I would point out that the reductions would affect only capital funds—the current $870 million level for operating assistance would be unaffected by this amendment.

Sixth, reduce the mass transit discretionary grant obligation limitation by $90 million—from $1.1 billion to $1.01 billion. This represents an 8.2-percent total reduction, and a 10-percent reduction for each new start earmark except for Santa Clara, which is under a full funding contract. Those revised funding allocations would be as follows:

Bus and bus facilities	$115,000,000
Existing rail modernization and extensions	435,000,000
New systems and new extensions	380,000,000
Planning	50,000,000
Elderly and handicapped	25,000,000
Innovative techniques and technology introduction	5,000,000
New systems
Los Angeles (rail construction)	117,000,000
Portland (light rail)	8,100,000
Seattle (bus tunnel)	24,300,000
Miami (circulator)	36,000,000
Santa Clara (light rail)	65,000,000
Atlanta (rail construction)	63,000,000
Houston (busways)	49,500,000
St. Louis (light rail engineering and design)	9,000,000
San Diego (light rail)	8,100,000

I want to stress that, aside from these revised dollar allocations, this amendment should not be interpreted as changing or modifying in any way the directives contained in the committee report.

Seventh, an amendment is also included that would reduce interestate transfer-transit grants by $12.5 million—from $250 million to $237.5 million. This will necessitate a 5-percent pro rata reduction in the interstate transfer-transit discretionary allocations. The revised discretionary allocations would be as follows:

Sacramento	$11,400,000
Chicago	66,500,000
Boston	23,750,000
Duluth	475,000
New Jersey	2,375,000
Cleveland	14,250,000

Eighth, an amendment is also included reducing Washington Metro grants by $12.5 million—from $250 million to $237.5 million.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to these eight substantive amendments, four technical amendments are also included in the package to bring various provisions in conformance with the reductions I have just discussed.

In summation, I want to stress to the Members that these are extraordinary reductions for an extraordinary time. I think these are responsible reductions given our budgetary circumstances, and are eminently more fair than the reductions that have been proposed by others. These reductions spread the pain as evenly as possible across socio-economic lines and across modal transportation lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, these reductions are in response to the message that we have been getting when we went back home, and in response to the mood I think that exists in the House of Representatives today, and I urge the adoption of these amendments.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. On page 12 where he is reducing the grant-in-aid program for AIP from $1 billion to $925 million, it was my understanding that in these amendments none of the aviation funding was going to be touched, given the fact that this is aviation trust fund money, and there is sufficient income coming in from the ticket tax and the other sources to be able to continue full funding for grant-in-aid program for airports. I would just like to inquire of the chairman about this provision.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINETA. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I understand the gentleman's concern. As he knows, this is trust fund money and the money will remain there.

I am just dealing with the problems of actual expenditures for this year. As I have stated before, the airport grant program still is at least year's level. The reduction certainly does not directly affect the safety of aviation.

I would hope the gentleman could support this amendment. We have tried to, as I said, make the pain of these reductions as even as possible, and I would not make the $75 million reduction in this airport limitation if I did not have to, but I think we have to in order to keep a balanced reduction.

Mr. MINETA. If I may reclaim my time at this point, one of the concerns that I have is that noise compatibility programs are part of this section. As we have gone to the hub and spoke operations in the airline industry, we are now getting more operations at many airports. At hub airports, more airplanes are landing and taking off because of the hub-and-spoke operation which the airlines have gone to. This is creating noise problems.

Since the noise compatibility program is also a part of this section, it concerns me that the amendment would reduce the minimum requirements for that portion of the grants-in-aid program.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. This has been a concern of the gentleman from California, I know. It has also been my concern. We have tried to work together on noise compatibility. I would hope we could make some legislative history urging that of the $925 million which still remains, that noise compatibility remain a top priority of this program, and I would work with the gentleman throughout this fiscal year to monitor this. If the gentleman would yield further, this is a very small reduction compared to some of the reductions we made in other programs such as mass transit. So everybody has got to hurt a little bit during a year such as we are faced with.

Mr. MINETA. If the distinguished gentleman would agree, could I ask that the mimimum noise set-aside of 8 percent be based on the $1 billion rather than on the $925 million.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I would be more than happy to do so to the extent that the statute would allow it to be done.

Mr. MINETA. I wonder if we could keep that relationship there.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. If at all possible under the statute, I would urge the FAA to do as the gentleman requests.

Mr. MINETA. In the present law, the 8 percent set-aside for noise programs is a mimimum and FAA is free to spend more than that on noise programs.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. This is an appropriation bill, and I do not know whether we could do that kind of authorizing legislation in this bill. I certainly could indicate that this would be the intent of this committee to implement it at that level.

Mr. MINETA. And if I may ask about page 9, line 11, the amendment reducing the $644 million, what does that do?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. It conforms with the authorizing legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MINETA was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I did not catch the gentleman's explanation of the purpose of the amendment on the $644 million.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. If the gentleman would yield, it conforms with the authorizing formula in regard to the trust fund share.

Mr. MINETA. Very well. The amendment only reduces the amount of the funding for operations which can be taken from the trust fund.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments en bloc offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill making appropriations for the Department of Transportation for fiscal year 1986.

The Subcommittee on Transportation, on which I have served since its creation in 1967, has worked long and hard to bring this bill before the House. I would like to pay special tribute to our chairman, BILL LEHMAN, and our ranking minority member, LARRY COUGHLIN, for their many hours in hearings and preparation of this bill.

As it stands, this bill provides $11.1 billion in new budget authority to meet the vital transportation needs of our Nation, an amount that is $537 million below last year's level. Our chairman has offered amendments that would reduce certain accounts by a total of approximately $1 billion, which would enable us to meet the overall transportation function assumptions in the budget resolution.

I do not want to repeat all of the remarks that have been made outlining the provisions of this bill, but I would like to highlight a few items of particular interest and concern.

For the Coast Guard's operating expenses, we have provided $1.78 billion, including $786.8 million for military personnel compensation. This will permit a military personnel level of 37,051, an amount that is lower than last year but still 469 positions above the budget request. After holding extensive hearings, it became clear that in order to continue our antidrug effort in the Southeastern United States without detracting from the Coast Guard's traditional activities elsewhere in the country, it would be necessary to provide more personnel than the budget had requested. The amount provided will do that, and will, I might point out to my friends from the Great Lakes, permit the continued operation of all Great Lakes Coast Guard stations.

Under the Federal Railroad Administration, the committee has recommended $616 million for Amtrak, a 10-percent cut from last year's level. Based upon our testimony, it is clear that any further reduction would force Amtrak to reduce service and downgrade frequencies to an unacceptable extent. Amtrak is an important transportation resource that every year receives less and less of its support from the Federal Government. The members of the committee strongly supported its continued operation.

The other items in the bill, including spending for highways, aviation, and urban transit, have been covered by our chairman. I would like to mention one provision having to do with the Transportation Systems Center in Cambridge, MA. This is the Department of Transportation's major research facility, and the bill prohibits any change in its current Federal status. This facility is a tremendous resource, and it was the conclusion of the committee that it should remain a Transportation Department facility.

Finally, let me say that at the appropriate time, I will support the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] to prohibit the use of interstate highway funds for the landfill portion of the Westway project in New York City. The landfill for this multibillion-dollar project is really a real estate development posing as a highway. In addition, this landfill will do tremendous damage to our national effort to restore the striped bass, or rockfish, to U.S. waters, by destroying the most important striped bass habitat on the east coast after the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. Chairman, at a time when we are spending millions of dollars to clean up the Chesapeake Bay, we should certainly not be letting New York spend millions of Federal highway dollars to destroy this valuable habitat.

I want to commend the chairman once again. He just took a very courageous stand with his amendment reducing this bill by $1 billion. I hope that the Congressmen and Congresswomen, who are in their offices and who will come here finally for the rollcall on final passage, will take that into consideration and not offer any across-the-board cuts. We opposed across-the-board cuts in committee because they would severely damage two agencies, at least, which cannot afford a single dollar to be cut. One is FAA, where there is a shortage of controllers, and of course we do not want any more airplanes coming down from the skies. It would also cut the Coast Guard, which is already bare-bones right now. At the present time the Coast Guard could use a lot more money than is in this budget.

I hope my colleagues will take that into consideration when we get to final passage. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this bill and to support the Coughlin amendment.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his support of this legislation and for his service on this subcommittee. It has been yeomanlike, and I must say it is a pleasure to serve on the committee with him.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of title I of the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The text of the balance of title I is as follows:

FACILITIES AND EQUIPMENT (AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND)

For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, for acquisition, establishment, and improvement by contract or purchase,

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against the remainder of title I?

The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COUGHLIN

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment made in order under the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment Offered By Mr. COUGHLIN: On page 15, line 9 strike the "." and insert the following in lieu thereof: ": Provided further, That none of the funds provided in this Act shall be used for the approval of, or to pay the salary of any person who approves, projects to construct a landfill in the Hudson River as part of an Interstate System highway in New York City."

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, what this amendment would do would be to prohibit the expenditure of money for landfilling of the Hudson River as part of a project that is known as the Westway project. In this time of exacerbated deficits, it is important to recognize that this is potentially a $4 billion to $6 billion project. It would cost that much money, $4 billion to $6 billion, to build 4.2 miles of highway in New York. But it really is not a highway that is being built; it is landfill that is being built.

Now, it can be said that since this money comes from the highway trust fund it does not affect the deficit. But that is not true because money coming from the highway trust fund creates outlays just as any other money does and certainly affects the deficit.

So that no matter how you look at it, this is a very significant commitment that is being made.

Someone might say, "Why are you opposing a project that is in New York?" The reason is that this is a raid on the highway trust fund that will affect every single one of your States. I would add that the amendment is strongly supported by the Member, Mr. WEISS, in whose district the entire project would be. According to the Department of Transportation's 1985 interstate cost estimate, this would cost around $416 million per mile and about $15,000 per inch. The entire project would exceed New York's share of the highway trust fund moneys, which would be about $1.7 billion over the life of the project, over the 10-year period. That would not cover then the 90-percent Federal share of the cost even at the $2.3 billion estimated by the Federal Highway Administration.

So that the money would have to come from other States, other areas, or we would have to increase taxes to increase the highway trust fund to be able to pay for this project. It could not come from New York's existing share of the highway trust fund. It can also be asked: Why should we be telling New York how to use its highway trust fund money? Well, it is important, I think, to point out that this is not a highway project; it is a public works project. It is a landfill project.

Of the 227 acres of landfill proposed by this project, only 36 acres are for highway use, 97 acres are for commercial use, 94 acres are for parks, and if you do not believe me, listen to Judge Griesa who has enjoined proceeding with this highway. He said, and I quote, that Westway is not needed for transportation purposes. He said even the Corps of Engineers agreed that a highway could be built along the existing rights-of-way on West Street and 12th Avenue at a cost of only about $50 million, and here we are talking about $4 to $6 billion for this program.

It is a clear violation of the 1981 Federal Highway Act which says, and I quote:

> Funds shall be limited to the construction necessary to provide a minimum level of acceptable service on the Interstate System.

That is what the highway trust fund is intended to be for, that is what these funds are intended to be used for; not to produce a massive landfill.

Now, finally, it can be said that this is an authorizing committee matter. It is not. It is a straight limitation on an appropriations bill which is certainly within the jurisdiction of this committee. It is not a deauthorization bill. I know that Chairman HOWARD has a deauthorization bill in, which I fully applaud.

All the amendment does is provide the stopgap necessary until that authorization can be enacted, and the Public Works Committee has full authority to do that.

But it is necessary because the court injunction that exists against Westway at the present time could be lifted at any time; it is being appealed on an expedited basis. But there are some $300 million in contracts that are ready to be let to begin this $6 billion potential expenditure from the highway trust fund.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COUGHLIN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. COUGHLIN. If, once it proceeds, obviously, it is much more difficult to stop, and I hope that we will support this amendment, because it would provide the stopgap necessary to preclude the initiation of this project and to allow the authorizing committee, indeed, to act on the project.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] offered this amendment in the subcommittee, and offered it again in the full Appropriations Committee.

I opposed the amendment in the subcommittee, I opposed the amendment again in the full committee, and I am still opposed to the amendment because I do not believe this bill is the appropriate place to address this issue.

This project, aside from whether it is an authorization or appropriation, is supported by both the Governor of New York and the mayor of New York City, and it is also supported by both of the New York Senators.

I believe we should accept the judgment of the State and the local people in regards to opposing this amendment.

I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania—the ranking minority member of the subcommittee—and I reluctantly but strongly urge that this amendment be rejected. This is not the right place and not the right time.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as has been noted by my colleagues, this project lies entirely within the confines of the 17th Congressional District in New York which I represent. It is an interstate highway proposal which would cover an area on the West Side of Manhattan from 42d Street down to the Battery; 4.2 miles.

However, this project has a very unsavory history. It goes back about 14 years; it has been challenged in the courts and on two separate occasions now, Federal District Court Judge Griesa has ruled against the project because of unlawful, improper actions by the various State and Federal agencies and flaws in the environmental impact statement and in the permit process.

The opposition to this project is based on transportation, economic, and environmental grounds.

Why would a highway running 4.2 miles cost, under the Federal Highway Administration's estimate, $2.3 billion? It would be the most expensive highway in the history of the world.

The reason it would cost that much is that this is not really a highway project. This is really a real estate boondoggle, if you will, posing as a highway project.

What they propose to do is to fill in some 200 acres of the Hudson River, put a tunnel inside that landfill and create prime real estate in midtown Manhattan. That is really what this whole thing is about.

The Corps of Engineers has indicated quite clearly that if you wanted to build a highway along the current right-of-way along West Street and 12th Avenue, you could do it for some $50 million and have a very nice highway indeed; but that would not meet the requirements of the real estate and big money folk who are involved in pushing this project.

Now, what I and my constituents have supported is trading in this project under the urban mass transit legislation, so that you could take about $50 million, spend it on a moderate, modest highway, and spend the rest of it; about $1,700 million, on mass transit, on our subway systems, our buses, and our commuter rail lines which are really the lifeblood of New York; and on which all New Yorkers really depend—not only New Yorkers, but those who come into New York to work or for recreation purposes.

That is what makes sense; that is what we ought to have.

Now, let me tell you about the people who support and who oppose this project. My constituents, and indeed New Yorkers generally, on every poll and survey that has been taken, have expressed their opposition to this project and have expressed their support for trade-in.

The most recent survey that I took, sometime around February of this year, had 75 percent of my constituents who responded, and I got a very big response; asking not only this question but a number of other questions, expressed their opposition to the Westway interstate and supported the trade-in.

Of 63 elected officials who testified before the Corps of Engineers, 57 of them opposed this interstate highway, and supported a trade-in. Six officials support it; our two U.S. Senators support it; the Governor and the mayor, support it; and one or two other officials whom I do not know by name support it.

The current president of the city council; the incoming president of the city council; the current president of the Borough of Manhattan; the incoming president of the Borough of Manhattan, all oppose this project and opt for the trade-in.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WEISS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WEISS. Now, it seems to me that the way to save money for the Federal Government and the way to satisfy the needs of New York and New Yorkers is to adopt this amendment, so that the landfill portion of the project would be precluded for 1 year.

Our distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], has legislation, as does our distinguished colleague from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI], which would permanently bar Federal reimbursement for the landfill portion of Westway; but we do not know when that legislation will actually reach the floor.

Now is the time to put a hold on the landfill, until the substantive legislation can get adopted. We will be striking a blow for environmental transportation and economic good sense. We will be done right by New York and New Yorkers, and we will be doing right by the people, the taxpayers of the United States of America.

Mr. CONYERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEISS. I am pleased to yield to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I want to thank my colleague, Mr. WEISS, for his statement, and identify it in the following way: You see, sir, "I Love New York," as in all the signs that are seen.

(On request of Mr. CONYERS and by unanimous consent, Mr. WEISS was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. CONYERS. If the gentleman would continue to yield to me.

Mr. WEISS. I am delighted to yield to my friend.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, as one who goes there regularly, in the course of our business and I might even admit for pleasure, too, I have been hearing about this Westway for so long now it has become a national football in our subcommittees and in the press.

Can you cogently bring us to the heart of the matter? I mean, what has caused this thing to ever occur, in the first place?

Mr. WEISS. As I have indicated in my comments, I am convinced that the purpose of this kind of landfill-tunnel-highway operation is not for the purpose of creating a better highway but for the purpose of creating prime real estate in midtown Manhattan on which luxury housing can be built.

Mr. CONYERS. We have had a lot of problems with prime real estate in midtown Manhattan. That is the subject of books and articles and quite a bit of discussion. But as one of those who has worn that badge, "I love New York," I think this is where the environmentalists, the people who like the city—and, by the way, I think the citizens of the city happen to be on this side of the argument; am I correct?

Mr. WEISS. The gentleman is quite correct. In every survey and poll that has been taken, the people of New York have said that they are opposed to the interstate and they want the money traded in for mass transit purposes.

Mr. CONYERS. Well, I cannot imagine anybody around here not siding with the people on the matter.

Westway is a shameful porkbarrel project and should be eliminated from the Federal budget.

Westway is a multibillion-dollar real estate venture masquerading as an interstate highway in New York City.

New York wants to build a 4-mile highway along the west side of Manhattan in the river. It will cost $1 billion a mile—but they don't really want a road. What they want is more Manhattan Island for real estate development. Building a road is just the way in which the supporters of this boondoggle get the Federal Government to pay for their big dreams and what could be our tremendous mistake.

I've heard it said by some that they would like to unite the States of New York and New Jersey by paving over the Hodson River.

Westway will cost the American taxpayers an estimated $4 to $6 billion, for a 4.2-mile highway. That is $1 billion a mile—or $15,000 an inch. With this price, it is the most expensive highway project ever built. We are in serious trouble in this country if we can't provide roads for our automobiles at less than $1 billion a mile. Let's face it; we could pave it with gold and have it cost less.

It is a environmental disaster. Countless hours of research and studies, including one even by the Army Corps of Engineers, has said that there are superior alternatives.

Westway is a misuse of limited tax dollars, especially in these times of spiraling budget deficits. Money to build Westway will come from the Federal highway trust fund, which was intended to finance the building and repair of the Nation's roads, not for creating real estate in a river.

So all in all, Westway seems like a ludicrous project to me. It costs too much, is an environmental debacle, and there are much better an socially responsible ways to spend the money.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I join the chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee in suggesting that this is the wrong bill on which to raise this issue. The chairman of the Public Works Committee, the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], has made it very clear that he intends to give the Westway issue full ventilation when his bill comes to the floor. That ventilation will permit alternative approaches to the problem, such as that of the gentleman from New Jersey, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI], and others, to be offered in a way that they cannot under the limited exemption from the rule that has been granted by the Rules Committee to consider the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. And, indeed, some alternative is needed. Everyone acknowledges that if we do not build Westway, we must have something else to take its place. Yet by considering the Westway issue under the present circumstances, we deny ourselves the opportunity to look at what those alternatives are and to see whether they really are better than what the city of New York and the State of New York have proposed to do.

Let me emphasize that this highway is approved and has been approved by successive mayors of the city of New York and is supported by the present mayor of the city of New York, who just won renomination overwhelmingly in a Democratic primary yesterday; that is supported by the Governor of the State of New York, as it has been by past Governors, and that it is supported by both of the Members of the other body from the State of New York.

I do not deny that the project is controversial, but I think it should be very clear that it has wide support within the State and city of New York.

I do not want to dwell at length on the substance of the issue because, as I say, I think that should be left—as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] has suggested in his "Dear Colleague" to us, which I hope all the Members have read—to the work of his committee, when his bill comes on the floor. In view of the comments that have been made, I do think the Members should know a little bit about the history of this project.

This project was approved by the U.S. Department of Transportation in the Ford administration under the aegis of Secretary of Transportation William Coleman. I has gone through a variety of court tests.

Mention has been made of the decision of the district judge, but it was not mentioned that on most of what he decided the first time around, he was overruled by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which remanded to him to decide on a single issue. He has now decided that single issue, not to anyone's surprise, against the project. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has heard the case on an expedited basis, and that is now pending before the court of appeals. Obviously, no one here today has given the kind of review to this project that the court of appeals has, and I do not think Members of this body ought to try to pass judgment on the issues that are now pending before the court.

Mention has been made that somehow this is going to affect the budget. But I think the arguments of my colleague from New York, Mr. WEISS, make it clear that this had nothing to do with the deficit. If we do not get the highway money as a result of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, then we are entitled to trade in for mass trnasit money. So it is really a question of which pocket the money is coming out of, whether it is going to be the right Federal pocket or the left Federal pocket, and the net amount of outlays with which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is concerned is going to be the same. So there is no change whatever in the deficit.

Now, both the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] seem to suggest that there is something unusual or novel or unique in the fact that this project, which will be a depressed highway and, in part, a covered highway, will utilize the air rights over the highway for a number of purposes, including park and housing.

Now, surely, there is nothing unusual in the fact that people build parks in connection with highways. In fact, the parkway is a typical form of highway in this country, and the fact that because of our limited and land availability, we put the park over the highway instead of alongside it surely should not prevent us from proceeding as we propose to do.

As for using air rights for other kinds of development, let me say that I had occasion to drive to Cambridge, MA, this last weekend, and in the course of that, I drove on Highway 20, the Massachusetts Turnpike.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. GREEN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GREEN. And, lo and behold, as I drove along, there at one point was a supermarket built across the highway, on top, of course, and there, another mile on, was a motel built across the air rights on top of the highway. In New York City, anyone who has crossed the George Washington Bridge knows that there are four apartment towers on the air rights above the approaches to the George Washington Bridge. Those of you who have visited Gracie Mansion are aware, perhaps, of the fact that the East River Drive, the FDR Drive, run under Gracie Mansion and its adjacent grounds.

What we are doing is not unusual, and the idea that this represents some sort of unique real estate boondoggle is most mistaken. In fact, under the law, if we dispose of any of the real estate, the Department of Transportation has to approve of that, and the U.S. Government gets 90 percent of the proceeds.

So, certainly, there should be no objection about doing that.

So much for the substance of this matter. I would simply suggest that you cannot save a penny by passing this amendment, because if we trade in, you have to pay it out to us in mass transit funds, and I would also suggest there is nothing very unusual in using the air space over highways for other purposes.

But let me turn to what I hope will be the basis of your judgment today, and that is whether we ought to consider this on an appropriation bill.

Now, the general excuse of those who offer limitations on appropriation bills is that the authorizing committee has not given them an opportunity to bring to the floor of the House the issue with which they are concerned—most typically, I suppose, in recent years, the abortion issue.

The usual excuse for offering such an amendment on an appropriation bill is that there has been, and will be, no opportunity for the House as a whole to consider the matter otherwise.

In the present case, that is plainly not accurate. The fact of the matter is, as everyone acknowledges, that the Public Works Committee intends to deal with the Westway issue in this year's surface transportation authorization legislation. And we have every expectation, and the word of the chairman of that distinguished committee, that this measure will be on the floor before very long, so that you will have ample opportunity, whatever your views, to debate and to consider and ultimately to vote on the Westway issue. And I submit that by waiting until the Public Works Committee brings us this issue, you will be able to do it under far better circumstances than you can today, because you will then have an opportunity to consider alternatives which cannot be offered under the limited exemption from the rules under which the Coughlin amendment is brought to us, and you will therefore have an opportunity to compare what the alternatives are—something you have not been given today.

There are some of us who feel that the alternatives have their weaknesses, too, problems of meeting air quality standards, for example. But we shall have full opportunity to debate that when the surface transportation bill comes to us.

I therefore ask that you join the members of the Public Works Committee who have written to you asking you to oppose the Coughlin amendment; I ask you to join in the majority of the members of the Appropriations Committee who voted down the Coughlin amendment, and most of them, I believe, because we felt this was the jurisdiction of the Public Works Committee and not our jurisdiction, that of the Appropriations Committee.

I hope that you will join us and defer this matter until the Public Works Committee is able to bring this matter to us in a full and open forum where we can explore it fully, compare the alternatives, and then reach a reasonable decision.

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the construction of Westway as presently constituted but certainly want to see a highway built on the West Side of New York, one that would be economically feasible and one that would allow New York to solve its transportation problems in accordance with our national policy, which means the ailing subway system and the bus system would have trade-in funds whereby they would receive an assurance of $1.7 billion.

We all love New York. But I think that it is more important to focus on our national policies and question what it means to our Nation.

When this highway was first authorized, there were not the fiscal concerns that we have today. We were not in an era of $200 billion deficits or approaching a $2 trillion debt ceiling. Our debt service was nowhere what it is today.

If we look at our fiscal responsibilities, which is what this argument is all about, as well as national transportation and environmental questions, we know that if we are irresponsible, reprehensibly irresponsible in fiscal policy and fiscal sanity, we are only going to create damage to the future of our country and our security.

What does a debt mean? It means that in years to come, young people will not get student loans; it means that the infrastructure and bridges will not be built in cities throughout our country; it means that veterans will not get health services.

Do we want to give a blank check for the construction of a 4.2-mile highway that will cost more than the 2,800 miles of Interstate 80 in all its totality? Do we want to start a highway that we may not be able to complete, where the Interstate Trust Fund would only go until 1990 unless there is an extension, make a commitment that if the cost overruns are anything like the sewage plant they have in the Hudson River a few miles up the way, where it started off at $200 million, and is now $1.1 billion and still not open. Do we want to get into that kind of a bag, to keep doling out money from a trust fund and weakening the security of that fund, and reducing the money that other States and other projects will get in years to come? And do we want to run the risk of starting a highway that we may not have the funds to complete, a highway that will take 10 or 15 years and disrupt New York? Do we want to build a highway that TED WEISS, as a congressman, objects to having built in his own district. He said 75 percent of the people object to it even the mayor of the city, when he sat in Congress, objected to it.

Almost every city-elected official objects to it except Mayor Koch, who reversed himself. Bob Moses, who was a builder of great fame in New York, said we do not need a raceway on the West Side of New York. He said it would be a physical and financial catastrophe.

Do the people who live in the area know more than we do in Arizona and California and in other areas, and are we to respect their wishes? Are we to impose upon them a highway which is really not an interstate highway. When President Eisenhower started the interstate highway program, it was part of national security, and the moving of goods and people across the Nation. That is why we started the interstate highway program. It did not even conceive of 4.2 miles in the middle of Manhattan, which is not connected with any other part of the highway program.

So the illogic of the situation really cries out. We would need a ventilation system because of the 6 lanes going under the Hudson River, that would have to be maintained for decades and that alone would create a burdensome cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. GUARINI was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GUARINI. And even the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, our good, competent, able chairman, in his "Dear Colleague" letter of May 16, had said that the highway was "a misuse of the highway trust fund,"

And I go on and quote:

Who amongst us, especially those who represent crowded urban districts, would not like to see our cities expanded by 234 acres for additional development. New York officials found a way to do it. Unfortunately, that kind of a project is not a proper use of the highway trust fund.

That comes from the chairman of the committee who authorized it. Let me say, coming from New Jersey, there would be flooding along the river, and into the Meadowlands where there is huge development underway. There is no question Westway's landfill would have an impact on the rise of the Hudson River.

You are paving over, 600 feet on average, into the Hudson River. The environmental question from paving one of our major waterways on the juvenile bass population in the river means that a $200-million fishing industry will be imperiled. The other question of stirring up toxic wastes demands your attention. There is not one reason, there are many reasons why we should not proceed. We in New Jersey want the best for our regional planning; we want the best for New York. We want to be good partners, but we cannot have foisted upon us a highway that is going to be a landfill, a real estate developer's dream, and impose it and have an adverse effect on the State of New Jersey.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUARINI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman on his statement and on his support of this important amendment. I want to underscore a point which I think he made at the beginning of his statement.

There has been some allusion by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] that in fact whether it is the highway that is constructed or there is a trade in for mass transit, it is the same amount of money that is involved. I want to correct that and underscore the gentleman's statement about it.

If you have a trade in, the amount of the trade in is limited at the most to the interstate cost estimate at the time that the request for the trade in is made. At this point, that is $2.3 billion.

Mr. GUARINI. We know how much is it will cost our country.

Mr. WEISS. That is right. If you have a highway the Federal Government is obligated to a blank check reimbursement of 90 percent of whatever the final cost of that highway is, and as the gentleman has indicated, with the cost overruns, this project could cost anywhere from $4 to $10 billion. Nobody knows the difference.

Finally, there has been some suggestion about people who support this project. Well, I want to state for the RECORD that the two U.S. Senators in fact have been consistent in support. The current Governor has in fact been consistent in his support of the project.

My distinguished friend, the mayor of the city of New York, when he was in this House, with me he led that opposition to the Westway project and supported trade in. He changed his position after he was first elected. The distinguished former Governor, Mr. Carey, campaigned for the first time that we went out for the governorship in opposition to this project and switched his position after he was elected.

So it seems to me that with that background and the peoples' opposition to this highway and the local elected officials, the gentleman's position is absolutely sound.

Mr. GUARINI. I would like to say that we may not get another chance to vote on this bill. The Circuit Court of Appeals could foreseeably today overrule Judge Griesa who had extended hearings in the Federal District Court, Southern District of New York. If that happens, $300 million worth of contracts that are sitting on the desk of Mayor Koch and Governor Cuomo could be let out immediately. I am informed by Mitchell Bernard who is the attorney for the environmentalists and the people who brought the action to deauthorize the building of Westway, has told me that they will not have time for an appeal. So this vote is a critical vote.

If you lose this opportunity to vote, the letting out of the contracts tomorrow morning if the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed it today, may bar forever your opportunity to act. The other bill that you will be considering that has been put into the hopper may not come up until next year. We will pass the point of no return. The 90-day extension that has been talked about for trade in would become moot and unnecessary so your vote now is vital. You must stand up now for fiscal responsibility, for the betterment of your environment, for national transportation policy which is sensible. Your vote can assure that we will not have 4 miles of highway that would further impact and gridlock the traffic in New York, that we will have a comprehensive public and private transportation system for this city and for the region which we will not have unless we become responsive in those areas. Unless we do the right thing today, we may forever lose our chance.

We have been generous with New York. New York will get $1.7 billion in trade in. They cannot be heard to complain. I am asking you to recognize the fact that any excesses on the part of New York would go to the disadvantage of the rest of the 49 States. So please, recognize that this is our last chance; we may not have another opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI] has expired.

(On request of Mr. GREEN and by unanimous consent, Mr. GUARINI was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUARINI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply say to the gentleman first, that he knows because he was a very successful lawyer, that if the Court of Appeals should decide today——

Mr. GUARINI. Flattery will really not receive any votes.

Mr. GREEN [continuing]. There will be a request for a hearing, and in fact, there will be an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court——

Mr. GUARINI. There will not be time.

Mr. GREEN [continuing]. And there will be plenty of opportunity to get stays beyond this point.

Mr. GUARINI. Has the gentleman spoken with the attorneys? Because the attorneys know that $300 million of letting of contracts could end the whole discussion within 24 hours.

Mr. GREEN. Not if there was a stay granted while all these other things are going on.

Let me say the gentleman mentioned a moment ago the desire for good regional planning. I would simply point out that at the time this highway was planned, the regional highway planning agency was the Tristate Regional Transportation Committee on which the State of New Jersey was represented. I would point out that this highway, Westway, was approved by the Tristate Regional Planning Commission including the New Jersey Commissioners.

Mr. GUARINI. But not as an interstate highway, because that is the difference.

Mr. GREEN. I do not think it is the difference, because if you are worried about traffic impact, if you are worried about whether to trade in for mass transit or not, if you are worried about impact on the Hudson River, these were all issues that were before the Tristate Regional Planning Commission in their role as the transportation planning agency for the area.

Mr. GUARINI. The New York partnership was the strongest proponent of this highway for the redevelopment and the employment of New York because they were in a state of bankruptcy and it was very important that New York be given help. But that is not the same any more. Times have changed.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I am not talking about the New York partnership. I am talking about the Tristate Regional Planning Commission. The Commissioners appointed by the Governor of New Jersey. This was the offically designated highway planning agency for the region and the New Jersey Commissioners for this highway, this Westway.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it seems like this is deja vu. It was some 10 years ago that we had similar arguments. The proposition then of the Westway was supported by Governor Carey, by Major Beam, by all of labor, and a whole host of important and responsible and credible organizations. Had we started then, it would have been completed and it would have cost us considerably less. What we are concerned about if this amendment is passed, we will have no Westway, we will have no time for trade in. That is because the time expires on September 30. It is a 1-year bill, and all that will be required, all that will result is a delay. A 1-year delay and then there will be a new effort. The cost of this construction will go up.

I guess I have the advantage of some; I am a little bit older than some of the opponents and some of the proponents. But I remember when the East River Drive was proposed. There was a similar hue and cry. Environment was not the issue because we all knew that the East River had a stench that was comparable to Chanel in the extreme opposite. But there was hue and cry: Dislodging residences; disturbing businesses; enriching developers. Nothing is new. It is the same old story. Yet, without the East River Drive, New York, Manhattan town would choke. So be it with the Westway.

When Moses made his original observation that was a long, long time ago. He did not contemplate the growth of traffic coming along the West Side. I travel that West Side every day. I know how important it is with tens of thousands of other motorists who use that West Side as transportation. That should be enhanced and should be rebuilt or built anew. So these are not the arguments; these are not the arguments.

Remember that. That was controversial. New York was the ogre. People from all over the country looked and said, "The devil with New York. That is the cesspool of our Nation." Happily, wiser heads prevailed and the loan guarantee legislation was enacted. We had the support of then-President Carter. New York was saved. New York prospered and banks throughout the country were saved because they had New York securities.

Today, 10 years later, we must again call upon the wisdom of the House to reject what I will refer to as "Drop Dead, New York—Part II," or the Coughlin amendment.

Pending before us is an amendment which has as its intention, and if adopted will in fact, kill the Westway interstate highway project at least for a year. Yes, ladies and gentleman, Westway could be killed, not by a court, or even by the committee which has jurisdiction over it. No Westway would be killed by a punitive, discriminatory amendment attached to an appropriations bill. Is that right? I say no, and I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

As the chairman of the authorizing committee has said in his "Dear Colleague" letter of today, the Coughlin amendment is a backdoor legislative maneuver. I ask my colleagues to put themselves in our shoes. How would you feel if an effort was undertaken on the floor to knock out by an amendment a vitally important highway in your district?

Let me assure my colleagues that if we pass this amendment today, that could happen. Do not view this as being our problem. I promise you it will be your problem because it will set the precedent that will allow amendments, no matter how ill-founded, to make it to the House floor for votes, and with it could ride the fate of a project in your district.

The supporters of this amendment will regale you with lists of those who are opposed to this project. Let me recite some additional supporters of this Westway undertaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BIAGGI was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BIAGGI. The President of the United States, the AFL-CIO, just to name a couple in addition to the others I have mentioned.

This project is not just a transportation project. It is a catalyst for meaningful economic development along the west side of Manhattan, and if you have not been there, let me suggest you go there and see it. It is the dregs and it should be rehabilitated. It will provide additional housing, additonal businesses.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me about the dregs of my district that he is talking about?

Mr. BIAGGI. No, I will not yield on that point. I have not yielded the gentleman any time. At the conclusion of my comments, I will be delighted to yield to you.

MR. WEISS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BIAGGI. It is the typical waterfront area. It has been upgraded somewhat, but it deserves better. It is a sound investment of the Federal dollar and will produce a solid return. Tens of thousands of people will be working. The construction industry will be working on that Westway for some 10 years.

I urge opposition to this amendment. People talk about the environmental impact. I remember the snail darter that held up a dam that was 90-percent completed for 6 or 7 or 8 years. It is unimportant. They said the snail darter is an endangered species if we continue to build this dam and permit it to function. The courts and reason finally prevailed, and what happened? They removed the snail darter, took it to another place, and snail darters are all over the place. They have multiplied and they are as prolific as the flies in New Jersey.

I am not so sure that these arguments are all that meaningful. Let us use common sense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. WEISS and by unanimous consent, Mr. BIAGGI was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BIAGGI. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman concede that, as the Member representing the area, that I spend at least as much time in that area as the gentleman does?

Mr. BIAGGI. I would clearly say so.

Mr. WEISS. All right. Then I would like to suggest to the gentleman, as one who really is familiar with that area, that what has been happening over the course of the last 10 years is a tremendous upgrading of the area in spite of the threat of Westway coming in, and indeed, the estimate now of developers in the area is that what is holding back development is that threat of Westway coming in.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIAGGI. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply point out that the area where we propose to build Westway is out to the pier and bulkhead line where the piers are rotting away and are a danger to navigation as they break up and go out into the water, and that indeed, as my colleague from Manhattan. Mr. WEISS, has said, there has been a good deal of development in the area. It is residential development and thus the desire on the part of the city to create parks atop the highway, as others in Seattle and New Jersey and elsewhere have had parks atop highways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BIAGGI was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chaiman, I conceded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS], my colleague for whom I have great affection and respect, but there has been some improvement. I know that. We all know it. We live in New York. But there is no question in my mind that we still have areas there that I would consider the dregs and would be susceptible to improvement, an improvement that would naturally follow if the Westway would come into effect, an improvement of the whole area economically.

There would be developers who would come forward and, yes, I object, and I agree with the gentleman, to having huge skyscrapers border the waterfront. I object to that vigorously. But I understand that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], has a plan that will permit the Westway to go forward with some modification, and that one I would agree with.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in very strong support of the amendment that has been offered by my distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI] to prevent Federal highway trust fund money from being spent on the Westway landfill.

Let me say at the outset that I do not sit on the committees that have direct jurisdiction over this project and therefore ordinarily I would hesitate to become this directly involved in the debate. But I do serve on the Committee on the Budget and I rise out of a very keen memory of the anguishing hour upon anguishing hour that the Budget Committee invested this past year in attempting to address the Federal deficit crisis that we are facing.

Indeed, I know that the Federal budget deficit is a matter of concern to all the Members of this body, and not just those of us on the Budget Committee.

The fact of the matter is that all of us have been forced to go back to our own congressional districts to ask our constituents for some very significant sacrifices, in terms of cuts in a number of critical program areas. I recall in my own instance among the hard decisions that have been most critical for my State were urban development action grant funding reductions, economic development assistance reductions, and mass transit reductions. Those were not choices that were easy to make for any of us.

I submit that, particularly because of the difficulty of those choices, this is 1 year in which we need to be very careful about providing the kind of blank check that is being requested in this Westway project. We should proceed with extreme caution in the face of the horrendous expenditure of funds that is contemplated in this instance.

The project is being described as a highway project, and, therefore, it is to be funded out of the highway trust fund. Yet it is clear, both from the debate and even the discussion by some of the sponsors of the project, that it is far more than that. Westway entails real estate development of a substantial magnitude. In fact, most of the money will be going not to the building of a highway, but to landfill which, we are told, will enhance economic development.

Furthermore, the use of the highway trust fund money is limited by law for "construction necessary to provide a minimum level of acceptable service on the Interstate System." It is hard to imagine how this 200-acre landfill project could fit that description, especially since the Army Corps of Engineers itself considers Westway to be a "nonessential" part of the interstate program.

Finally, we are told that the total cost of this project could run as high as $4 to $6 billion, a cost that would work out to some billion dollars a mile or some $15,000 a linear inch. Does this really make any kind of sense?

As I said earlier, this is a difficult budget year, a particularly difficult budget year for all of us. But I submit that this is not a project that ought to be a close question even if it were not a difficult budget year. The economics do not pan out. The protection for the taxpayer is not there. We are being asked to go forward on an essentially open-ended commitment to a project that is absurdly expensive and is outside the scope of the trust fund authorization. I feel that Congress has a responsibility to prevent a mistake of these proportions from occurring.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in yielding, and I would like to make just a couple of points in response to the gentleman.

First, if you look at the amount per capita that New York State has drawn out of the highway trust fund, you can hardly blame the Federal deficit on that. We happen to be right at the bottom of the States at the present time in terms of per capita assistance from the highway trust fund, probably because of the fact that our major cross-State highway, the New York State Thruway, was completed just before President Eisenhower announced the Interstate Highway Program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has expired.

(On request of Mr. GREEN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. WOLPE was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, even if Westway is funded, we are only going to be in the middle of the list. Certainly you cannot blame New York State for the deficit in terms of its use of highway trust funds, and I think to pick on this one project simply because it has been tied up in litigation over these years is most unfair.

Nor would I suggest to the gentleman is what we have done in seeking to build a depressed and partly covered highway unusual. In the gentleman's State of Michigan, for example, I am told that the Federal Highway Administration permitted the depressing of a highway and the covering of a highway where, for strict highway purposes, it was not needed, so that two parts of an Orthodox Jewish community could stay in contact with each other over the Sabbath. Yet that, although not a highway purpose strictly, has been permitted in the past by the Federal Highway Administration.

In New Jersey a highway has been depressed, and it was covered over in order to preserve the ambience of a park. There has been a park created in Seattle under similar circumstances.

As I indicated earlier in the debate, another highway, the Massachusetts Turnpike, has used air rights for a supermarket and a motel. We are doing nothing unusual in this.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time to respond to the gentleman from New York, I am not suggesting that New York has taken undue advantage of highway trust funds up to this point or that it is not perfectly free to use highway trust funds in a way that has been authorized by law. The problem is that the total amount of money that was set aside for New York over the duration of the project is some $1.7 billion, and yet the estimated cost of the project is coming in at anywhere from $4 billion to $6 billion.

Who is to pick up that extra cost? How is that financing to be accomplished?

As far as the comparison with the Michigan project in the past and projects in which more than simply highway construction has been permitted, the fact of the matter is that the Westway project, as it has been contemplated, would be more than twice as expensive per mile as any other interstate segment ever built. I submit that Westway is a different ballgame and—without taking anything away from the important and worthwhile construction projects on which New York has embarked in the past—I submit that this project simply falls outside of the scope of what is financially justified.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to commend the gentleman on his statement, and I suggest, just in fairness and so the record is straight here, that according to the Department of Transportation, since 1956 for every dollar collected from the highway trust fund in New York, New York has received back $1.13. Specifically, the figures are that New York State's payments into the highway trust fund were $7,141,000,000 since 1956, and New York State received back $8,100,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WOLPE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOLPE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say just for the record that New York has not been treated unfairly in this. As we look at the expenditures of the highway trust fund, they have received more than their fair share.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his observation.

I would like to make one additional comment before I yield further to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York. This matter has been subject, as the gentleman knows, to considerable litigation. As the gentleman knows, several courts have viewed as questionable the procedures that led to the approval of this project. I submit the fact of the litigation itself ought to give all of us in this body additional cause to proceed cautiously in moving forward with the project.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point.

Mr. WOLPE. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, anyone can litigate, and district judges can make mistakes. In this instance the district judge issued a sweeping decision on Westway on which he was overruled on just about every point but one and one which the findings of the court of appeals were much narrowed from what the district judge had found. It went back, the district judge has now made another ruling, and the court of appeals, whatever it is going to decide, thought the case was worthy enough that it granted an expedited appeal and has heard argument.

That decision will be what that decision will be. I do not purport to represent to the gentleman what it will be. If the decision is that the dredge and fill permit, which was the last step that will have to be taken, was improperly granted, that will be the decision, and there is nothing we in this body will do to change it, as far as I can imagine.

At the same time I would say to the gentleman that if the court rules otherwise, this highway will have met every environmental requirement, and it is not at all clear that the alternative of a land highway at surface level can do that. There are very serious Clean Air Act problems with that, which is why the people went to this mode of construction in the first place. So you may well be throwing a very serious monkey wrench into the transportation planning.

If I may make just one further point, again the highway trust fund at this point is in surplus, not in deficit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has expired.

(On request of Mr. GREEN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. WOLPE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I think it is as wrong to look to the highway trust fund to solve the deficit problem when it is not creating the problem as I thought earlier this year it was wrong to look to the——

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time, the point is not that the highway trust fund is adding to the deficit at this point in time. The point is that this project will definitely add to the deficit over the long term.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York, in whose district this project is located and who is telling us that the vast majority of his own constituents oppose this project and believe there is a much better way to proceed.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, and again I want to underscore the very last point the gentleman made.

New York City is crying out desperately to keep its transportation lifeline open, that is, its mass transit system, its subway system, and its bus system. We have a need identified already for 10 additional billion dollars, and nobody knows where it is coming from. We have a chance, by trading in this project, to get up to $1,700,000,000 for that mass transit system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. WEISS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. WOLPE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOLPE. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEISS. Instead, Mr. Chairman, we are being told that because the highway trust fund is not in deficit, it is perfectly appropriate to spend the obscene amount of money, even if it is a conservative estimate, of $2.3 billion on 4 miles of highway. Whether it is in my district or in anybody else's district, that kind of expenditure cannot be justified.

Let me make one final point with the gentleman on the agreement or the approval. We have just gotten word as to the decision in the circuit court of appeals. The circuit court affirmed the decision of the district court judge as to the defects in the environmental impact statement, reversed it as to the permanent injunction, and remanded the matter back to the Federal defendant. So, it seems to me that since the matter is pending, it is all the more important for this amendment to be adopted to keep things in status quo until there is an opportunity for the legislation of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] or the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI] to take effect.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the Coughlin amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this Westway project has been the victim of just about every failing of government, every failure of the administrative process, and every failure of the judicial process that the mind of man can conjure up. If it had been built a decade ago, when it was first proposed or when the plans were first ready, it would have cost a substantially smaller portion of what it would cost to build today.

This project, with the delays from the litigation and the appeals and the painful reevaluations all the way up along the line, has suffered the fate of other projects that affect the environment, of utilities, and of other major projects. They have been bogged down in such a morass of administrative appeals and judicial actions that it becomes almost impossible to go ahead with any major urban improvement program.

Now, here we are with New York City having this glorious waterfront asset that any other city in the world would have been holding international architectural competitions on to find the most imaginative and creative design with which to improve that beautiful waterfront asset. You can look at cities that have done this. You can look at London and Paris and Sydney, Australia, and you can look at Rio de Janeiro and Hong Kong, where they have thoughtfully maximized the potential for beauty and for relaxation and leisure time with their waterfront assets—one of the most precious urban assets a city can have.

But here our waterfront is treated in this manner and has been cast upon the development slag heap, left abandoned in a disgraceful, decrepit, crumbling, unsafe condition. It is ridiculous.

We are going to have budget problems until every Member of this Congress goes to the great Congress in the sky. We are going to have problems of mass transportation from now until hell freezes over. Is this waterfront project to develop this glorious urban resource in New York City going to be held hostage to the U.S. budget problem that we are going to have to live with for the next generation? Is it going to be held hostage to the proclivity of otherwise thoughtful and enlightened citizen groups, environmental groups, and consumer groups to use the courts and to use the administrative process to obfuscate, to delay, and to confuse until these development projects are drowned in a sea of delay?

I say that we ought to go ahead with this project. This project has been a victim of our failing judicial, administrative and legislative processes. This project is a classic case of where the perfect is the enemy of the good. This may not be a perfect project, but it is a damn good project. It will be a beautiful enhancement of the city of New York.

I urge this amendment be defeated.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHEUER. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. I thank my colleague from New York for yielding.

As the gentleman has indicated, this project has been in and out of the courts, and as my colleague from New York indicated and my office has advised me of the same thing, we now have a decision affirming in part, reversing in part, and not permanently enjoining the project, but obviously since it has been remanded there is going to be the possibility of more litigation and certainly the project cannot go through without it.

Would the gentleman not agree with me that until the Members of this body have had a chance to learn what is in the court's decision and since it is obvious that given the little we know about it that the project is not going forward instantly that we would be better advised to wait until the Public Works Committee has brought this matter before us, as it will be doing in a couple weeks, rather than proceeding under circumstances where we really do not know what the court has decided at the present time.

Mr. SCHEUER. I am in total agreement with my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SCHEUER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHEUER. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague from New York.

Mr. GUARINI. I think many of us would like to see the matter brought to formality. There has been so much uncertainty over the last 14 years and, of course, the costs do go up all the time.

I would like to bring out a point and that is that frequent reference has been made to urban development programs. This is a highway bill, taking moneys from the Highway Trust Act. I just would like to remind the gentleman, as much as we would like to see the development in New York, that it should not be by way of the highway trust fund.

The 1981 Highway Trust Act states: "Funds shall be limited to a minimum level of accepted service on an interstate system."

That does not mean real estate development or sky-rise residential or commercial development or paving over the Hudson River.

Mr. SCHEUER. Well, we are not trying to pave over the Hudson River, but this project does provide on a nonprofit basis quite a rich intermixture of community projects, of civic projects, of leisure time projects, and it will be a beautiful amenity to the city of New York if only we can pry it loose.

Mr. GUARINI. But contrary to the purpose of the court, of the highway trust fund, the interstate highway trust fund.

Mr. SCHEUER. No; the basic guts of this project is a highway, but we have in a rather creative way, I think, added on to the periphery in effect of this some beautiful amenities for the city of New York.

Now, it is basically a highway project, but there are a large number of parks, playgrounds, delightful amenities that are going to enhance the quality of life in New York.

I disagree most thoroughly with my colleagues from New York that the citizens of the West Side will not enjoy this use. They will enjoy it more than any other citizens of New York, the folks who live within a 5- or 10-minute walk of this project.

Mr. GUARINI. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SCHEUER. Of course, I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER] has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. GUARINI, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SCHEUER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. GUARINI. Judge Griesa of the Federal District Court for the Southern District of New York had indicated that it was not a highway development program in the findings of his decision, but, in fact, was a real estate development.

He also pointed out that New York could have that same 6-lane highway on the same existing main part of Manhattan where it is now for $50 million and that woud adequately serve and we did not need one for $2.3 billion.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SCHEUER. I am happy to yield.

Mr. GREEN. I think it should be pointed out, however, that if we build that surface highway, and I frankly doubt that it could be built for $50 million, I think hundreds of millions is more likely; but the fact of the matter is that if we build a surface highway, we are barring not only the residents of Manhattan, but also all the visitors from access to the waterfront, because we will have a surface level highway which will then make it impossible for our people to have access to the Hudson River waterfront. It will be like a great wall there barring us from the waterfront. One of the advantages of the present Westway is that it does preserve access to the waterfront which will not exist with the gentleman's alternative.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I support the Guarini-Coughlin amendment, of which I am a cosponsor. The amendment stipulates that no funds in this act shall be used for the landfill portion of the proposed Westway highway project in New York City.

It has been my understanding that funds in the Transportation appropriations bill are intended to facilitate transportation not to finance real estate development. To my mind that suggests that all moneys in this bill should be spent for transportation-related facilities and activities.

The Westway project does provide for a 4.2-mile section of interstate highway. However, it also provides New York with 100 acres of prime real estate ready for development, at a probable cost of from $4 to $10 billion. That cost at any time should seem prohibitive. In light of the budget deficit, it verges on the obscene. On economic grounds alone, Westway must go.

The Westway project also uses funds that many New Yorkers, including our colleague Mr. WEISS, in whose district the project lies, believe would be for better used shoring up New York's public transit system and building a more modest highway.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join in opposing the Westway project by supporting this amendment.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Couglin amendment. This amendment would not only preclude the construction of any interstate highway on the Lower West Side of Manhattan, it would eliminate any additional time for New York to pursue a trade-in for mass transit funds. Even Westway's most vocal opponents favor a trade-in of highway funds for money to be used for New York's subways.

Mr. Chairman, I have long been a proponent of Westway. I am convinced not only for the project's need, but of the soundness of the project as designed. The project has received all of the necessary permits and approvals from Federal agencies. It has been studied over and over and been found to be environmentally sound, fully complying with all Federal mandates and requirements for an interstate highway. Proposed alternatives have also been studied and have been found to have more adverse environmental impacts than the Westway project as now planned. Studies have not only indicated that these alternatives would violate Federal air quality standards, they would also create a greater burden on the national debt. The reason for this is that trade-in funds are derived from general revenues, whereas the proposed funding for the Westway project, would come from the highway trust fund. The highway trust fund is not funded by general revenues, but instead by gasoline and other road-related taxes.

However, even if I remained unconvinced of the project's legitmacy, I would still oppose the Coughlin amendment and so should all my colleagues in this House. If we premit this kind of arbitrary and discriminatory treatment against one State, then every State's project will be placed in jeopardy. If we ignore the dire infrastructure needs of one State, then no State's needs will be addressed. And if we strike down Westway altogether, we might as well abandon the policy objectives of the whole Interstate Highway System.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment. No State can afford the vulnerability this kind of precedent may impose on future State highway projects.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Coughlin-Guarini-Weiss amendment and commend my colleagues for their efforts to halt one of the greatest highway boondoggles ever seriously considered: New York's Westway. This important amendment would prevent any of the funds provided in this transportation appropriation bill to be used for the approval of—or to pay the salary of any person who approves the construction of a landfill in the Hudson River as part of the Westway project.

There is no question that New York needs a refurbished highway on its West Side to help relieve its myriad transportation problems. However, I strenuously object to the attempt to use highway trust fund moneys to subsidize New York City's plan for real estate development—which is what the Westway project proposes.

In addition to being a 4.2-mile replacement for New York City's West Side Highway, the Westway project would provide a 224-acre landfill of the Hudson River upon which luxury high-rise apartments, private office towers and commercial industrial sites will be built.

The project is expected to take 10 to 15 years to complete and cost an estimated $4 to $6 billion. That translates to roughly $15,000 an inch. With this price tag, Westway would become by far the most expensive highway in the world. This fact, in itself, would not be controversial, if it was clearly shown that the expenditure of $4 to $6 billion was absolutely necessary to replace the current West Side Highway. However, that is simply not the case. The fact is, there are viable alternative proposals which do not require that highway trust fund moneys be used for private real estate development.

Ninety percent of the cost of Westway would be paid for out of the highway trust fund because it has been designated as part of the interstate network of highway. However, according to the Federal Highway Act of 1981, the use of the highway trust fund moneys "shall be limited to the construction necessary to provide a minimum level of acceptable service on the Interstate Highway System." I do not believe that this Westway plan represents a minimum level of service. Nowhere in the 1981 act does it allow that highway moneys can be used for land development plans for private developers.

Constructing a less expensive highway along the existing waterfront and "trading-in" the remaining Federal highway funds to overhaul New York's crippled mass-transit system could give New York City both a safe highway and improved mass transit for a fraction of the cost of Westway.

Much has been made of the Westway "battle" between New York and New Jersey. However, opposition to Westway is not a regional issue as some would believe. If the Westway landfill is funded, Federal highway moneys that would otherwise go to many other States would be used instead on this single, mammouth project. Because the highway trust fund expires in 1990, Westway would need additional funds to complete the project. How will New York adequately finance future highway construction, improvements and road and bridge maintenance? The answer is obvious. Beginning construction of this Westway project now increases the likelihood of an American taxpayer bailout later.

The current configuration of Westway represents a raid on the highway trust fund. Indeed, New York has legitimate transportation needs, but the Federal Government should not be in the business of providing highway moneys for private land development. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in strong opposition to the Coughlin amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a particularly mischievious and damaging amendment, and I earnestly appeal to my colleagues to vote it down right substantially.

It is a bad amendment, as Chairman HOWARD and I indicated in a brief "Dear Colleague" letter to Members late yesterday evening. It is bad transportation policy, grossly unfair to a single State, and a very dangerous precedent.

I would like to elaborate on our reasons, but before I do, there is one thing I think Members ought to grasp. It is that a vote against the Coughlin amendment cannot legitimately be considered a pro-Westway vote, not that some folks will not try to paint it that way, but that description will not stand up to the facts. I hope to make that clear as we go along.

For openers, the fact is that to the extent that there are problems with Westway, and there are, then there are ways to get at these problems. Environmental problems, as have been laid out today, are in the courts and apparently what we hear today is that that case has been remanded back to the district court level, but that is the proper forum now. Problems of cost, or of design, or of development impact, of transportation merits—there may be some of these. It depends on who you talk to. But here again, these are going to be taken care of through the authorization process. They are being addressed in pending legislation, H.R. 3129, and we expect to be marking that up in the committee within the next few weeks.

The problem with the Coughlin amendment is that it recognizes none of this. It simply says that New York cannot build this interstate highway as currently designed, and I hope that my colleagues will listen carefully. It does not say only as designed, it says, in effect, that it cannot build any alternative interstate highway, even if redesigned to eliminate or reduce the problems on which much of the opposition to the current project has been based.

They talk about a surface highway. They talk today of an alternative, but this amendment eliminates any genuine alternatives along with the present project. It says if there is a problem with the project, junk it. Do not fix it up. Do not look for another way to do the job. Instead, scrap it and do not look for alternatives.

Is there a need? Do nothing. That is the effect of the Coughlin amendment.

The only option left to New York, an option that it already has under existing law, is to trade the project in for transit funding or for a non-Interstate highway alternative. That is no deal at all.

As to transit funding, it would not be in the form of guaranteed apportionments of highway trust fund dollars, but would be in the form of General Treasury revenues. The amount that they get would be a drop in the bucket in terms of New York's transit capital needs, and I wonder what kind of luck New York would have in getting appropriations out of the Appropriations Committee if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the ranking minority member of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, prevails with his amendment, which is supposedly based at least in part on grounds of cost.

If New York chooses a highway alternative on the trade-in provisions of existing law, the funding would be totally inadequate to the need. There has to be a better alternative. As I said a moment ago, the chairman of our committee has proposed one which is now incorporated in H.R. 3129, the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1985, which we are going to be marking up in early October.

The Coughlin amendment means bad transportation policy. Its anti-Westway supporters see it as a way to force New York to trade it in with most of the funds going for transit rather than for highway improvements.

It also singles out New York for treatment given no other city with a controversial interstate project. It would have Congress intervene by statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. SNYDER. This amendment would have Congress intervene by statute in the matter of a project which has gone through the process of local, State, and Federal approval with no viable alternative permissible. If this precedent is established via this amendment, then we cannot say with confidence that any project which can be made the subject of controversy in the future is safe at all, no matter if it has obtained all of the necessary approvals.

Mr. Chairman, we on the Public Works and Transportation Committee have considered the Coughlin amendment, at least in principle, in that it would do the same thing as H.R. 1888, the Guarini amendment, or the Guarini bill on which we took testimony, and we rejected it.

The efforts of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] were rejected in the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee of which he is the ranking minority member, and in the full Committee on Appropriations. It should be similarly rejected here today on the floor, and I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me make another point or two. In the debate today, it has been indicated that the mayor of New York, when he was in the House, opposed the Westway. I think that is accurate.

But since he got to New York, and got to be mayor, he certainly has been apprised of the difficulties, and the problems, and he is no longer opposed to the Westway. Many of us, all of us in the political arena, I am sure, remember the campaign last year when he was proud to get on television with the President of the United States and accepted that big check for Westway. I think that is pretty much evidence of the fact that he is anxious to move on with it, and indicated in that television appearance how good this was.

Again, Mr. Chairman, let me say that the Coughlin amendment does not reduce spending, it does not save any money. In fact, it is a question of whether a project is funded out of the highway trust fund which has a balance around $10 billion and has never contributed to the deficit since it was created in 1956, or whether or not you want to let them trade it in for mass transit, and then take it out of general revenues and put more pressure on the deficit.

I was rather amused at an earlier speaker who talked about the need to feed children, and take care of the veterans, and all of these things, all of which we agree with. Certainly, there are these needs. But I have never yet heard of being able to do those things out of the highway trust fund. If, in fact, you defeat this project and Westway is traded in, New York will go after similar amounts of money—the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] said $1.7 billion, but I think there might be $1.9 billion out of general revenues, in that neighborhood—I think then you are depriving those who are in need in those other categories of general funds.

Mr. Chairman, this is properly within the purview of the legislative committee, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. We are going to take that in the markup early in October. If an extension is needed by virtue of this court decision, it is on the program for tomorrow for markup, if they need us to put out a small bill to extend the time for trade-in.

Mr. Chairman, I urgently ask that this amendment be defeated.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a few months ago, just before we recessed, I was criticized in a Utah newspaper for standing up here and talking about cost-sharing, and talking about the fact that people in this country ought to pay for the benefits they derive.

Now I am going to stand up here today because that newspaper in Utah said that Congressman SOLOMON was from New York, and all he wants is more and more and more money for New York, and he wants us out here in the far West to pay for everything that we get. Well, they were right in the first part, and on the second part they were wrong, because I am opposing this pork barrel project for New York State or New York City.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simple and straightforward, but its passage will accomplish several important goals.

First, it will prohibit the expenditure of any funds under this act for the landfill in the Hudson River upon which the infamous Westway boondoggle is proposed to be built.

The arguments against the construction of Westway have been made and repeated countless times in the past several years.

The most highly respected environmental preservation organizations in the United States are united in opposition to the Westway landfill.

In addition, the National Taxpayers Union, one of the most effective groups in the Nation in campaigning against the squandering of scarce Federal tax dollars, is working vigorously in support of the Coughlin amendment.

The estimates as to the eventual cost to complete Westway are truly astounding even in these days of astronomical Federal budgets, and Federal deficits, I might add, as well.

The actual cost of Westway has been set at from $4 to $6 billion—which is about $1 billion per mile, or more than $15,000 per inch.

The sheer cost of the project is unjustifiable, and is more than ample ground for voting for the Coughlin amendment to prevent these massive expenditures.

Equally important, however, the Coughlin amendment is an antipork barrel amendment.

The Members of this House know of my active opposition over the years to all kinds of pork barrel projects—even those in my home State of New York.

As a New Yorker, I can tell all of you here this afternoon that this is pork of the first order.

There is simply no justification for such a massive expenditure for such an unneeded project.

I should also point out that the Coughlin amendment is a good Government amendment.

Its adoption will ensure that our limited highway trust fund resources are used in the manner for which they are truly intended—for highway construction.

Unless this amendment is approved, untold billions in highway construction funds will be used for real estate development.

It is no secret that the landfill proposed for Westway will be used for the construction of private real estate development, the financial benefit of which will fill the pockets of a very few multimillionaires real estate interests in New York City.

To prevent this abuse of limited highway funds, I appeal to my colleagues here this afternoon to stop Westway once and for all.

As a New Yorker and as a Member who has always opposed special interest pork barrelling, I urge my colleagues to vote for the Coughlin amendment.

I would appreciate it if my colleagues today would not look at the situation of holding off until next week and voting against another bill that would oppose it. Let us do it now and let us clear this legislation once and for all, and let us get back to good Government.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I am glad to yield to my colleague from Dutchess County.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to my colleagues that the gentleman in the well and I have districts that adjoin each other. I would say that we represent about two-thirds the length of the entire Hudson River, and I come down to within 30 miles of the city of New York.

So my interest is with the commuters to the city who live in my District and the labor pool that would be gainfully employed with any expenditure of funds. I submit that the money we are talking about could be far better spent for the city of New York with improvements in its own mass transportation. Second, as far as my constituents who commute to the city daily, what they need is repairs on the metro-north and the commuter lines that get them to and from work in the city. They do not need Westway.

A less ambitious highway, I think, is appropriate. From the research I have done, the trade-in involved would be equivalent in the number of jobs produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. GARCIA and by unanimous consent, Mr. SOLOMON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I come down in very strong support with what the gentleman in the well has said and associate myself with his remarks in favor of the Coughlin amendment.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to my colleague from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. I think what has been said here, and I want to make it very clear to my colleagues that, not taking anything away from my other colleagues from the State of New York, but I hope that Members here do not think for one moment that because we are all from the State of New York that we agree on every issue. I want to make it very clear that there are those of us from the city of New York who have different views than those of us who represent the northern end of our State, which has very little to do with the city itself.

You can just as soon live in Indiana, or Massachusetts, or any other State, because it is a different philosophy. But just let me say, if I may, to all of my colleagues here this has been an issue that has been before us for many, many years, and I am hopeful that it will be resolved. I have heard that if you take Westway away we can take those moneys and put them into the subways. I would like very much to have our subways repaired. I think we need it in the city of New York.

But the bottom line is that it does not necessarily go hand and hand, that if you take money away from one, you put it into the other. That is an old political argument, because as soon as you eliminate one, the money may not be there for the second.

I want to make it clear to all of my colleagues here, I think Westway is a project that can be very beneficial and helpful to the city of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. GARCIA and by unanimous consent, Mr. SOLOMON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GARCIA. I thank the gentleman and appreciate my colleague yielding.

Just yesterday on the exit polls that were taken as people were leaving the polling places—and as most of you know, it was primary day in New York—over 70 percent, well over 70 percent, of the New Yorkers from all over the city of New York are in favor of the Westway project. I think it is important that we understand that there are some of us who have disagreements, and because we are from New York does not necessarily mean that we have the same interests.

Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague from New York for yielding.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Before I yield to the other gentleman from New York, you know, I have stood in this well and I have fought for New York City to get funds that were badly needed. New York City is the immigration capital of this country. It has special needs. For us to stand here and fight for this kind of funds, which are not really needed for the city, and then not to be able to get them when we really do need them is a bad thing to be doing.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to make sure that the gentleman, my distinguished friend, Mr. GARCIA, when he stated that New York City people disagree with New York State people on this issue, that he does not forget, that he did not forget that I happen to represent a district, in whose district Westway would lie in its entirety. I live in the city of New York, representing parts of Manhattan and the Bronx. I do not know the poll that the gentleman cited, but I know that up to that poll every poll and survey taken inside my district and anyplace else in the city of New York indicated that people are opposed to the project and support trading the program in for mass transit.

Mr. SOLOMON. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] has just made the best argument to vote for this amendment. The project is in his district. Those of you who believe in home rule and do not like to have projects jammed down your throat in your district, support the Coughlin amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a matter of who is proenvironment or antienvironment. It is not a question of pro-Westway or anti-Westway. Nor is it a matter of who wants to control Federal spending and who does not.

The issue is the creation of good transportation policy and fairness. It is a question of whether this House will support an amendment that is poor transportation policy, is unfair to one State and provides no alternatives to meet the legitimate transportation needs of New York City.

It is also a question of whether we should rush to approve this ill-conceived amendment that has already been rejected by the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee and the full Appropriations Committee. It was opposed by the chairman of the full committee and subcommittee. The House should not endorse this back door method of legislation on an appropriations bill when the authorizing committee that has sole jurisdiction over this matter is set to consider a well thought out proposal that will prohibit Westway yet deal with this issue fairly in a matter of days.

This is not a vote to determine who is anti-Westway. Nobody could possibly accuse me of being pro-Westway. I have already sponsored legislation that will stop this environmentally unsound misuse of highway trust funds. However, after years of work in the transportation field, I believe that the approach proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is simply unsound.

To begin with, this proposal does not even effectively prohibit Westway. It is a provision that has a life of 1 year. Unless this amendment were approved every year, Westway could be revived. Even if that were done, this amendment could easily be circumvented. It would bar Federal funds for the landfill that is estimated at $700 million but would not affect the rest of the project. In that case, New York could use its own funds for the landfill and still receive 90-percent Federal funding for the rest of the multibillion-dollar project.

The implications of this amendment should not be disregarded. This would be the first time that Congress would be telling a State that it could not build a legitimately approved segment of the Interstate Highway System. I do not believe that the Members of this body would want to take a step like that with this hastily prepared amendment on the wrong bill. If this type of action can be taken against New York, it could be taken against any other State.

It's also not fair to tell New York it cannot build this project and must come up with a complete new transportation plan within 2 weeks. That's what this amendment would do. It tells New York that if it does not develop a new transportation plan, in detail, by September 30, it will not get any of the funds it is entitled to for its Midtown Manhattan transportation problems. The proponents of this amendment say New York should trade in the Westway project for $1.7 billion in mass transit funds. Under this amendment, that could not be done. New York would not get its highway money and it would also not get its mass transit funds.

I don't believe that the Members of the House want to vote for that kind of proposal.

We should also consider the haste with which this step is being taken. The sponsor of this amendment came to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation earlier this year as the committee with jurisdiction over this issue and asked us to take action to stop Westway. We are doing that. We have legislation to be marked up in 2 weeks that will stop Westway. Let me make it clear. Whether or not this amendment is passed, we will not allow Westway to be built. But our proposal, drafted in the proper forum, is fair to New York and allows the development of good transportation policy. This amendment is unfair and poor policy.

I know that it is easy to vote for this amendment. If it is passed, only New York City is hurt—it does not affect the rest of the country. But we must look beyond that simplistic approach and consider what is right. There is a question of good policy and fairness. There is a right way to legislate. This amendment is not the right way to legislate. I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment and allow the Committee on Public Works and Transportation to pursue its legitimate role as the authorizing committee with jurisdiction. If you are truly concerned about transportation and about stopping Westway, you will vote against this amendment.

I would like to state that I am totally opposed to the Westway project, and I am totally opposed to this amendment. This amendment is not a pro- or anti-Westway amendment. During the debate there have been many arguments in favor of this amendment, talking about the budget deficit, about the fiscal situation, about how people need education, about how people need clothing, about how they need food. The gentleman from Michigan, and my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. GUARINI, made this point against Westway.

The fact is that there is no competition for those kinds of necessary things with Westway. Westway, if it is built, will be built with highway trust fund money which is designated only for the Federal-aid highway program.

Should there be a transfer of funds, in order to get transit money the funding would come from general revenues. Then we would be competing with food, clothing, and housing. This amendment has nothing to do with the budget.

One other point I would like to make: We have had extensive debate this afternoon on whether to vote yes or no on Westway. We have not had any debate on this amendment, and what we are going to be voting on is this amendment. The reason that we should reject this amendment is that it is so faulty.

What it says is that none of the funds in this bill may be used for the approval of, or to pay the salary of any person who approves projects to construct a landfill in the Hudson River as part of an interstate system.

It merely says that you cannot have anyone approve the landfill money.

Does that mean that this will eliminate Westway? No. Westway is a project of a tunnel offshore that will require 10 percent, or 230 acres, of the Hudson River will be filled in.

The plan for Westway is that about 130 acres will be used for parks and recreation. The other 100 would be used for real estate and commercial development. This is what we oppose in Westway.

However, if this amendment passes, you could still get Westway. There could still be the Federal money to build all of Westway with the exception of the cost of the landfill.

So if New York City decides that they will put their own money in for the landfill, the entire project can be built. Then New York could sell off the entire 230 acres of riverfront property for real estate development and none of that profit would go back to the highway trust fund or to the Federal Government. So it could still be built.

Another problem is this: Should New York say, "All right, we will not build the offshore interstate, we will build an interstate on land so we do not have a landfill," they would not be permitted to do that under this amendment. The only interstate that is permitted is the one under the design that was approved under the Federal-aid Highway Amendments of 1981.

This amendment does not set that aside. New York would be blocked from building an interstate on land.

Then people say, "Well, maybe they trade it in for other streets, and roads, and mass transit." The deadline for approval of interstate transfer is September 30. That is only 19 days away. Let us say it takes 2 weeks to get this bill through the other body, and to the President's desk, and to become law. That gives them 4 days for an interstate transfer. That interstate transfer must be in an application to the Federal Government, not just saying we want to transfer the funds, but it has to spell out how they are going to use that money for the streets and transit. They would not be able to do that in 4 days. New York then would be left without any chance for transit money or any other money.

What would New York do then? They cannot build the interstate under this amendment unless they are willing to pay for the landfill and they cannot get any transit money. This bill, inappropriate as it is, is only a 1-year bill. It only freezes this situation for 1 year. New York City would have no alternative but to sit back and wait for 1 year until this bill dies and then come back fighting for Westway again. It is a 1-year wait and delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HOWARD was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. HOWARD. There is legislation introduced in this year's highway transit bill that will deny Westway. It will do it in an orderly way, a proper and a fair way. It is not a "get-New York" amendment. But it will not allow Westway to be built. It prohibits the entire project. New York will not be able to build the landfill whether they use their own money or the Federal Government's money.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think my friend and colleague and very distinguished chairman and I are trying to accomplish the same thing. That is what disturbs me. I know that the gentleman has indicated that the highway trust fund was intended to be used for highway construction repair, not for this kind of a landfill project. Your own legislation prohibits the use of funds from the highway trust fund for the Westway project and permits the development of an interstate highway built on existing land.

I guess all we are trying to do here is to allow your committee the time to act, to prevent having an initiation of this landfill project until the gentleman's committee has had the opportunity to act. Whatever the gentleman does would supersede anything that is done here today. It is awfully important, it seems to me, to accomplish what the gentleman and I want to accomplish. We should not go precipitously into this big landfill project.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, what the amendment does, though, is leave open the possibility that Westway could be built. At the same time, the amendment precludes the situation where New York might want to build an interstate on land with no landfill at all.

It still leaves the opening for not 80 or 90 acres but 230 acres of landfill to be used for profit on real estate.

So what I think we should do, whether we are pro- or anti-Westway—and I am anti-Westway—is do what is sensible, what is orderly, what is fair. Let us defeat this amendment, and let us stop Westway in the proper way in this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

I thank the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I just heard the gentleman, my good friend, I might say, from New Jersey, Mr. HOWARD, saying that he is opposed to the project, but yet he is opposed to the amendment. I feel almost as confused as the young boy who dropped his gum in a chicken coop. The gentleman has had plenty of time to work on this issue through the years. I stopped this project from proceeding 2 years ago in the full Appropriations Committee. I am just wondering what the gentleman and his committee have been doing to resolve this issue during that period of time.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I would be glad to yield to my colleague from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

What we have been doing is monitoring this project. Just recently it became apparent that a great deal of this acreage was going to be used for real estate development. That is when we took our position in opposition. We have not been fooling around over there in the committee by not addressing this issue.

Mr. CONTE. Well, it would have been nice if the public works committee had moved promptly and killed this project. We gave you a 2-year leeway when I stopped this project in full committee 2 years ago.

I know your committee has a lot of work to do; you people have a big agenda.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment.

My concern about this project focuses especially on the striped bass, or the rockfish as they call it in Maryland, habitat in the Hudson River that will be completely destroyed by this proposed landfill.

On two occasions now, the Federal courts have stopped construction of the Westway project for failing to take into account of the habitat of the striped bass.

I know you are all familiar with the Federal legislation on striped bass adopted last year, requiring interstate efforts to restore the rockfish, or the striped bass, population. Just last month the State of Virginia imposed a permanent ban on the catching of rockfish, and other States are following suit.

We are spending millions of dollars to clean up the Chesapeake Bay habitat, which along with the Hudson River accounts for over 90 percent of the rockfish along the Atlantic Coast. How silly we would look today to spend millions of dollars to save the rockfish while we permit New York State to waste over $1 billion in Federal money for a landfill that would destroy the habitat of the rockfish along the Hudson River.

As my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. COUGHLIN, has pointed out, the Federal court in New York has enjoined further work on this project. Why, then, should we pass this amendment? The reason is that New York has to make a choice in the next several weeks over whether to continue to pursue this project, or to trade in this project for a badly needed transit funding. It is important that New York, and the Federal Highway Administration, understand that congressional intent does not permit the construction of landfills such as this, which are primarily for real estate development instead of transportation, with Federal highway money.

That point has been made clear by Chairman HOWARD in the Committee on Public Works, who introduced legislation of his own clarifying the issue of the legislative intent. But because of the time constraints, and because this bill is moving ahead of the new highway authorization, this restriction should be adopted today.

I know that many of the Members have heard from our former colleague and now mayor of New York, Ed Koch. I would like to close by reading remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 6, 1977, by the then-Member, Ed Koch.

On that day, Ed Koch inserted an extension entitled: "The Approval of Westway is an Environmental and Financial Fiasco That the Carter Administration Should Try To Correct."

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CONTE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. CONTE. I quote:

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, today Secretary of Transportation William T. Coleman announced his approval of the interstate highway segment proposed to be built on the West Side of New York in landfill in the Hudson River. This project is estimated to cost $1.2 billion at the present time, but will only provide 4.2 miles of roadway from the Battery in Lower Manhattan to 42d Street in New York City. Along with a number of my colleagues from New York City I signed a statement today that summarizes our views on the situation. Briefly we believe that the authority which exists in the Highway Act to substitute mass transit projects for this interstate segment should be employed. Even if the predominate share of the $1.2 billion were to be spent for mass transit improvments, there would still be money available for providing a suitable and small highway on New York's West Side.

Ed Koch opposed this project in 1977. Ed Koch was right, in 1977. The project has not changed at all. It is still an environmental and financial fiasco.

Ed, I hope you are watching this on C-SPAN. Shame on you, Ed Koch. Shame on you. Shame on you for trying to destroy our striped bass. Shame on you for trying to bail out these developers in New York, these greedy developers, who will fill in and destroy the habitat of all the striped bass and the rockfish.

Vote for the Coughlin amendment and return some sanity to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 287, noes 132, not voting 15, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RICHARDSON

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICHARDSON: On Page 26, line 5, strike the period and add the following: ": Provided further, notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, the amount available is reduced by $22,100,000.".

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is simply to conform to the House-Senate passed budget resolution by enacting what they decided and which we voted on prior to adjournment. A 1-year, 15-percent reduction for Amtrak. In effect, however, what this amendment basically does is it reduces the appropriation for Amtrak from $603.5 million, which the chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation offered recently in an amendment that was a 5-percent cut, and inserts in lieu thereof a total of $581.4 million.

This is not an anti-Amtrak amendment. I am not sitting here being critical of Amtrak. I am a strong supporter of Amtrak. Once again, this is not an anti-Amtrak amendment. I am the author of the authorization bill in the Energy and Commerce Committee for Amtrak. I am a strong supporter of it, but I think it is important that we be fiscally responsible and we simply follow what the House-Senate budget compromise has enacted.

In effect, what my amendment would do is it would simply reduce by approximately 1 percent what my colleague and chairman of the subcommittee, Representative LEHMAN, has done in his amendment. Once again, I believe that these cuts can be sustained. They will not affect existing service. I do think there are plenty of provisions in the authorization bill that ensure the viability of Amtrak. I think it has performed well; ridership is up.

On the other hand, I think if the message from our constituents in August was reduce the deficit, let us give the budget committees, which have proposed this guideline, that option of sticking very closely to them.

Once again, this is a painful amendment to somebody like myself. I have five Amtrak stops in my district. My district is entirely serviced by Amtrak, but I do think after discussions with Amtrak, that this cut can be easily sustained. It is a bipartisan effort that hopefully my colleague from Indiana, Mr. COATS, will support, and I respectfully ask the House to support this amendment.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENT. The gentleman from New Mexico made reference to the amendment adopted earlier by the committee that was offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN]. It was my understanding, and please correct me if I am wrong, that the Lehman amendment achieved the 15-percent level of savings for all transportation functions called for in the House budget resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not believe that it did. The Lehman amendment did not achieve that 15 percent. I will yield to my colleague to give you the correct answer. The 15 percent with the Lehman figure is not adhered to. The 15 percent is the 581 that I am proposing.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. The gentleman is correct. But let me point out that that 15 percent, as assumed in the budget resolution, is only advisory, and it is up to the Appropriations Committee to come up with the specific reductions to meet the overall spending target set in this resolution. We have done so. We are within our 302(b) allocation, and I will speak on this at greater length later on.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman.

(On request of Mr. COATS and by unanimous consent, Mr. RICHARDSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. COATS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman and I had worked in the Committee on Energy and Commerce to try to come up with a reasonable reduction in the funding for Amtrak that would preserve a national rail transportation system, but yet allow Amtrak to attain some cost savings and operate in a more efficient way.

There was some debate about whether that reduction should be 10 percent or 15 percent. The Senate was looking at approximately a 30-percent reduction. Ultimately the question was resolved that we would look to the Budget Committee and the final budget resolution as to the level for reduction. That budget resolution that most of us voted for here on the floor, on a bipartisan basis, came in with a 15-percent reduction in Amtrak's Federal subsidies. We declared a victory on the budget; we went home and told our constituents that we have enacted meaningful budget deficit reductions. That these reductions were going to stick; that these were real reductions; and that these reductions really meant something. That interest rates could now come down.

Now we are back here faced with the first real test of whether we meant what we said. Whether we are willing to enforce that budget resolution. This is a very basic amendment. The Appropriations Committee amended the reduction in Amtrak from the original 10 percent to approximately 11.5 percent. This amendment simply moves the reduction to 15 percent. A small, 3.5-percent increment to bring it in line with what the House majority agreed to do just before we left for the August recess.

I think the gentleman's amendment has a great deal of merit, and it has a symbolic importance, far more important than just this issue. That issue, the real issue that we are dealing with is whether or not we are willing to abide by what we said last August, we were going to do.

So in order to meet those budget goals, in order to demonstrate our political will to the people back home, I think we ought to adopt this amendment. Now, we wish we had the opportunity to make this change in the authorization bill first, before we dealt with the appropriation. Unfortunately, for whatever reason, the appropriations bill was brought up before the authorization bill. Therefore, this is our opportunity to bring the appropriations bill in line with what we agreed to do.

There are numerous ways that Amtrak can achieve these additional 3.5-percent savings without discontinuing raillines, without interrupting any service. We worked and listed a number of ways in the Commerce, Transportation, Tourism Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, however we thought it better to leave the discretion to Amtrak as to how they could achieve these savings. Graham Claytor, president of Amtrak, runs a great little railroad. He has made some significant strides, and we think he can find this additional 3.5 percent. If he cannot, we have a number of suggestions that we can give him. Our committee has pledged to work with him in finding these savings.

I think it is important for Members on both sides of the aisle to stick to our agreement; do what we agreed to do in August, and show those people back home that when the first test is up before us, we are willing to stand up and do what we agreed to do.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to commend the gentleman for his bipartisan effort in support of this amendment. Once again, we are pro-Amtrak. This is simply to statistically conform to the House-Senate budget agreement. If we are going to stick to this agreement, which is important, which was adopted right before we adjourned, I think this is a minimal effort. A $22 million reduction out of hundreds of millions of dollars will not affect operations, and I think it is important that in this first vote of the session that we conform with that figure.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Earlier this afternoon this committee passed a $1 billion reduction in a variety of accounts. That meets the spirit and the intent of what this House voted on before it adjourned in August. Included among the accounts that we voted on was a $12.5 million reduction in Amtrak.

Last year Amtrak was at $684 million. We brought the bill to the floor of the House at $616 million. On the floor of the House today we reduced it to $603.5 million. That to me is what I call fiscal responsibility on Amtrak.

I do not want to be a friend of Amtrak and cut it down to the bone to where it cannot operate. I want Amtrak to survive. It has already taken its fair share of cuts. There is already an 11.8-percent reduction in Amtrak. I do not think it is responsible to make any further reductions if we really want to keep a viable national passenger railroad.

If additional savings are required, the only responsible way to achieve them, as my friend, the gentleman from New Mexico, knows is through changes in authorizing legislation concerning collective bargaining, the cost-sharing with the freight railroads, and the like. I would hope in his authorizing committee that he will pursue these kinds of savings.

Let me repeat what I said before: That the amounts assumed in the budget resolution are only assumptions. They are only advisory. They are not across-the-board cuts. They are not specified. It is up to the Committee on Appropriations to come up with the specific reductions to meet the overall spending targets set in the budget resolution. The budget resolution sent a 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Appropriations. We have our 302(b) allocation from that 302(a) allocation from the Committee on Appropriations. We are within this allocation.

I would urge the defeat of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico and preserve a viable Amtrak passenger operation that is now beginning to serve this country as it should be.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to rise in strong support of the position of the subcommittee chairman. First of all, I back his comments about the validity of the figure that he currently has in the bill as it relates to Amtrak. I think it is the proper one.

But there is another very important point here, and that is that the Committee on the Budget has made an overall figure clear for transit spending, but it does not have the responsibility, and I say this as a member of the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations, to determine specific levels as it relates to various kinds of transportation funding. That is the jurisdiction of this committee and the subcommittee, particularly in light of the amendment that was offered and agreed to at the very beginning, offered by the chairman. It has met its responsibilities to the Committee on the Budget. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] and his subcommittee have done what we have asked them to do in the budget process.

We do not need to now, in a more detailed way, restrict their ability to make priorities among the various transportation accounts, so I would urge the committee to stand with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] and against the amendment. We have met our budget resolution figure. We do not need to cut Amtrak further here to accomplish that overall goal.

I appreciate the position the gentleman has taken.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COATS. I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman indicated that the Appropriations Subcommittee met its overall goal of the budget process, yet Amtrak was not brought to the level that the Committee on the Budget suggested.

Could the gentleman tell me where the cuts were made and in what other programs they were made in order to reach that overall goal?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. We made cuts in a number of areas. We made cuts in the FAA. We made cuts in the Urban Mass Transportation Administration and in other areas.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. Chairman. I strongly oppose this amendment to make a further cut in the appropriations for Amtrak. Under the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, which was already adopted, Amtrak has already been cut another $12.5 million to a level of $603.5 million, an amount which is 11.4 percent below last year's level of $684 million. I might add that I supported that reduction very reluctantly, and did so only because it was a part of an overall, billion dollar reduction to bring this bill in line with our need to reduce the Federal deficit.

In my view, any further reduction in Amtrak spending would be extremely unwise. In a letter to me dated September 3, 1985, Graham Claytor, the president of Amtrak, indicated that even with full funding at the freeze level of $684 million, Amtrak would have to absorb an estimated $63 million in inflation over its 1985 costs. He indicated that a 10-percent cut would require substantial reductions in Amtrak's 1986 capital program, and holding wages and salaries at the 1985 level despite the fact that they are already 12 percent below average rail industry rates.

In addition, further changes would have to include the deferment of equipment overhauls and some nonsafety-related Northeast corridor right-of-way improvements.

He indicated that any further reductions of the kind contemplated by this amendment, would require significant cutbacks in service frequencies.

Mr. Chairman, this would be exactly the wrong time to make this kind of a drastic reduction in Amtrak funding. All indications are that service is improving, and Amtrak is consistently relying on the Federal Government for less and less of its budget. Unlike most other transportation programs, Amtrak is an ongoing business in a very competitive service industry. Further reducing Amtrak funding, and forcing service cuts, is exactly the way to prevent Amtrak from continuing its effort to gradually reduce its need for Federal appropriations.

Perhaps the strongest recommendation for Amtrak, other than the hundreds of letters from Amtrak riders who support the continuation of Amtrak service, lies in the fact that the Department of Transportation's original budget submitted to OMB called for $765 million—$81 million more than last year.

Although Amtrak was knocked out of the budget by my friend, the now-missed young slasher, Dave Stockman, it is clear from the original departmental submission that the transportation experts want to see Amtrak funded at the highest possible level.

Mr. Chairman, Amtrak has made dramatic improvements during the past 14 years in its on-time performance, its operating efficiency, and its revenue-to-cost ratio. Amtrak's level of subsidy has steadily decreased, and it has met or exceeded the revenue-to-cost requirements that the Congress has set.

It would be a transportation policy disaster, and a grave fiscal error, to cut Amtrak off just as it seems to be coming into its own.

Finally, let me address the question of the budget resolution. Earlier today, we adopted an amendment to bring this bill in line with our overall need to reduce the Federal deficit. We cut $1 billion from this bill. Let me say that the Budget Committee's recommendations are just that—recommendations. Under the Budget Act, it is the Appropriations Committee's responsibility to evaluate the competing needs for transportation funding. We have held numerous hearings, and have recommended the level in this bill.

Our obligation under the Budget Act is for the Appropriations Committee to spend no more than the permissible amount for the total of all appropriations bills. We have made overall recommendations to comply with that obligation, and this particular amendment is not required in order to meet our responsibilities to reduce the Federal deficit.

Mr. Chairman, if an authorization bill should be enacted that reduces Amtrak spending, of course that would control. But in the absence of such an enactment, I urge that the recommendations of the committee be followed, and that Amtrak be permitted to stay on track.

I urge the defeat of the amendment.

AMTRAK,
NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORPORATION,
Washington, DC., September 3, 1985.

Hon. SILVIO O. CONTE,
House of Representatives, Rayburn Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE CONTE: Thank you for your letter of August 9 regarding the impact a 15 percent funding reduction would have on Amtrak's ability to operate the current route system.

In testimony before Congress this year, I urged support for a funding freeze of $684 million to operate our national railroad passenger system in fiscal year 1986. Even with full funding at the freeze level Amtrak would have to absorb an estimated $63 million in inflation over our FY1985 costs. Amtrak considered this a bare bones budget which would have required continued significant improvements in productivity over our current performance.

In response to questioning, however, I stated that it may be possible for Amtrak to continue to operate essentially the same routes it operates today if we receive funding at a level 10 percent below the fiscal year 1985 baseline. I had hoped that we would get by with this funding level and that we would be able, through our internally achieved efficiencies, to generate an acceptable maintenance posture and capital program in the out years. Among the actions Amtrak indicated it would take to operate with a 10 percent funding cut include:

Substantial reduction in the scope of Amtrak's capital program in FY86.

Hold employee wages and salaries at or near FY85 levels, in spite of the fact that wages are already 12 percent below rail industry rates, and middle and upper management salaries have a significantly greater differential.

Possible reduction of on-board service crew sizes and station manning levels, with some resulting adverse impact on quality of service and revenues.

Defer equipment overhauls and some right-of-way maintenance in the Northeast Corridor to the extent possible without impacting safety.

Limited reductions and the rearrangement of frequencies in the Northeast Corridor and on some long-distance routes, limited so as not to trigger labor protection obligations.

As you indicate, the FY86 First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget recommends a 15 percent funding cut for Amtrak, which is $34 million below the subcommittee mark, and a total of $100 million below Amtrak's FY1985 funding level. If Amtrak funding is reduced by $34 million in addition to the 10 percent reduction already contemplated, it will probably require elimination of frequencies in the Northeast and the restructuring of more additional long-distance routes from daily to tri-weekly service. Unlike most of the other programs and agencies that the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee funds, Amtrak is an ongoing business in a very competitive industry. It is unrealistic to believe that a $100 million reduction in our funding from one year to the next will not have significant effects on both the level and quality of service we provide. In sum, Amtrak will survive with a 10 percent budget reduction and can accomplish many of these savings by taking actions that are based on sound business practices, but the company's long-term economic health and long-term program to continue to improve our service while requiring less and less federal operating support would be jeopardized by Appropriations Committee actions that imposed more drastic funding reductions in any one year.

With respect to your comments on the Montrealer, Amtrak is considering a series of changes which include establishing a stop in Greenfield, Massachusetts and shifting the operation of the train to a daylight schedule. I have asked my staff to review the feasibility of instituting an additional stop at Holyoke, Massachusetts and will advise you of our findings as soon as the analysis is complete.

Your support for Amtrak is appreciated more than I can tell you. I hope I have adequately answered your questions. Please do not hesitate to contact me if I can be of further assistance.

Sincerely,

W. GRAHAM CLAYTOR, Jr.,
President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CONTE was allowed to proceed for 30 additional seconds.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, let me direct my attention to the gentleman from New Mexico and the gentleman from Indiana. If you are going to go by every assumption of the Budget Committee resolution and not the bottom line that they give us, you might as well make an amendment to this amendment and repeal the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct an inquiry to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN], the manager of the bill.

I observe on page 83 of the committee report the following language:

The amount recommended for research and technical assistance includes $5,000,000 for continuation of the cold weather transit technology program * * *.

I think that is an important program, with very positive prospects of saving lives. It is my understanding that the bill included such directions, last year, but that the money never was spent. Is that fundamentally correct?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that is true. The distinguished majority leader is absolutely right.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the distinction I discern is that this year you have attributed a specific sum; namely, $5 million, earmarked expressly for that research and technical assistance program; is that correct?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WRIGHT. And I discern therefrom that under the rules and the law the administration is expected to spend it?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. That is right, unless they defer it or rescind it, and that would take action that I do not think would be forthcoming.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we hear a lot of talk from time to time about how the deficits that this country is faced with are, in fact, Presidential deficits, and that this Congress has been responsible in what it has done and, in fact, deficits cannot be blamed upon us.

Here is one of these amendments that gives us some clear way of defining what is real in this business of defining deficits, and I would hope that we would vote in that way.

The President had suggested in this bill a budget for transportation that was $3.3 billion under what the subcommittee reported and $2.3 billion under the measure as now amended by the subcommittee on the floor. Six hundred million dollars of that $2.3 billion is in the Amtrak account.

The President has suggested that what we should do on Amtrak is eliminate the Government subsidy completely, and he suggests that we have had 14 years of Amtrak attempting to get on its feet with taxpayer money, so what we now have is not a case of a viable system being created; what we have is a process, as the chairman of the subcommittee honestly admitted, of trying to maintain a viable system.

Now, the question becomes this: How long are we going to do that, and what do we regard as "viable"? Because as the OMB has made clear on a couple of occasions, we now have lines on Amtrak where it would be cheaper for us to fly people first class aboard airlines than to have them take the train. The Government would be better off, and the taxpayers would be better off flying people first class than having them on those raillines with the kind of subsidy money we are spending.

That is ridiculous. The taxpayers in times of deficits should not be asked to do that kind of thing, and, in fact, the President is correct, that this is one of those programs we ought to look at for total elimination, saving $600 million and thereby doing something about the deficit.

But, of course, this Congress does not like to look at the elimination of any program. So what we end up doing is trying to act incrementally about spending, and at least with this amendment what we are doing is trying to incrementally reduce the program a little bit—a program that ought to be eliminated, and a case can be made for eliminating it completely. At least we ought to cut back a little bit.

What is the gentleman from New Mexico proposing? He is proposing a $22.1 million cut in that $600 million account. That hardly seems to be to be something that is going to wreck the total viability of the system, and it hardly seems to me to be anything which is going to get the Government completely out of the Amtrak business. It is just an attempt to do a little something toward addressing the deficit and come a little closer to what the budget resolution says we ought to be doing.

I recognize that the Appropriations Committee does not like us bringing up points where the budget resolution and the appropriations process are in conflict, but the fact is that the budget process is constantly being undermined on the House floor with this whole process of figuring things a different way. The problem with that is that every time we figure things a different way we end up raising spending, and over the last 5 years we have overspent our own budgets by $150 billion.

Now, that did not just emerge out of thin air. That came about as a result of us deciding consciously to spend more money in appropriation bills than what we had budgeted. That came about as a result of supplemental appropriations, it came about as add-ons to continuing appropriations, and it comes about for a variety of reasons. But the fact is we are overspending our own budgets around here constantly. This is one more case where we can cast one small vote to try to bring the appropriations more in line with the budget.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that here is a program we should be talking about eliminating completely. At the very least we ought to be talking about cutting it back a little bit. I support the amendment.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to rise in opposition to my good friends and colleagues, the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and New Mexico, but I would point out that we have cut the funding for Amtrak, not once but twice. We cut the funding for Amtrak in subcommittee, and we cut the funding for Amtrak again in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN], chairman of the subcommittee, which was adopted on the floor of the House only a few hours ago.

We are at the budget level for the transportation function as a result of the amendment introduced by the subcommittee chairman. The appropriations Committee has made its own cuts as is its right to determine where the cuts should be made.

In the Transportation Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee we spent untold hours trying to review all the transportation programs and decide which priorities should be which. We have looked at this, we have looked at what the Budget Committee wanted, and we have looked at the bottom line. We have met the bottom line. We have a bill that meets the Budget Committee's recommendation; it is much less than last year, much below the freeze level.

Mr. Chairman, let me further point out that Amtrak has a peculiar problem in adjusting service levels about which many people are unaware. My good colleague and friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, referred to some lines that may not pay their own way. One of the problems Amtrak has is that the discontinuing of a line that even Amtrak might want to discontinue triggers what are called labor protection payments. That means that we have got to pay the people affected the equivalent of 6 years' wages as a result of the discontinuance of a particular line. In many cases the discontinuance of lines would cost more than they would save because of lack of control of those labor protection payments and lack of action by this Congress, if you will, to eliminate the triggering of those payments as lines are changed.

So I think what has been done here by the Appropriations Committee and by the Transportation Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee is entirely in order. We are at the budget level. We have reduced Amtrak. If we are forced to reduce it more, it is not going to be able to function. Amtrak is important, not just to provide passenger service for this country, as is provided in every other nation, but also for national defense.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUGHLIN. I am happy to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his statement and join him and the chairman of the subcommittee, along with the ranking minority member of the full committee, in opposition to this amendment.

It is clear that we have substantially reduced the spending in this bill. It is clear that we have also substantially reduced Amtrak funding from last year. I think it is also clear that Amtrak has been doing a better job year by year in managing its system and maintaining a viable rail passenger service in this country. To cut deeper, I think, would do violence to that system, and I hope that this body will reject the proposed amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the language in the report on page 6 with regard to protecting the health and safety of airline passengers, and I would like to commend the committee for that language.

I think this is a very serious matter. I would point out that it is possible to have legislation on this. I think it would pass overwhelmingly in this body. Legislation would require what the report language expects the Department to do same thing, but it is preferable for the Department to take action as the report expects. The committee has called to the attention of the Department the problems in airports, and if they take it seriously, they can do it. If they do not, I think there is no alternative in the future than to have some kind of a legislative solution.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for its action in this matter.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment which seeks further cuts in the Federal subsidy for Amtrak.

Reductions already proposed in this legislation are adequate inasmuch as a funding level of $603 million would afford Amtrak adequate opportunity to make the transition from a subsidized to a nonsubsidized entity over a period of time. An additional cut of 5 percent, as proposed by the gentleman from New Mexico, would mean a certain and premature death to the Nation's passenger railroad system.

I am informed and convinced that any further cuts in funding for fiscal 1986 would necessitate the deferral of maintenance, equipment overhauls, and roadbed repairs for the system. Such a deferral, in the opinion of numerous rail experts, would cause the entity to fall into a desperate state of disrepair—probably to the point of no return.

Amtrak has done a commendable job thus far in cutting costs both in the areas of labor and general operations. In fact, negotiations are currently underway between Amtrak and labor unions to further reduce labor costs. Industry estimates claim that, given adequate time, these costs could be reduced by an additional $100 to $150 million. In light of the substantial Federal investment in Amtrak already, it would be, in my judgment, unwise for the Congress to rush into a plan which would have the effect of killing Amtrak merely for short-term gain.

I would hope that my colleagues would agree that this amendment would not be in the Nation's best interest and that the amendment should be rejected.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRIS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman and join in the sentiments that he expressed in opposition to this particular amendment.

I believe the gentleman from Virginia represents the area in which the National Airport is situated, is that correct?

Mr. PARRIS. My district borders that facility.

Mr. LENT. I just want to point out to the gentleman one other fact, that 12,000 passengers travel on the airlines between New York and Washington every day and 17,500 travel on the Amtrak between the same two cities. If the Amtrak were to be zeroed out as a result of this, I believe, unwise and injudicious cut a much greater burden would be placed on La Guardia Airport, Newark Airport, and National Airport. Given the number of landings and takeoffs at National Airport, I do not think that airport could reasonably handle the additional burden. I just wanted to throw that in as sort of a makeway argument on why we need to keep Amtrak in business, at least in the Northeast corridor.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution and for his comments.

Let me just add one other thought. In response to the observations of my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], I take, as a Member of this body, a back seat to nobody in terms of his voting record in support of fiscal responsibility; but I do not think you can approach this or any other issue that comes before us in the exercise of these sometimes awesome responsibilities solely from a fiscal point of view. Money is important. Taxes are too high. We would like to reduce Government costs, but that is not the only consideration. The quality of life of the passenger railroad system of this Nation is important to this Nation. I think we have to keep that in mind and reject this amendment.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, just a quick summary, I want to make sure that the Members understand that even though there was some discussion about zeroing out Amtrak, removing the Government subsidy from Amtrak, the Richardson amendment does not do that. It simply cuts an additional 3½ percent from the appropriation that is currently before us. This amendment brings it in line with what the House agreed to do in the budget resolution, that was passed on a bipartisan basis just before we adjourned for the August recess. We are not talking about eliminating routes. We are not talking about eliminating Amtrak. In fact, we are not even necessarily talking about reducing service.

Amtrak has demonstrated an improvement in its service and in its efficiency. That is why we are able to come forward with a lower subsidy than what was previously asked for. That is why Mr. Claytor, President of Amtrak, was able to come before our STE committee and testify that he could operate the railroad in an efficient way and provide full service on a national basis with less money than he had asked from Congress in previous years.

As we are staring at horrendous deficits with untold consequences on our economy and on our future, when someone comes forward and says we can run a railroad with less, I think we ought to listen to him and do what we can.

Mr. Claytor did say that he wanted a 10-percent cut—or would accept a 10-percent cut. We think we can go that additional 5 percent and still provide effective, efficient Amtrak service on a national basis.

As I indicated before when the gentleman yielded to me, a number of suggestions were made in the committee as to ways in which cost savings could be achieved that would not jeopardize the service of Amtrak. We continue to stand ready to work with Amtrak in bringing about and implementing those changes.

So to summarize, let me just state to the Members what we are voting on here is a 3½-percent reduction in funding for Amtrak, which brings it in line with a budget resolution that this body passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Crane for, with Mrs. Long against.

Messrs. ORTIZ, DE LA GARZA, LIGHTFOOT, and BOEHLERT changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mrs. LLOYD changed her vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I?

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 298, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been here, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. CARR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I simply wanted to express my appreciation to the subcommittee, its chairman, and particularly to the gentleman from Michigan for including in the report language that goes along with this legislation recognition by this body of the unequal distribution of noise at the Burbank Airport, which is located in my district, and the fact that the committee's report language urges the FAA and the airport authority to put together a program of runway utilization which will correct that inequity of noise. And furthermore, it is my hope that the subcommittee at its next markup for the fiscal year 1987 bill will review and exercise oversight over the actions of the FAA and the authority and meet the objectives set forth in that report language.

Mr. CARR. I want to commend the gentleman from California for bringing this matter to our attention. He has been a leader in the Congress and to our committee, although he is not a member of our committee, to our committee on this noise compatibility problem in his district. I think the people in his district ought to be very grateful for the leadership he has exercised.

I want to underscore what the gentleman has said and emphasize to the FAA and to the airport authority out there in California that we are very serious about this problem, and that when we hold hearings next year on the FAA budget, we are going to be expecting that there be some positive and significant movement toward a solution to this problem.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

ARCHITECTURAL AND TRANSPORTATION BARRIERS COMPLIANCE BOARD

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time for the purposes of a colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee. It is with reference to a harbor in my area, Morro Bay Harbor, which has a reputation along the central coast as having one of the most dangerous harbor entrances along the coast. Since 1964, some 15 lives have been lost at the harbor, and there have been other major catastrophes that have been averted just barely. Last year, for example, a boat carrying a number of children was turned over at the entrance to the harbor because of the conditions there.

The city is trying to correct this situation by locating a harbor office with a better view of the entrance to the harbor. The Coast Guard has indicated an interest in utilizing that facility so that they can provide more effective navigational services to users of the harbor.

Recognizing those conditions, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman and the subcommittee to provide in the statement of managers direction to the Secretary that she provide funding within available funds to the city of Morro Bay for the construction of this harbor office, and that the Secretary should work with the city in implementing a plan to allow this facility to be utilized by the Coast Guard and other agencies with navigational responsibilities at the harbor.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from California for bringing this to our attention today. I want to assure him that when we reach the conference on this bill with the other body that we will endeavor to put his language in the statement of the managers.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the chairman and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PICKLE

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment Offered by Mr. PICKLE: Amend Section 317 by:

Adding the following new Subsection (b):

(b) Section 5(c)(4) of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 amended by striking the period at the end of the first sentence, and inserting the following: "except that any fiscal year 1982 funds made available to a Governor under section (b)(2) of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, as amended, that are unobligated as of October 1, 1985, or become unobligated thereafter, shall remain available for expenditure under section 5 until October 1, 1986.".

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely clarifies the intent of the committee that section 5 UMTA money allocated to a State's Governor may be spent in urban areas over 200,000.

To explain, section 5 is the pre-1983 UMTA Special Revenue Sharing Program. The Congress replaced the section 5 program with a new program in the 1982 Mass Transit Act.

Thus, since fiscal year 1982, a small amount of section 5 money, originally given to a Governor to spend in cities under 200,000 is unspent, because these areas do not have mass transit programs.

In section 317 of the committee bill, the committee allows a Governor to spend this fiscal year 1982 and fiscal year 1983 section 5 money in urban areas over 200,000 if there is a mass transit need.

Unfortunately, it is late in the fiscal year and the committee's intent may be defeated by the clock as far as fiscal year 1982 funds are concerned because on October 1, these funds are to be spent by DOT under the new program.

Specifically, my amendment allows the fiscal year 1982 funds allocated to a Governor to be spent under section 5 until October 1, 1986, just like the fiscal year 1983 money.

UMTA has no objections to the committee amendment or my clarifying amendment.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have studied the amendment. It is a worthwhile amendment. It serves a useful purpose.

Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have also examined the amendment. It is a good amendment. We accept the amendment.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank both of the gentleman very much. I am grateful for their cooperation.

Mr. Chairman, I move adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 318. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, within 60 days of the effective date of this Act the Urban Mass Transportation Administration shall reapportion under section 9 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, as amended, those funds available for reapportionment pursuant to subsection (c)(4) of section 5 of that Act.

SEC. 319. None of the funds in this or any other Act shall be made available for the proposed Woodward light rail line in the Detroit, Michigan, area until a source of operating funds has been approved in accordance with Michigan law: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to alternatives analysis studies under section 21(a)(2)(B) of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, as amended.

SEC. 320. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall, with regard to the Discretionary Grants Program of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, within 30 days after the enactment of this section, issue a letter of intent and enter into a full funding contract with the Southern California Rapid Transit District for $429,000,000 to complete the Minimum Operable Segment, MOS-1, of the Downtown Los Angeles to the San Fernando Valley Metro Rail Project: Provided, That the $429,000,000 shall include $11,800,000 earmarked for fiscal year 1984, $117,200,000 earmarked for fiscal year 1985, $130,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and, subject to the availability of funds from Congress, $170,000,000 in subsequent fiscal years.

(b) The Urban Mass Transportation Administration shall enter into a contract with the Southern California Rapid Transit District to conduct a study of the potential methane gas risks relating to the proposed alignment of the Metro Rail Project beyond the Minimum Operable Segment, MOS-1. The study shall develop alternative alignments and appropriate environmental documents so that construction will not penetrate the "potential risk zones" and "high potential risk zones" as defined by the Task Force Report on the March 24, 1985, Methane Gas Explosion and Fire in the Fairfax Area, City of Los Angeles. The study shall be completed no later than nine months after the date of enactment of this legislation. Funds for this study, in an amount not to exceed $1,000,000, shall be made available from funds previously allocated for the MOS-1 project, commencing within 30 days of enactment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WAXMAN

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] indicate which of his amendments he is offering?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that would be before us would be the amendment printed in the RECORD. That amendment will be modified, and I will discuss the modifications which I desire.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment Offered by Mr. WAXMAN: Page 41, strike out line 14 and all that follows through page 42, line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) None of the funds described in subsection (a) may be made available for any segment of the Downtown Los Angeles to the San Fernando Valley Metro Rail Project unless—

(1) the Southern California Rapid Transit District establishes an independent committee of experts to conduct detailed studies of the entire Metro Rail Project route and the potential hazards associated with the occurrence of methane gas;

(2) before the expiration of the 9-month period following the date of the enactment of this act, the committee established under paragraph (1) submits recommendations to the Southern California Rapid Transit District regarding any adjustments in the Metro Rail Project route that are required to avoid tunneling into or through any area where the occurrence of methane gas presents a potential hazard;

(3) the Southern California Rapid Transit District submits to the Urban Mass Transportation Administration binding plans that—

(A) incorporate the recommendations of the committee submitted under paragraph (2); and

(B) indicate that no part of the Metro Rail Project will tunnel into or through any zone designated as a potential risk zone or high potential risk zone in the report of the City of Los Angeles dated June 10, 1985, and entitled "Task Force Report on the March 24, 1985 Methane Gas Explosion and Fire in the Fairfax Area"; and

(4) the Urban Mass Transportation Administration approves such plans.

Mr. WAXMAN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman reserves a point of order.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will state her parliamentary inquiry.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, is this the amendment that has been made in order under the existing rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has reported the amendment that is in order under the existing rule.

Ms. FIEDLER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment before us is an amendment made in order under the rule, and I will seek a modification of that amendment in order to have it comply with an agreement that we have worked out and which we will discuss shortly.

But let me explain the problem as to why we are discussing this issue at all.

For some years now in Los Angeles we have been trying to get a rapid transit metrorail system. The process has taken years—in fact, over a decade. Last year, we appropriated money for the project and yet the construction has not yet started.

I have been a supporter of the metrorail system, and I continue to be a supporter of the metrorail system. However, in March of this year in an area that would be envisioned by the original route of the metrorail system, there was an explosion. None of us thought at first that there would be any particular connection with the metrorail, but the reality was that this explosion was due to methane gas in that area. The mayor of our city appointed a task force. The task force went out to find out why the explosion took place. The designated two areas: a potential high risk area surrounded by a potential risk area.

We have been concerned about the idea of tunneling through that area. We have had a conflict in testimony.

Some experts say, "Well, sure, it is a risky area, but we can do it safely."

Others have told us in the testimony that we received at a hearing that I held for my subcommittee in June of this year that the construction of such a subway system is fraught with peril. One witness described that if they hit an expected methane gas pocket, it could be like a fireball, costing the lives of the people working on that system.

Well, it seems to me foolhardy to tunnel through an area and take that kind of a risk to the workers involved, and later to the people that will be riding that metrorail system and to the surrounding community, the people living in the surrounding community.

We have proposed to everyone involved that we must accomplish three results: First, to avoid penetrating through this risky area because we did not think it made any sense to continue the idea of tunneling through an area where there is a risk.

Second, the city task force looked at this area and said there is a risk here but there may well be a risk as great in other areas along the metrorail route.

The only reason that they have not looked at the rest of that route is because they have only had an explosion in one part of that route.

We have said there has to be a reevaluation of the safety in light of this explosion, in light of the fact that we know now about the danger of methane gas along that route.

Further, we said there has not only to be a reevaluation but it has to be done independently of the people who insist they can go forward safely.

What our amendments would do is, first of all, ask my colleagues to join in making clear that the language offered in the committee by my friend and colleague, Mr. DIXON, that would call for a rerouting of that subway system out of that risk area be, in fact, guaranteed. Second, we have asked that a study be done of the safety of the route, particularly the second segment of the route. The amendment would further clarify that part.

Now, I have genuine concern about the first segment of the metrorail system as well. However, while the amendment that is before us would require that funds not be dispensed, construction not begun, and other limitations be made on the metrorail system until such time as they reevaluate the safety of the first section, we have been convinced that to put this in the statute may well be harmful to the progress of metrorail finally getting started. So we have agreed to ask the transportation committee of the city of Los Angeles, the city council, to convene an independent committee of technical experts comprised of 10 people, 2 of whom we would be permitted to recommend to be on that committee. The technical committee would deliberate on the question of methane gas safety and whether tunneling is unsafe in that first MOS segment. Their deliberations would be open to the public.

Councilwoman Pat Russell from the city of Los Angeles, who is chairman of that city council committee, would appoint the chair of the technical committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WAXMAN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. WAXMAN. The councilwoman would appoint the chair of the technical committee, and the technical committee would establish its own rules.

The technical committee would report to the transportation committee of the city council in a public hearing, and that committee, the transportation committee of the council, would adopt findings or take whatever action they deem appropriate. The technical committee and the transportation committee would complete that work, their work, by December 31, 1985. This would be a response to a letter that Congressman DIXON and I would send to Councilwoman Russell.

The reason this makes sense to us is, what we want is a second look into the safety issue before tunneling begins, before construction starts.

Let us look at it again from a technical point of view. Let us reevaluate this whole matter in light of the fact that we have had an explosion. Then let us have someone who is politically accountable to the public deal with that technical committee's report. Let them do it in the sunshine and open to the public of the people of Los Angeles so that they may be able to participate and understand what decisions are being made.

If we can accomplish that result for the first segment, a study of the continued route thereafter which will provide for reports annually to the Congress of the United States so that we will have those reports before any other appropriation would be made to metrorail and an assurance that we will not be tunneling through an area that is already designated as risky by the city task force, it seems to me we ought to then go forward with a proposal that has come out of the Appropriations Committee.

Now, in a minute, Congressman DIXON will be introducing a substitute which would bring this proposal that is before us into conformity with exactly the points that I have raised.

I would like to engage Mr. DIXON in a colloquy before he takes that step and ask him to confirm the statements that I have made as to what will be undertaken with respect to the evaluation of the first segment by the transportation committee of the Los Angeles City Council and his understanding of the way that we have presented to this Committee of the Whole the procedure in dealing with the metrorail.

Mr. DIXON. Yes, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. WAXMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIXON. The gentleman is correct when he indicates that in a moment I will be offering a substitute amendment to Mr. WAXMAN's amendment, and you are certainly correct in saying that we are all concerned with the safety of the metrorail project that the Transportation Committee, under the direction of Congressman LEHMAN, has provided funds, for in this bill.

The gentleman is also correct in saying that we have reached an agreement outside of the legislation to independently ask the chairman of the Transportation Committee to look into this matter by appointing a technical committee, of which you have two representatives, and that they will make a finding or report back to the Transportation Committee, and that that Transportation Committee will make a finding.

Where we have disagreed from time to time as good friends is to the whole issue of safety; and although I am agreeing because I think certainly 10 ounces of prevention is worth it under the circumstances, I want to make it clear that I still maintain that the metrorail system is safe, particularly MOS-1.

I certainly agreed to offer an amendment in the full committee which the gentleman is perfecting here that makes it clear that those high potential risk zones will not be tampered with in any way, shape, or form.

The gentleman and I would differ, though, as it relates to understandable concern, because I would indicate to the gentleman that the explosion had nothing to do with metrorail. Everyone should understand that there is no construction going on.

To me, although the gentleman would disagree, the similarity between metrorail and the explosion was in fact that there is methane gas there that in the tunneling we wil have to deal with; we are not going to go through the area, so we will not deal with it; but to me, that is the only similarity.

Obviously, the reports that have been done indicate that there can be tunneling safety.

Mr. WAXMAN. If I might reclaim my time, just to add a few points, Mr. Chairman.

I hope the gentleman is correct; I know he is as concerned as I am about safety, as is Mayor Bradley and everyone else involved in supporting the metrorail system.

I cannot tell the gentleman it is unsafe. I would not seek to make that claim. What I believe must be done is that we take a look at this thing again in light of the fact that we have had an explosion.

When we did look at it again, we found that metrorail's consulting engineers classified the rail alignment into regions designated "high level hazard"; "medium level hazard"; and "low level hazard."

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WAXMAN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. WAXMAN. According to the consultants, the hazard designation was based upon the concentration and pressure. Six stations were designated by the engineers as high level hazards, including three stations in MOS-1; the Civil Center station, the Fifth and Hill station, and the Seventh and Flower station. There are only five stations in MOS-1, and three of them are, or 60 percent have been characterized as "high level" hazards by metrorail's own engineers.

Yesterday, the principal engineer with the State said readings were high.

Our compromise would require a reevaluation in light of these facts, to determine the safety of the route. If in fact it is as safe as we hope it will be, then that reevaluation could be completed and we can go forward.

I am not saying it is unsafe. I am not convinced it is safe; I am convinced that when it comes to a question of safety, that should be our paramount concern, and we should sometimes step back and have an independent reevaluation of those safety concerns by technical people.

Ultimately, the decision is not one of engineers and geologists; it must be a decision by a publicly elected official, and that is why we would have the city council people review that as well, and adopt their findings.

So I am hopeful that we can reach the conclusion and join together with everyone in giving the assurances that some people feel comfortable to give at this time but which this gentleman does not feel able to join in, in absolute assurance that the project will be safely constructed.

The issue is whether it can be safely constructed, not whether the area is hazardous; the area is hazardous, and we hope that the methods of construction in that first segment will allow us to feel that we can go forward and not be concerned that an unforeseen event costing people's lives might occur.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DIXON AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WAXMAN

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIXON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WAXMAN: On page 41, section 320(b) strike lines 19-25 on page 41 through the period on page 42 line 1 insert the following: None of the funds described in subsection (a) may be made available for any segment of the downtown Los Angeles to San Fernando Valley Metro Rail project unless and until the Southern California Rapid Transit District officially notifies and commits to the Urban Mass Transportation Administration that no part of the Metro Rail project will tunnel into or through any zone designated as a potential risk zone or high potential risk zone in the report of the City of Los Angeles dated June 19, 1985 entitled "Task Force Report on the March 24, 1985 Methane Gas Explosion and Fire in the Fairfax Area."

POINT OF ORDER

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will state her point of order.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment violates clause 2, rule XXI. It is legislation in an appropriations bill, and it has not been previously cleared by the Rules Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlewoman have anything further to add?

Ms. FIEDLER. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, based on the existing rules, that this was not cleared by the Rules Committee; that there was a specific amendment or a lesser amendment which was acceptable by Congressman WAXMAN, and that any amendment which might be brought by another Member was not cleared by the Rules Committee.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, if I might, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] is recognized.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would contend that the point of order should not be sustained; that the amendment is a perfecting amendment to the amendment that had been approved by the Rules Committee for the purposes of the waiver.

The substitute amendment that is before us is legislating in no other way than what had already been approved for the purpose of the waiver by the rule that was adopted by the House.

Under those circumstances, as a perfecting amendment, legislating in no greater extent than the original amendment, it is consistent with the rule adopted.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, in all due respects to the viewpoint expressed by my colleague, this is a substitute amendment, not a perfecting amendment, and consequently reflects a totally different approach to the entire project; and consequently it is, in my opinion, supportive of the violation of the point of order, and the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. (Mr. SHARP). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair would indicate that under the rules and precedents, when a waiver is granted by the Rules Committee against an amendment to a general appropriation bill containing legislation, a substitute or a perfecting amendment thereto is in order as long as it only perfects the protected amendment without proposing additional legislation. And such is the case in this instance; the substitute does not enlarge upon what has been made in order by the Rules Committee.

So the Chair would overrule the point of order.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Ms. FIEDLER. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will state her parliamentary inquiry.

Ms. FIEDLER. If it is true that a perfecting amendment which was not made in order under the Rules Committee by a Member who did not seek a waiver of the existing rules was acceptable, would an additional amendment be reportable under the same concept for another Member dealing with the same general issues?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have to evaluate each amendment as the substance of the amendment was before the Chair, as to its relationship to the original Waxman amendment.

The Waxman amendment was made in order by the rules; it is subject to perfecting amendment; and the Chair would simply have to evaluate amendments that are offered to it to determine whether those would be germane or contain further legislation.

Ms. FIEDLER. One further inquiry if I may, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman is recognized.

Ms. FIEDLER. Is the amendment now before the House considered to be the Waxman amendment, or is it the Dixon amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment that has just been read is of course the substitute amendment offered by Mr. DIXON to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] has given you an adequate overview of the situation. This amendment is a perfecting amendment, because it clearly will delineate the area in which the rapid transit system to be developed in Los Angeles will not enter. Basically, there are two zones in Congressman WAXMAN's area labeled "high potential" and "potential risk zones" by the Los Angeles City task force. Although I offered an amendment in the committee, which I feel does the same thing, Mr. WAXMAN felt that this language would in fact perfect that, and so I am pleased to offer this amendment.

I would indicate that I have prior to this received a letter from RTD indicating that they found that my language was binding and would not enter into the area, but since there is some question, I would offer this perfecting amendment.

Let me say further that Congressman WAXMAN I think has been very articulate in making his case about safety. As I indicated before in a colloquy with him, we are interested in safety. I just want to point out that I feel that the preponderance of the evidence, the overwhelming amount of the evidence, from CALOSHA, RTD, from the city of Los Angeles, from the Fire Department of Los Angeles and the County Fire Department clearly spell out that, as it relates to MOS–1, it is perfectly safe. However, as Mr. WAXMAN correctly points out, in the effort to take that extraordinary step, we are joining together to ask the City Council Transportation Committee also once again to take a look at the safety and design measures.

I rise in strong support of the perfecting amendment, and I ask for an "aye" vote.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. FIEDLER TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DIXON AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WAXMAN

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. FIEDLER to the amendment offered by Mr. DIXON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WAXMAN: Strike out the language of the substitute and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) None of the funds described in subsection (a) may be made available for any segment of the Downtown Los Angeles to the San Fernando Valley Metro Rail Project unless—

(1) the Southern California Rapid Transit District establishes an independent committee of experts to conduct detailed studies of the entire Metro Rail Project route and the potential hazards associated with the occurrence of methane gas;

(2) before the expiration of the 9-month period following the date of the enactment of this Act, the committee established under paragraph (1) submits recommendations to the Southern California Rapid Transit District regarding any adjustments in the Metro Rail Project route that are required to avoid tunneling into or through any area where the occurrence of methane gas presents a potential hazard;

(3) the Southern California Rapid Transit District submits to the Urban Mass Transportation Administration binding plans that—

(A) incorporate the recommendations of the committee submitted under paragraph (2); and

(B) indicate that no part of the Metro Rail Project will tunnel into or through any zone designated as a potential risk zone or high potential risk zone in the report of the City of Los Angeles dated June 10, 1985, and entitled "Task Force Report on the March 24, 1985 Methane Gas Explosion and Fire in the Fairfax Area"; and

(4) the Urban Mass Transportation Administration approves such plans.

Ms. FIEDLER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, several years ago I brought an amendment to the floor of the House and gained the support of 135 Members of the Congress to strike funds for the metro-rail project in Los Angeles. I did that after considering the issue very much in depth and only with a great deal of soul searching. I did it because I was persuaded at that time that the project was simply too expensive for us to go forward with, that there were a number of major hazards along the route, including 1,200 underground oil wells, which I warned at that time had the potential to create an explosion either during the tunneling process or during the process of actually going through, since metane gas is odorless and sightless, and there had in fact been a history of clear-cut problems. During past history, people would go into their backyards and stick a shovel in their backyard, light a cigarette, and explosions would take place. That was not unusual in this area. So I decided to support an effort to cut the funds. I was not successful in that effort, but I have been successful in encouraging the support of the Department of Transportation. So even though funds have been appropriated over the last several years, the Department of Transportation has not released those funds.

Now, this map which I have over here to my left gives a little bit of an outline as to why I honestly believe that we should not go forward with the project and specifically with the route, and the reason I am bringing forward the amendment is because I have confidence that at least it deals with one of the major factors that we have seen in the last few months.

What happened was that there was an underground explosion which took place along the route of the metrorail, just a few yards from it, and 22 people were injured in Congressman WAXMAN's district. As a result of that, he became concerned. He obviously will speak for himself on the issue. I do not need to try to speak for him. But a hearing was held, and he expressed a very deep concern about some of the hazards which were created as a result of the methane gas.

This particular map shows you the route which is outlined in yellow. The dots which you see are the underground oil wells as identified by the Department of the Interior, many of which create what I believe to be a substantial hazard. These round spots with the triangles in the middle represent the areas that are the station, and in three of the five stations in the first 4 miles of this project they have identified significant hazard according to the RTD's own documents themselves. These are in the downtown Los Angeles area. They say that they would be designated as high level hazard.

Now, I am obviously deeply concerned about the safety of the people of Los Angeles, and I am convinced my colleagues are, those who support the original substitute amendment. I think that they are concerned based upon very good faith for the welfare of the people. But I also feel that for us to go forward and permit the approval of $429 million for a project whose route is, in my opinion, unsafe, and, in the opinion of a number of experts who have looked at various areas along the route, simply is foolhardy on our part.

Now, when the project was first initiated, it was supposed to cost $100 million a mile. They have not yet stuck a shovel in the ground. The project escalated to $300 million a mile. And the project's first 4 miles will cost $1.1 billion, which is what they originally claimed the entire 18 miles would cost.

I believe—and I believe there are a number of experts who agree with me—that there is significant concern. The Appropriations Committee has expressed their concern through the language which they put into the bill but in my opinion has no teeth in it, because the RTD had the authority to originally devise a route which was safe. It is clear, in my opinion, that they want to build this project regardless of what the implication is regarding the safety of the people. They want to move forward with nearly a half billion dollars of public funds, without any reasonable assurance that the route is safe and that the public safety is going to be protected. I think that this is extremely unwise. I personally believe to risk this kind of hazard for public safety, when we know in fact that there has already been a serious accident along the route, is something that we simply cannot accept.

I would like to read to you the opinion of UMTA Administrator Ralph Stanley.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. FIEDLER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Stanley said, in a letter which was sent to me on September 11:

> As you know, funding for this project was not included in President Reagan's FY '86 budget because the funding currently available is totally inadequate to complete the proposed 18.6 mile system. It is estimated that approximately $2 billion in Federal funds will be required to complete the project.
> UMTA is very concerned about the project related safety issues raised by you and Congressman Waxman and feel it is only prudent that the activities outlined in your amendment occur before any consideration be given to providing Federal funds for the Los Angeles Metro rail project. Therefore, we fully support the amendment as currently worded.

The amendment that UMTA supports that is the substitute which I have offered.

I would like to read a little bit of additional language which comes from one of the investigative reports which was done for the city of Los Angeles task force report on the recent Fairfax explosion.

It says:

> All evidence suggests that oil and gas seepage has increased steadily in the past years. How often and at what location a gas bubble can come to the surface cannot be predicted, meaning we simply do not know when this kind of problem might reoccur.

And I might add that within a year of the time of the explosion along the route, there has been testing done. In at least three locations of subway stations in the first 4 miles of metrorail construction, there are clearly identified spots of considerable hazard. It simply does not make sense to go forward unless the entire subway route is subject to a thorough investigation and review before any construction is begun.

I yield to my colleague.

Mr. COUGHLIN. I want to commend the gentlewoman. Certainly it is her leadership in this House that has, I think, resulted in trying to examine this project thoroughly, both from a safety standpoint and from a cost-benefit standpoint. Certainly what she has done in the past has been repeatedly proven to be the fact, and I think that, really, Los Angeles owes her a great debt of gratitude in the diligence that she showed in pursuing this. I certainly support her effort because she has been proven so correct in the past.

Ms. FIEDLER. I thank the gentleman. I appreciate his comments.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further discussion on the amendment?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, recognizing the fact that it is an amendment with which I have been associated until the very recent times. And I want to explain to the Members why I decided that it is not an appropriate amendment for us to adopt.

The amendment would place a number of very severe limitations on the whole metrorail system going forward and in ways that I do not think are appropriate, in light of the proposal that Mr. DIXON and I have agreed to, with others in Los Angeles, that we presented to the Members on the floor today and have outlined to the Members on the floor today that have been agreed upon to take place in the city of Los Angeles.

The arguments made to me why this amendment might harm metrorail's progress is that it conditions everything and would keep them from getting started and maybe even from getting their funding, to the point where they might lose out on the opportunity to go forward if there is a time delay. Not that there is a safety problem, but a time delay.

For example, this amendment would say they could not start construction on the first phase until such time as they have re-examined the whole route. Well, I think that makes sense, as a general statement, but they do not know the whole route, since they are going to be required to realign that route in order to avoid the potential risk in the potential high risk area.

Well, I think it should be reviewed for safety. And under our proposal it will be reviewed for safety. But it may not be accomplished in time for the funding to be used for the construction of the first phase.

Now, I want to pay tribute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER]. She has raised alone a number of important considerations for us to think about with respect to metrorail. She has been an opponent of the whole metrorail system. We have been together in raising concerns about safety, but our concerns only converge when we are talking about safety. Her desire would be to see the whole system not to be funded and not to be built. That is not my proposal. I want the safety considerations dealt with, and once they are dealt with, I would like to see metrorail go forward. I do not want to jeopardize that system.

So I must urge that my colleagues reject this Fiedler amendment, go along with the perfecting amendment offered by Mr. DIXON, so that we can deal with safety satisfactorily and still have a metrorail system that we need so desperately in the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAXMAN. Yes, I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made mention of the fact that he had been associated with this amendment very recently.

Mr. WAXMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALKER. The Fiedler amendment is in fact precisely the language that the gentleman offered earlier to get this debate started, is that not the case?

Mr. WAXMAN. If I could reclaim my time, the gentleman is correct, but I wanted to point out the flaws in that amendment which brought me to the point of deciding to abandon that amendment and to change it in ways that would still allow metrorail to go forward and deal with those safety considerations. If I did not want metrorail to go forward, even after the safety considerations were resolved, I probably would say, "Well, let's put this roadblock in the way, and maybe another one as well, and maybe even strike the funds," which, of course, was Ms. FIEDLER's position in the last Congress.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will further yield, as this gentleman well knows, there is nobody who is better able sometimes to find the flaws of an amendment than the author of the amendment, so we thank the gentleman for giving us that kind of expertise. But if I understand the gentleman correctly, those of us who do have some reservation about this project going forward period would in fact probably want to support the Fiedler approach; is that correct?

Mr. WAXMAN. I am not sure of that. Some may want to go along with that approach, some may want to ask that the funds not be authorized or appropriated. There are other procedural remedies to put forward the views that different Members have with regard to the metrorail system. So I would not seek to suggest how people ought to vote on this amendment except if you want metrorail and you want it done safely, constructed safely, then stick with the proposal that Mr. DIXON and I are putting forward, because I think we will be able to give you greater assurance that we will accomplish both.

This amendment would give you greater assurances of safety but it may not give you assurances that after that we will still have a metrorail.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous-consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to section 320(b) end in 15 minutes, at 5:55 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am trying to make certain, if there is a limitation on the debate, that equal time is divided between my view and the opposing view.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would include that as part of my unanimous-consent request, that the time be equally divided.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Accordingly, debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall end at 5:55 p.m.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] will be recognized for 7½ minutes, and the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER] will be recognized for 7½ minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Fiedler amendment and in support of the substitute by Mr. Dixon to the Waxman amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE].

Mr. LEVINE of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to speak briefly in opposition to the Fiedler amendment and in support of the Dixon amendment.

Again, we are dealing here with a complicated and subtle situation. We have an amendment that was originally offered by my colleague from California [Mr. WAXMAN] who, after careful consideration thought an analysis and detailed deliberations with a variety of people on this issue, came to the conclusion that that original amendment was overkill, and that in fact there is a ground that is now reflected in the Waxman-Dixon proposal that would in fact legitimately address the safety concerns but would not be using a shotgun or a sledgehammer in order to address those particular concerns.

I worry that the Fiedler amendment, which goes back to much stronger language, goes well beyond what I think has become a well-crafted, more narrow approach, but one that does two things that both must be done. On the one hand, the Dixon-Waxman language does deal with the safety concerns. It does deal with them comprehensively, effectively and thoroughly. On the other hand, it does not do it in such a way that it is likely to kill the entire project. I think it is very important that we be very clear what language we are focusing on.

I happen to come from a district adjacent to the district in which this methane gas issue arose. I have paid very careful attention to it as a Representative of the Los Angeles area. I have been deeply concerned about the safety issues. I think that the issues that both Ms. FIEDLER and Mr. WAXMAN have raised are extremely important issues. But I do think in dealing with the specific safety concerns emanating from Mr. WAXMAN's district, and emanating from the explosion that occurred, those safety concerns are dealt with properly by the Dixon-Waxman amendment, going further, going to the Fiedler amendment goes beyond what is necessary and in fact I think is clearly understood by all of us to be an effort to throw a significant roadblock into the project itself.

So I do not think we need a sledgehammer or a shotgun at this point. We need a rifle, a careful, analytic, well-crafted compromise, and I think that that is what the Dixon-Waxman language will provide. I would urge my colleagues to reject the Fiedler language, however well intentioned it may be, to reject the Fiedler language and to accept the Dixon-Waxman compromise.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments made by my colleague from California; however, I have a very different perspective on this issue. Ordinarily, when a project begins and is funded, it is clearly understood what the route is going to be. Somebody wants a project and they go out and evaluate the situation and they come back and they say we have got a specific route which we are going to go through. We know how much it is going to cost, we know what the problems are that we are going to encounter. We make a complete environmental impact report on the issue, and we go out and seek funding, which is what happened in this case.

But what has happened now is that that entire situation is totally changed. No longer do we know what the route is; no longer do we know what the real costs are going to be. No longer do we know what the real hazards are going to be, and so this Congress is being asked to finance to the tune of nearly half a billion dollars of taxpayer money a project where they do not know where it is going, and they do not know what the implications of the costs are going to be. That simply does not make rational sense to me, and frankly, up until a very short time ago, did not make sense to my colleague, Mr. WAXMAN, who wrote the amendment which I offer as a substitute.

I think that that condition continues to be the case. The RTD, who has the authority and the responsibility under the substitute from Mr. DIXON and Mr. WAXMAN offered today, are the same people who have the responsibility to evaluate the merits and the safety of the route all along. In fact, they put together an environmental impact statement on the issue but did not indicate the kind of extensive hazards which have since been proven to be the case along the route.

I would like to talk for just a brief moment, if I may, about some of the statements made in a hearing held by Congressman WAXMAN on June 14. This is what one of the engineering experts said:

> In the construction of tunnels one is particularly concerned with explosive gases because of the confining atmosphere of the work area. To underline this point, one must only remember the Sylmar Tunnel explosion which killed 17 workers in June 1971.

It happens that Sylmar is in my district in the San Fernando Valley, a little distance away from this area. But typical of the kinds of problems that we have where methane gas exists.

> Explosive gases underground are unpredictable. And the potential for unforeseen contact with these gases is always present, particularly in tunnels. An example of the unpredictability, despite the precautions, 2 years ago a small tunnel was excavated under the direction of my inspectors not more than 200 feet north of where this explosion occurred. Although the tests were conducted at least two times, each work shift, during the construction of that tunnel job, no gas was detected during the 1-month life of that job from July 10 to August 11, 1983, and yet, in March 1985 an explosion took place.

People were injured even though there had been an investigative job done along this route.

This is a very hazardous situation and I cannot argue strongly enough for support of this amendment. This amendment is not everything I would like it to be. If I had my way, I would offer an amendment to cut the funds. But since public safety happens to be my No. 1 concern as I believe it is with some of my colleagues, this amendment I believe strikes a reasonable balance between retaining the funding, not going forward with the funding until such time, and I underline that word, until such time as a safe and efficient route has been devised and proof of that route safety has been presented to the Department of Transportation and so approved. So that we can feel confident that rather than saying, "Hey, I did not know there was going to be a problem, and something happens, and we have to pick up the pieces and feel the sense of responsibility," I would not want that on my conscience and I hope my colleagues do not want it on theirs.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, like Ms. FIEDLER, like Mr. DIXON, like Mr. WAXMAN, I am very concerned about the safety of southern California and those who will be traveling in the Los Angeles Metrorail system. It is very rare, Mr. Chairman, that I would support a Dixon-Waxman compromise on almost any issue, but I must say that they have crafted a very strong compromise which will in fact assure the safety of southern California. I wish to strongly support the Metrorail. It is the best, most cost-effective new start imaginable, and I am very pleased with the compromise that they have assembled and I look forward to continued assured safety for southern California and its travelers.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I think everyone here on the floor, and I hope everyone who is watching through our communications systems, understands the issue here.

The gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER] has been opposed to Metrorail from the very first day. She has used every opportunity to have a vote on the Metrorail issue and has been defeated on the issue at every opportunity. She uses a Sylmar explosion in 1972 that, in fact, makes Metrorail all that more justifiable.

Since 1972, we have not had one single explosion in California because of rigid guidelines in the performance of construction and monitoring. Since that time we have built over 60 miles of tunneling in methane gas areas.

The issue of safety has been addressed by an amendment by myself and the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] by taking out those high-risk areas from the proposed route. MOS-1 will take 5 years to build, and in that interim period we have directed RTD to come up with an alternative modification that does not penetrate those routes.

This program is supported on this floor in a bipartisan way. It is supported by the Governor of the State of California, George Deukmejian. It is supported by the mayor of Los Angeles, the county board of supervisors, RTD, it has been supported by engineering and scientific studies around California, including Cal-OSHA and the department of mining.

So for someone to come on the floor and say that there is any uncertainty about the safety or the route, it seems to me at this point, when the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] and I have agreed to a formula to address his concerns, is an effort to defeat this issue.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. DIXON. No, I will not yield. The gentlewoman has had quite a bit of time. I have been yielded 4 minutes. I think it is inappropriate for the gentlewoman to take the 7 minutes and then I yield to her. I would like to make my statement and then sit down.

Ms. FIEDLER. The gentleman is entitled to make the decision, but I have the right to ask him to yield.

Mr. DIXON. I will not yield.

So, Mr. Chairman, at this 11th hour, a lot of give and take, concern by safety, a lot of support from people organizations, we have once again confronted an amendment to defeat the whole Metrorail program.

It is not unsafe, I maintain. I am taking that step forward. There are areas of high-risk methane coupled with pressure that can cause the combustion. We are not penetrating that route. It seems to me that Congress has acted on the Fiedler amendment time and time again, and I ask for a no vote on the Fiedler amendment, an aye vote on the Dixon amendment, and an aye vote on the Waxman amendment.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman just leaving the well indicated that he feels that the project is entirely safe, yet he offered an amendment before the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. FIEDLER. No, I will not for the same reason that the gentleman would not.

The gentleman offers an amendment in the Committee on Appropriations indicating that he is concerned about safety. At the same time, the amendment which he brings to the floor today, coauthored with my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] also indicates that there are significant safety hazards.

I ask my colleagues to point their attention again to the map, if I may, which I brought out on the floor, and this, I might add, covers only a small segment of the route, and to look at the three spots that are in the red area. Those are three of the stations in the first 4 miles of the segment, each identified specifically by the RTD in their own documents as having hazardous levels of methane gas.

It is clear that there are problems there. As recently as just a few months ago there was an explosion, even though the gentleman claims that there has not been an explosion in years, since 1972. This entire debate has been generated because there was an explosion, and I might add that 22 people were injured in that explosion. So to try to claim that there is no problem, I think, is just totally untrue based upon the facts.

I would urge my colleagues that until such time as we are convinced that this project has a safe route, that this project is understood in terms of its cost, that my colleagues support my amendment. It is an appropriate amendment. Let us go forward with the investigation of a safer route which makes some economic sense and some security sense.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 172, noes 242, not voting 20, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:.

Mr. Crane for, with Mrs. Long against.

Mr. FOGLIETTA and Mr. GALLO changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. FISH changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment to the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

The amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address my colleagues on one particular aspect in the pending appropriations measure—that relating to funding for the Railroad Highway Crossings Demonstration Program. This is a section near and dear to the hearts of my constituents.

Permit me to begin by expressing my sincere appreciation to the chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, the ranking member and my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and all members of this subcommittee for your continued support for funding the demonstration project located in Lincoln, NE. You have consistently recognized the pressing need we have to moderate the impacts of railroad crossings within our capital city, and you have been most generous in your support.

In May of this year, I appeared before the subcommittee to request $6.9 million for elimination of a hazardous grade crossing conflict in Lincoln—the so-called K and L Streets extension. This amount actually reflected the shortfall in funding we received in last year's continuing resolution. I am delighted that the subcommittee and full Appropriations Committee accepted our request and that the pending bill earmarks the full $6.9 million for the Lincoln project.

The urgency of proceeding with this project became even more apparent in June when a major train derailment knocked out a concrete support column from beneath an overpass on O Street, which is a main artery in the city. This bridge is the primary connection between downtown Lincoln and the western part of the city, with an average daily vehicle count of nearly 30,000.

As a result of the accident, the bridge has to be closed to all traffic for 5 days. This unfortunate accident graphically demonstrated the need for an alternate connection between west Lincoln and the rest of the community. During the closing of the Harris overpass, we had 20,000 to 30,000 vehicles being rerouted, many through residential neighborhoods, because there was no other reasonable and convenient alternative. The other connections to west Lincoln are all across railroad tracks and are frequently blocked by trains. We would have had major traffic congestion problems had we used one of these streets for a detour. The heavy traffic on residential streets created not only inconveniences to the people living in the area, but also caused serious safety concerns.

The K and L Streets extension which the committee bill will fund would have allowed local officials to reroute traffic without major inconveniences to the driving public and businesses and without significantly increasing the potential for traffic and pedestrian accidents in residential neighborhoods.

The K and L Streets segment is crucial to the development of southwest Lincoln. Presently, this section of the city is isolated from the central business district and other areas of the city by tracks which serve the high volume traffic of the Burlington Northern coal trains and other heavy freight carriers. At present, street travelers must cross over five sets of tracks, which carry an estimated 36 trains per day, most of which are traveling 5 to 10 miles per hour, and average 100 cars in length.

The lack of convenient and safe access to this sector of the city has severely hindered its economic development. It also has posed a serious problem for emergency police and fire vehicles which need to traverse the tracks to get to the residents in the area. The police department estimates that at least one police vehicle per day on an emergency call is delayed by a train blockage. The fire department, with a one-truck station within the boundaries of the southwest section, experiences major train-created delays one to two times per month. Ambulance services personnel quoted an average of five calls per week which are held up by train crossings.

Lincoln's involvement in the railroad safety demonstration project has been a true partnership with the Federal Government. Thus far, 61 percent of the total demonstration project costs have been locally funded; the remaining 39 percent have been funded with Federal demonstration funds. It is an excellent partnership which should be continued until completed.

Thank you.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MOAKLEY] having assumed the chair, Mr. SHARP, Chairman of the Committee on the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3244) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE OF COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES TO SIT DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE ON THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1985

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee on Merchant Marine of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be permitted to sit at 2 on Thursday, September 12, 1985, for the purpose of holding a hearing on several bills that are intended to grant or restore coastwise trading and fishing privileges to a number of vessels.

The subcommittee will sit in markup of those bills immediately following the hearing.

The ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] have been apprised of the hearing, and markup date, and time, and are in accord with this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EDUCATION RALLY OF PUBLIC SCHOOL EMPLOYEES IN PRINCE GEORGES COUNTY, MD

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, during the August recess, I had the privilege of attending a very successful rally for all public school employees in Prince Georges County. The rally's theme was "We are Education * * * We Are America." Prince Georges County is one of the largest school systems in the United States. We have more than 12,000 outstanding teachers and staff. Too often their efforts and talents go unrecognized by the general public. The rally served to highlight the essential nature of their work for all of society and instilling them with the dignity their role deserves.

Dr. John A. Murphy, superintendent of schools for Prince Georges County, is to be commended for this wonderful idea and for his efforts in making it a success. The rally stressed the importance of the role of the teacher in informing, instructing, and inspiring our youth, without which, the future of our country holds no promise. I would like to include for the RECORD excerpts of Mr. Murphy's speech as well as remarks by people who capture the spirit of the rally, Mr. David Zahren, the Maryland finalist for the NASA "Teacher In Space" program and Mrs. Crista McAuliffe, the person designated to be NASA's first teacher in space. Mrs. McAuliffe sums it all up with her motto that says "I Touch the Future—I Teach."

The material follows:

SUPERINTENDENT MURPHY'S ADDRESS

Ladies and gentlemen, let me welcome you to our 1985-86 school year—a year that promises to be exciting in anticipation, rich in accomplishments, and a year of pride in our school system.

I believe that we stand literally at the threshold of a great advancement, all across America, in school buildings large and small.

In Prince George's County we have the chance to be right out in front of that advancement, on the cutting edge, proving to all the critics that public education works and works well.

As we launch this new school year we should do so as a united family of school personnel committed to a mission that says all children will have successful learning experiences.

I have used the term family in addressing you this morning because I want to emphasize that each of you is an important part of the guidance that our students will need as they are encouraged, admonished, cajoled, and led to successful educational experiences and fulfilled self esteem.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are not without crisis or problems in our school system, and as I outline them I hope you will come together with me and the members of the board of education in that common resolve to meet our problems head on.

We have made tremendous steps forward in our efforts to make Prince George's County public schools an example for other school systems throughout the Nation.

Overall academic achievement, as measured by standardized tests indicates improvement, However, there is a large segment of our student population that is not achieving the success we strive for.

A committee studying minority student achievement identified several items suggesting that black students in our school system, on an average, participate in educational programs, course offerings, and school activities that differ in kind and contest from those of nonblack students.

Standardized tests show a significant gap in the measured achievement of black students throughout all grade levels.

The average standardized test score for black students was significantly below the average—20 percent or more percentile points—than for nonblack students.

In virtually every category, the data indicated the performance of black students was lower than the corresponding performance of nonblack students.

In addition, the committee also addressed the issue of whether there is a correlation between grades earned and student attendance. They found that—for black and nonblack students alike—the lower the average letter grade achieved, the higher the number of days a student is absent.

We intend to deal with the issue of absenteeism in our secondary schools. The board of education has approved a new attendance policy that reduces permissible absences from 10 to 5. Students who miss more than five classes without appropriate make ups will receive a grade of incomplete. It is our hope that this new policy will signal a clear message to students and parents that we expect them to be in school on a regular basis.

Clearly, the challenge before us is to accept the personal goal of elevating the performance level of all students—getting those who do not do well to do better, to level up. We must develop effective schools that will significantly eliminate gaps in achievement between black and nonblack students.

We can do this—not by lowering expectations for some but raising expectations for all. We must believe that all students have within them the capacity to do better.

We can increase student achievement not by criticizing the accuracy of the data but by discussing the implications of the data.

Data such as that gathered by the minority achievement committee will be available to all schools during the next school year.

Each school will be able to complete a valid needs assessment with statistical data concerning students attendance, promotion and retention, grade distribution, and individual student achievement.

Each school's needs assessment will disclose strengths and weaknesses and provide direction for the development of school improvement programs.

But those statistics will not tell the whole story. We will need to look in other directions, at other factors affecting student achievement.

Specifically, what a child can do is an issue of cognitive competency. It implies ability, and refers to the child's motivation reflecting issues of interest, preferences, choice, and particularly rewards and punishments within the educational environment.

The question of what a child should do reflects the values and beliefs that are brought to the educational situation. In mainstream middle class America, the question of can has been paramount in analyzing the educational, affairs of children. Whether a child should or will perform within the educational context is believed to be implicit.

The major point I want to make here is that there are other possibilities to the interpretation, understanding and meaning of low achievement scores, by both black and other students.

When a black student doesn't do it is not necessarily that he can't. As a school system, we must go beyond the questions of can and can not to issues of will and should.

We must deal with motivation, beliefs and values.

As the data are formally drawn together, we will make it available throughout the system.

It is my expectation that plans and strategies will be formulated at each school which will make positive differences in the levels of all students.

Designing, implementing and maintaining the individual school plan of action is the joint effort of all present today.

Our schools must remain equally committed to the inseparable goals of both excellence and equity for all students whether they be gifted or disabled, affluent or poor, black or white, English, or non-English speaking, male or female, handicapped or not.

As a public institution, each school in Prince George's County has a fundamental responsibility to promote achievement not only among the privileged students, but also those at the other end of the scale.

It should be the individual student, not the school, that is the focus of the total learning process.

The only real difference between quality and equality is the letter "e", and that may well stand for effort, and, eventually, the excellence to which all our schools aspire.

Fundamental to overall success is the overriding issue of public attitude.

Each of our family members has a critical role to play as we map our strategy for bringing our reputation as a quality institution to the fore.

Like it or not, our system has suffered from a negative public image; true or not, the perception is a reality to be dealt with.

Step one must be a change in attitude in our own family.

We have a system that is already good and one that has the potential of being the best.

Our public gets its primary information from each of our family members. They listen to our comments at home, in social gatherings, in church, at play, at community events—and gradually their perception of our school system evolves.

Each one of us in our dealings with a particular segment of the public are like chips in a mosaic. When they stand by themselves the contribution seems small but when viewed all together a picture emerges that can be a thing of beauty.

Let me now outline some of the specific strategies that we will employ to ensure improved learning experiences for all of our children.

We begin the 1985-86 school year with a new mission statement that clearly specifies the major purpose of our school system:

To assure that all students acquire the knowledge and develop the skills to enable them to become productive members of society.

Let me bring you up to date on our desegregation efforts, where we have been, where we are, and where we plan to be in the next four years.

This year we will open 12 new magnet schools. Six of these will have talented and gifted programs. The other six will be workplace schools, designed to meet the before and after school care needs of elementary age children.

In addition to these programs we will be supporting ten Milliken II schools. They will receive support over and above what the average school receives as compensation for keeping them predominantly one race schools, as agreed to in our desgregation settlement.

The Milliken II schools will have lower pupil/teacher ratios, additional counseling services, and computer laboratories.

Dr. James Comer, Associate dean of the Yale University Medical School, developed a program in New Haven, CT, that had a significant positive effect on the achievement of black children.

Dr. Comer's model will be introduced this fall in the Milliken II schools. I was very impressed by Dr. Comer's work in Connnecticut and I'm excited by the prospect of his working with our school staff.

Our initial response to the magnet schools has been overwhelming. The talented and gifted schools were filled the first week of advertising that program.

The workplace schools are running a little slower but we're fully optimistic that they, too, will succeed.

The overall success of our magnet plan is based on the effort that many of you provided. I thank you for the marvelous support that you gave this first phase.

Next year will call for additional schools to be added, and our 4-year plan calls for a total of 30 magnet schools.

Planning for next year's magnets will start immediately. We welcome suggestions and recommendations for our program from all staff.

At the high school level we will be introducing Project Sucess.

Project Success is designed to meet the specific needs of 300 ninth grade students who will come to the ninth grade with a history of under-achievement.

It will provide additional teaching positions, reduced class size, team teaching efforts and the use of a variety of instructional strategies. And, as a result, it will help students improve their achievement, attendance and attitude toward their education and the realization that they can be successful in school.

The model will be introduced to other high schools as its success is acknowledged.

While our political leaders speak in glowing terms of their expectations for our school system, their commitment has not always manifested itself in the support needed to accomplish that goal.

While we make our commitment to excellence and extend our energies toward this end, we must also convey to our political leaders that they, too, have an obligation to match that commitment with more than rhetoric.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have high expectations for this school system. I am confident that we can accomplish in Prince George's County what no public school system to date has accomplished.

Gathered in this arena this morning are over 11,000 of the most talented men and women serving any school organization.

We can combine our engergies and make what has heretofore appeared impossible, possible; and, in so doing, I believe we can send a resounding message that will shake public education at its very foundation.

The potential for leading public education into the future is within our grasp. The choice is clearly up to you.

You can opt to be pessimistic, reactive, and join the few vocal naysayers who will continually find excuses for why we can't.

Or you can join me as we chart the course for how we can.

I invite each of you to join with me in whatever role you play in this large school family.

I want everyone involved, whether you work in the cafeteria, a classroom, an office, on a school bus, in maintenance, or as a clerk, a secretary, a custodian, a school principal, or from any other position in this vast enterprise.

Come as we turn the challenges that face us into opportunities that will enhance the lives of the young people who place their trust in us.

We can foster an environment in which every child can succeed.

We can focus on teaching and learning.

Because, we truly are good and getting better.

Simply stated, we are the future of America.

We are education. Thank you.

REMARKS BY MR. DAVID ZAHREN

Most of us in this hall this morning are getting ready to return to a classroom. There's that queasy feeling, that uncertainty, that shock when the first bell rings.

But there's one teacher here who won't be seeing the inside of a school for quite a while. She won't be grading any papers, she won't be worrying about attendance, and if she has to send anybody off to a principal's office, it's going to be one long trip!

And when she blasts off next January and conducts her lessons on that celestial blackboard, she's going to show this country something we've always known—that there is simply no greater responsibility, no job more demanding than what we do every single day.

When the President spoke to us 114 would-be astronauts at the White House, he reminded us—and teachers everywhere—why we choose to teach. His words were simple. He said, America's teachers are the preservers and protectors or our heritage. You save our past from being consumed by forgetfulness and our future from being engulfed in ignorance. Every new class is a new generation to whom you must transmit the treasures of our civilization. You give your students many facts and much knowledge, but your task is greater than that. Because with the facts you must impart the values that give them meaning and context—our most sacred values of human dignity and the worth of individuals.

The woman I'm about to introduce is just that kind of special educator.

Even though she must be wincing from hearing it too often, she does indeed have the right stuff. A bachelor's degree from Framingham State College in Mass., a master's from Bowie State, 12 years as a social studies teacher, 8 of which were spent right here in PG Co. at Thomas Johnson and Foulois Middle Schools, the creator of a course on the American woman, 25 years in the Girl Scout program, and active fundraiser in her community.

NASA may tell you Christa that you really do need booster rockets to go into orbit, but with all the support and prayers and good will from us down here, I reckon you could just about float up there.

Prince George's County is very proud of you Christa and even though you now call Concord, NH home, we hope you'll remember your friends and former neighbors when you fly over Upper Marlboro next year.

SPEECH PRESENTED BY CHRISTA MCAULIFFE

Thank you. I'm delighted to be here where my teaching career began 15 years ago.

And, after 15 years, it still feels good to stand here and say, "I am a teacher."

I am glad that the Space Participant Program recognized teachers as good communicators, as people who had experience taking information and presenting it in an interesting format. Teachers touch all of us; we have all had teachers, been influenced by teachers. We can approach teachers and talk to them. When I was down in Houston at Johnson Space Center, one of the press conferences was opened up to the public. As we finished with the reporters' questions, students began to come up to the stage and ask us questions. I saw these students listening carefully to my every word and asking questions and I thought: It's working—the program is already working. Think of all the students you have seen in your years of teaching—what better way to get information out?

Teachers matter, teachers care. We infuse young minds with a thirst for knowledge. We dedicate ourselves to the task of educating people, both young and old. Teachers provide the link in the educational community for parents and students. Job descriptions, if written accurately, would thwart even the hardiest soul from choosing teaching as a profession. So why do we do it? Why do we teach? Personal satisfaction, the feeling that we are performing a necessary service for society, love of knowledge, love of learning; the list is endless. What motivates us now and has motivated us in the past is strictly individual. Yet we all have a common goal to provide the best education we can in sometime adverse conditions.

Why does this happen? If we are performing such a valuable service, why isn't it readily and easily recognized? When you are dealing with education, as all of us know, there is no tangible end product. Education is so hard to define, to see. This doesn't make it less important than the builder who finishes a house, but it is harder to get the community to recognize its worth.

I see this year as a year of opportunity for education. The Teacher in Space Program has already started people looking positively at schools—what is going on in the schools? What are the new programs about? What is happening in the classroom? I see this as a year of awareness—to get the community involved and, in doing so, to elevate the role of the teacher to where it needs to be. A couple of years ago, I took a poll in my classes and asked students to tell me what careers they were interested in or preparing for. Out of 200-plus, I had three young people cautiously admitting that they might like to go into teaching. Just as we went into teaching, I would like to see young people make that choice today. I would like to see people feeling good about the wonderful profession they have chosen. I would like to see school boards, budget committees, and communities working hard together with teachers to help make salaries competitive with other professions.

People have asked me if I plan to return to the classroom next fall. It's been my life for 15 years. I'll be at Concord High School in September 1986 because if the Teacher In Space doesn't return to teaching, something is wrong!

During this year, I hope to get students and teachers excited about the future because, after all, this space, this frontier out there, belongs to all of us. I hope to help make people aware that teaching is an exciting and necessary profession. I hope to challenge students to reach for the stars. If I can do these things, then I have done my job.

You people out there are my strongest critics, and that's OK; I don't mind being judged by my peers. You are going to be watching me carefully because I represent you and that is a tremendous responsibility. I know that you'll be challenging me. I often tell my students that we need a relationship based on mutual respect and the two things that I require of them are that they do the best they can, and that they be true to themselves. I figure that if I follow my own advice, we'll all be OK!

Last week, I received a present from a colleague of mine. She had seen a t-shirt she liked and had one made up for me. It's very special and I think it sums up the reason why all of us are here. It says, "I touch the future—I teach." Thank you.

IN SPACE RESEARCH TODAY—SEPTEMBER 11—IS AN HISTORIC DATE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, many members of the House may not be aware of the significance in space research of this date.

Today, September 11, 1985, a U.S. space vehicle will make the very first fly-through of the tail of a celestial comet. In fact, since we know so littie about comets this could be a suicidal venture for the unmanned U.S. space vehicle which is involved.

The comet in question, by the way, is not Halley's Comet, which has been much in the news of late, and which appears only once in 76 years. I wasn't around for its last appearance, believe it or not; but I remember my Mother and Father telling me all about it. And, like many others, I am hoping to see Halley's Comet next spring—in the Southern Hemisphere, by the way. It is of course, the king of all comets.

Because of the budget crunch, however, the U.S. Space Administration was denied funds for a closer inspection of Halley's Comet. As a result, the only U.S. research involvement in the 1986 appearance will be a piggy-backed U.S. research module on a Soviet inspection vehicle next spring.

But, fortunately, there is another comet around, even though it is not visible to the naked eye, the Giacobini-Zinner Comet. It was this comet's tail that the Goddard Space Center decided to run the mission on, primarily because the Giacobini Comet is in the neighborhood of the International Cometary Explorer, (a space vehicle) 44 million miles from earth.

That actual encounter took place in the heavens this morning at 7:02 a.m., and the vehicle stayed in the comet's tail for some 12 to 20 minutes.

Whether the space vehicle was consumed, or whether the comet's tail yielded up the secret of its composition, we won't know for some time. But it's an interesting and exciting idea.

Mr. Speaker, with the help of the Goddard Space Center, I include with my remarks a paper giving more explicit detail about comets and their behavior, which may make it easier for us to appreciate the exposure when Halley's Comet nears our Earth in 1986.

Also included is a helpful article on the Giacobini Comet and its historical adventure in space.

The article follows:

A LOOK INTO THE BEGINNINGS OF THE SOLAR SYSTEM

The NASA Spacecraft International Cometary Explorer (ICE) is fast approaching its intercept with Comet Giacobini-Zinner on September 11, 1985. This first satellite/comet encounter in history will provide scientists with their first look at the make-up and dynamics of a comet's tail. ICE was launched in 1978 as the International Sun and Earth Explorer and was redirected toward Comet Giacobini-Zinner in 1982. The satellite and comet are now closing at a relative velocity of 13 statute miles per second. Comet Giacobini-Zinner was discovered in 1900 and returns to Earth's neighborhood every 6½ years. It will not be visible to the naked eye but should be an easy target for small telescopes used by amateur astronomers.

Although much attention has been focused on the return of the legendary and famous Halley's Comet next year, the US spacecraft encounter with Comet Giacobini-Zinner will occur six months before the first foreign probes reach Halley's; and if ICE survives the force of the comet's tail, it too will eventually meet Halley's Comet, although nearly 19 million miles away at its closest approach. By then, ICE will be a veteran, the first man-made instrument to have visited a comet.

Comets are one of the great mysteries of the solar system and may hold the keys to understanding the solar system's birth and evolution. They are believed to be composed of the same materials as the primordial solar system, having been unaltered, either by volcanic eruption, melting, or the formation of crusts and cores; comets are a looking glass into the beginning of our universe.

Our best clues to what comets are made of come from studies of their visible comas and tails. The coma is a comet's temporary atmosphere, which forms a glowing cloud, more than 62,000 miles across, around the small, solid nucleus which is, at most, a few kilometers across.

From the coma, the comet's glowing tail stretches across the sky; some tails have been measured to be more than 62 million miles long. (For comparison, the distance from Earth to the sun is about 93 million miles.) The coma and tail are made up of dust, gas, and perhaps grains of ice that have been boiled off the main body of the comet (the nucleus) by the heat of the sun.

Despite the immense size of comet comas and tails, there is actually very little matter in them: they are so tenuous that stars can be seen through them. Virtually all the mass of a comet is in the nucleus—a body that has never been observed by astronomers as more than a pinpoint of light.

The most accepted model of what makes up a comet is the "icy conglomerate" (or, more informally, the "dirty snowball") model proposed in the 1950s by Professor Fred Whipple. According to this theory, the nucleus of a comet is a mixture of ices, silicate minerals, and possibly metals. The ices are solid, frozen substances that are usually liquids or gases under more familiar conditions. Comets may also contain complex carbon compounds like those observed in certain rare meteorites.

The fact that these "dirty snowballs" contain frozen gases suggests that they may have formed from ice-coated rocky grains in the outermost parts of the primordial dust cloud that collapsed to form the sun and planets; the solar system's outer planets may have been built up by the accumulation of such "snowballs," while the rocky inner planets were formed from asteroid-like bodies that had been sufficiently heated by the sun to lose all their volatile gases.

Once formed, both kinds of planets suffered an intense bombardment by the left-over comets and asteroids. The traces of this ancient battering still remain in places like the lunar highlands, the anicent terrains of Mars, and some satellites of the outer planets, like Callisto and Mimas.

All the inner (terrestrial) planets (except Mercury) acquired atmospheres, and there is a continuing debate over whether such atmospheres were produced mainly by gases released from planetary interiors or mainly by further cometary bombardment. Until the chemical composition of comets is known, we cannot tell how much of our own atmosphere came from comets.

If comets were once so abundant in the solar system that they could form huge planets, where are they now? Many of the original comets were probably used up in making the planets, but scientists think that the remainder were gradually scattered into the outermost solar system as a result of close encounters with the larger planets.

Some of these scattered comets are now believed to constitute a vast, invisible swarm, called the Oort Cloud, at the outer edges of the solar system about one-third of the way to the nearest star. In the Oort Cloud (named for the Dutch astronomer Jan Oort, who first proposed it), these comets have remained for billions of years in a cosmic "deep freeze." So far from the sun that their temperature never rises more than a few degrees above absolute zero, they are preserved against the destructive effects of solar heat and light. Our solar system's Oort Cloud of comets has never been observed. We can only infer that it is there from the orbits of present-day comets.

Why don't comets stay in the Oort Cloud? Because the cloud is so far out that the comets, while orbiting the sun, also feel gravitational tugs from other neighboring stars. As the sun moves among the other stars of our galaxy, one of them may occasionally come close enough to give a comet a gravitational nudge, changing its orbit so that the comet leaves the Oort Cloud and heads downward toward the sun.

As a comet falls toward the sun it begins to feel the sun's heat. Slowly the comet warms up; its outermost icy layers turn to gas, and the gas blows off the nucleus, sometimes as sudden bursts and jets that drag dust and small icy chunks with it. The new-born cometary atmosphere reacts to the sun's light and the solar wind which first change the atoms and molecules of the gas to ions (that is, they acquire an electric charge) and then sweep the ions and dust away from the comet to form the familiar tails that, no matter how far they extend from the comet, always point away from the sun.

As the comet gets closer to the sun, the boiling off of material increases, and the coma and tail grow in size and brightness as the comet approaches perihelion, its closet point to the sun. After whipping around the sun at speeds that may approach 62 miles a second, the partially depleted comet heads out again on its long orbit to the Oort Cloud, not to return for perhaps another million years.

After being deflected from the Oort Cloud toward the sun, a few comets enter a second gravitational trap as they make a closer encounter with a large planet (usually Jupiter or Saturn) while either coming in or going out. Some of these close encounters cause the comet to be shot out of the solar system entirely, never to return. Other comets, however, are forced into small orbits that keep them entirely within the inner solar system—often between the orbits of Earth and Jupiter. These become the short-period comets, typically circling the sun in periods of 3 to 200 years.

Short-period comets are also short-lived comets. Each time they pass close to the sun, they lose more and more material, and over the centuries, as their ices are removed, they grow smaller and fainter. Eventually, a short-period comet may become completely moribund; its accessible gases are gone, and it no longer exhibits cometary phenomena. The ultimate fate of such a comet is uncertain: the object may fall apart, leaving a trail of dust along its orbit, or may exist as a tiny rocky skeleton with all its gas and ices gone, or may have another close encounter with a planet and be placed back into a long-period orbit again.

Comets are truly fascinating cosmic phenomena; and with the Giacobini-Zinner encounter this month and with the Halley's rendezvous next March, these celestial enigmas will be forced to give up a portion of their secrets.

U.S. SOLAR SPACECRAFT RACES TO FLY IN COMET'S TAIL TODAY—ICE TO MEET GIACOBINI-ZINNER 44 MILLION MILES FROM EARTH

(By Thomas O'Toole)

A U.S. spacecraft put into space more than seven years ago to study the solar wind streaming off the sun was on target yesterday to become the first ever to fly through the tail of a comet in a possibly suicidal encounter.

The historic encounter between the International Cometary Explorer (ICE) and a comet known as Giacobini-Zinner is to take place 44 million miles from Earth at 7:02 a.m. EDT today, and will presage the encounters between other spacecraft and Halley's comet next March.

"This is a very risky mission," flight director Robert Farquhar said at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, where the comet encounter is being directed. "We are putting the spacecraft in harm's way, and there is a distinct possibility the spacecraft will not survive the encounter."

The most likely damage to the spacecraft would be to the solar cells that power it. A hail of dust or a rock the size of a bowling ball could come tumbling out of the comet's head and strike the spacecraft at high speed, cutting off all its power. The spacecraft has no protective dust shield and no cameras to see whether it is facing unintentional suicide.

Not everyone at Goddard was as pessimistic about the encounter as Farquhar. Project scientist Tycho von Rosenvinge said, "We are optimistic that we'll survive our flight through the dust tail. We don't think the dust tail is as dense as some people think."

Politics had a lot to do with the comet encounter. The mission to Giacobini-Zinner has its roots in the Reagan administration's 1981 decision not to mount a mission to Halley's comet, which is racing toward its 30th recorded encounter with Earth. The Soviet Union, the European Space Agency and Japan have instrumented spacecraft on their way to meet Halley's comet next March after the comet swings round the sun.

"By the summer of 1981, it was obvious that the United States would not be able to send a space probe to Halley's comet," Farquhar said. "It appeared that the United States would be the only major non-participant in the Halley sweep-stakes."

Out of the gloom that there would be no U.S. mission to Halley's comet came a plan by Farquhar to use what was then called the International Sun-Earth Explorer 3 to intercept Giacobini-Zinner and save face. Even though the spacecraft has no cameras to photograph the comet and no instruments to analyze its dust tail, it has at least six instruments capable of measuring certain data about the dust and plasma tails.

It also was expendable and could serve as a "kamikaze" pathfinder for spacecraft flying missions to Halley's comet.

Farquhar said, "The spacecraft was launched in 1978 and had already completed the majority of its primary mission objectives. In addition, we found that the surcharge for sending the spacecraft to the comet would be less than $3 million."

Farquhar and his Goddard team devised a way to maneuver the spacecraft away from its position about 1 million miles from Earth onto a path that would take it around the moon and back through the earth's geomagnetic tail. The spacecraft was maneuvered around the moon four times at a distance of 12,000 miles and a risky fifth time at a distance of only 75 miles.

The encounter with the moon gave the spacecraft a "slingshot" effect that flung it at high speed onto a path that would take it out of the gravitational pull of the moon, the Earth and the sun. It also sent it on a trajectory to intercept Giacobini-Zinner, needing only a few course corrections to target it right for the comet's tail.

Moving at almost 46,000 miles an hour toward the comet, the ICE spacecraft was less than a half-million miles from the comet at 6 p.m. yesterday. The spacecraft's heaters were turned off to save power so its 10 working instruments can send as much data as possible during the encounter.

The spacecraft also made a course correction over the weekend to aim it at a spot in the tail 5,000 miles behind the comet's head.

"We expect to spend a minimum of four to five minutes inside the comet's tail," von Rosenwinge said. "Our time in the tail could be as long as 12 to 20 minutes, depending on whether the tail widens or shrinks. Each comet has a personality all its own."

Giacobini-Zinner is no different. Discovered in 1900 by Michel Giacobini at the Nice Observatory in France and found again in 1913 by Ernst Zinner at the Remeis Observatory in Germany, the comet visits the Earth's environs every 6.5 years and is easily observed by astronomers every 13 years when it swings close to the Earth on its way around the sun.

As comets go, it is not as spectacular as Halley's comet but is far from being burned out.

Its nucleus of primeval rock, ice and snow is about a mile across and the "coma" of exotic gas and dust that surrounds its nucleus is 50,000 miles across. Its yellow dust tail is about 300,000 miles long and its second tail of electrified gas, the plasma tail, is at least 1 million miles long.

Flight directors at Goddard have already witnessed some erratic behavior in Giacobini-Zinner. The comet wandered 1,000 miles off its predicated course last week.

To understand why a comet wanders, a comet can be looked at as if it were a speeding spaceship equipped with its own jet-like engines. In this case, the dust and gas being boiled off the comet as it swings close to the sun.

Comets blow off gas toward the sun, generating a thrust in the opposite direction like a ballon whose escaping air blows it across a room. The tiny thrusting motions that the escaping dust and gas give the comet's own rotation though space either force the comet to spiral away from the nearest celestial body or in toward it.

All this time, snow and ice are subliming off the comet's surface," John C. Brandt, chief of Goddard's Laboratory for Astronomy and Solar Physics, said, "The effect is like an upside-down snowstorm coming off the comet."

Goddard is going all out to communicate with the ICE spacecraft as it moves toward the comet's tail, enlisting the help of tracking networks in Australia, California, Spain, Puerto Rico and Japan to keep in touch with the spacecraft through the critical hours of encounter.

The tracking antennas were also equipped with the new low-noise amplifiers to pick up the weak signals expected from the spacecraft's 5 watt transmitter at a distance of 44 million miles.

"The spacecraft was designed to work at an Earth distance of 1 million miles," said Raymond J. Ambrose, manager of tracking and data acquisition for the U.S. Deep Space Network. "Giacobini-Zinner is almost 50 times that distance, which gives us 2,500 times less signal."

IOWAN HEADS AMERICAN LEGION

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to call to the attention of my colleagues the election of a distinguished Iowan to head the Nation's largest veterans' organization. Dale L. Renaud, 53, of Bondurant, IA, was elected national commander of the American Legion at the closing session of the 67th Annual National Convention, August 28, 1985, in New Orleans. A U.S. Coast Guard veteran of the Korean war, he served 26 months overseas as an underwater soundman first class. Following his discharge from active duty in August 1956, he became production supervisor for the Travelers Insurance Cos. and he currently is president of the MacRae-Renaud Agency, Inc., of Bondurant and West Des Moines, IA.

An active Legionnaire for almost 30 years, Renaud is a life member of the Samuel H. Bridge Post No. 396, Bondurant. He was State commander of the Legion in 1971–72 and served as national executive committeeman from 1979 to 1983. From 1983 to 1985, he was chairman of the American Legion's National Americanism Commission. A graduate in business administration from Simpson College, he has been active in the Lions Club, Christian Church, and the Masons. He served as chairman of the Iowa American Legion's Boys' State from 1964 to 1982. Renaud and his wife, Pat, who were married in 1959, are the parents of two daughters and a son.

Mr. Speaker, I can personally attest to the esteem in which Dale Renaud is held in my State for his leadership in veterans' and community affairs. I am confident he will give this same dynamic leadership to the American Legion as its national commander and will cooperate effectively with Congress and the administration in all efforts to improve the lot of the American veteran.

CONGRESSMAN FRANK ANNUNZIO ANNOUNCES RESULTS OF 1985 TAX REFORM SURVEY

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce the results of a survey on possible changes in our tax laws I conducted recently to obtain the opinions of citizens residing in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am privileged to represent.

More than 10,000 questionnaires were completed and returned, and I want to express my appreciation to my constituents who involved themselves in the decision-making process by responding to this survey.

Ten broad questions were asked relating to various possible changes in current tax law, and the responses on the questionnaires were tabulated by computer. Before listing a numerical summary of the tabulation, I want to point out some significant reactions to several important tax issues.

Seventy-five percent of those responding indicated that they wanted to continue to deduct State and local taxes on their Federal tax returns, including income, property, and sales taxes; 70 percent wanted to keep the additional exemption for the blind and the elderly; and 70 percent did not want to tax health insurance for which their employers now pay.

An overwhelming 81 percent said that Congress should not cut taxes if doing so would raise the Federal deficit, while 89 percent said that the oil and gas industry should not receive preferential tax treatment but should be treated the same as other industries, and 88 percent said that business should not be allowed to deduct the costs of entertaining clients.

On the issue of fairness versus simplification, an 87 percent affirmative vote was given to making sure that everyone pays a fair share of the tax burden. This particular question generated hundreds of letters written separately by many of my constituents who repeated time and again that fairness and equity should receive maximum consideration in making any tax changes.

My constituents also stated that the three main goals of tax reform should be: First, by 88 percent, that both businesses and individuals pay a fair share of the tax burden; second, by 60 percent, that complex tax breaks, giving unfair advantages to those who can afford to pay for expert tax advice, be eliminated; and third, by 38 percent, that additional revenue be raised to help reduce the deficit without raising individual income taxes.

The three goals of tax reform considered least important by my constituents were: First, reducing all tax rates, 66 percent; second, eliminating as many deductions and credits as possible, 48 percent; and third, making it easier for an individual to compute his or her taxes, 47 percent.

It is also interesting to note that of those who returned the questionnaire, 53 percent prepared their own tax returns and 72 percent itemized deductions.

The results of this tax survey are being made available to the chairman and members of the House Ways and Means Committee, which has jurisdiction over all tax legislation, in order that full consideration may be extended to the views expressed by my constituents by the members of the committee during their continuing deliberations on various tax reform proposals.

Mr. Speaker, the following is the completed tabulation of the survey according to percentages:

1985 TAX REFORM SURVEY

1. Listed below are some of the many changes being proposed in tax law. Check those you would oppose, even if they would help make possible an overall reduction in tax rates.

a. Repeal the ability of people to deduct state and local taxes—income taxes, property taxes, and sales taxes—seventy-five percent.

b. Repeal the marriage penalty deduction—thirty-five percent.

c. Limit interest deductions, except for business loans and the mortgage(s) on your principal residence—forty-two percent.

d. Repeal income averaging—thirty percent.

e. Repeal the additional exemption for the blind and the elderly—seventy percent.

f. Repeal credits for energy-saving home improvements—thirty-four percent.

g. Tax a portion of employer-paid health insurance—seventy percent.

h. Tax increases in the cash value of life insurance policies—sixty-six percent.

i. Tax all unemployment compensation and payments for work-related injuries—fifty-five percent.

j. Limit deductions for work-related expenses, such as union and professional dues, safety equipment, tools, uniforms, and travel—forty-three percent.

2. Should Congress cut taxes if doing so would increase the deficit?

Yes, 19%; no, 81%.

3. Should the oil and gas industry receive more favorable tax treatment than other industries in order to provide incentives for increased production?

Yes, 11%; no, 89%.

4. Should capital gains (profits from the sale of stocks, bonds and other investments) be taxed at a lower rate than wages and salaries to encourage such investments, or should they be taxed at the same rate as wages and salaries?

a. Lower rate—43%.

b. Same rate—57%.

5. Under the present system, tax rates for people with high incomes are higher than rates for people with lower incomes. Should tax rates for high income people be cut more than rates for low and middle income people so that there is less difference between rates for people with big incomes and those with smaller incomes?

Yes, 18%; no, 82%.

6. Should the 50% top tax rate (for joint return income in excess of $175,000) be—

a. Kept at 50%—75%.

b. Cut to 45%—7%.

c. Cut to 40%—7%.

d. Cut to 35%—10%.

7. Should business be allowed to deduct the costs of entertainment, such as taking clients on hunting and fishing trips, to the theater, or to professional sports events?

Yes, 12%; no, 88%.

8. How much should businesses be allowed to deduct for meals at which business might be discussed?

a. The full cost—13%.

b. $25 per person—19%.

c. $15 per person—21%.

d. Nothing—47%.

9. The goals of simplification and fairness often work against one another because much of the complexity in the tax law is due to provisions designed to assure fair treatment for taxpayers with special circumstances. Given that fact, which goal is more important:

a. Simplifying the tax law, even if that results in less fairness—13%, or

b. Assuring that everyone pays a fair share of the tax burden, even if that means less simplification—87%.

10. What should be the main goals of tax reform? Of the Most/Least Important [1] nine goals listed below, which are the three most important (rank 1, 2, 3) and which are the three least important (rank 7, 8, 9)?

a. Make sure everyone, both businesses and individuals, pays a fair share of the tax burden.—88%/4%.

b. Reduce all tax rates, but cut rates for high income people more than rates for low and middle income people—8%/66%

c. Reduce tax rates, but keep the differences between rates for higher and lower income people—22%/27%.

d. Leave the rate structure alone, but cut taxes by raising the personal exemption the the standard deduction—32%/27%.

e. Make it easier for me to do my taxes—19%/47%.

14. Personal information: Single, 21%; married, 79%; both spouses work, 24%; retired/unemployed, 29%; number in family, 2.88; age, 53.9.

[1] The first number is the percentage of respondents who ranked this item 1, 2 or 3. The second number is the percentage of respondents who ranked the item 7, 8 or 9.

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET REGARDING CURRENT LEVEL OF SPENDING AND REVENUES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1985

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Chairman WILLIAM H. GRAY III, pursuant to the procedures of the Committee on the Budget and section 311(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I am submitting the official letter to the Speaker advising him of the current level of spending and revenues for fiscal year 1985. Since my last report, the Congress adopted Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for fiscal year 1986 and revising the congressional budget for fiscal year 1985. Those revised aggregates have become the official House spending ceilings and revenue floor.

The current level report is used to compare enacted spending after the start of a fiscal year with the aggregate ceiling on budget authority, outlays, and revenues established in a budget resolution and enforced by point of order pursuant to section 311(a) of the act. The term "current level" refers to the estimated amount of budget authority, outlays, entitlement authority, and revenues that are available (or will be used) for the full fiscal year in question, based only on enacted law.

Now that we are operating under a revised budget resolution, both the aggregates and the estimates of current level reflect the economic and technical assumptions underlying this year's budget resolution, which of course are more up-to-date than last year's assumptions.

I should also note that the section 4(b) exemption in last year's budget resolution is no longer in effect. It applied only as long as the "automatic" second budget resolution for fiscal year 1985 was in effect, but that "automatic" second budget resolution is superseded by Senate Concurrent Resolution 32.

As chairman of the Budget Process Task Force, and on behalf of Chairman GRAY, I intend to keep the House informed regularly on the status of current level.

COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 11, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On January 30, 1976, the Committee on the Budget outlined the procedure which it had adopted in connection with its responsibilities under Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide estimates of the current level of revenues and spending.

Pursuant to Committee Rule 10, I am herewith transmitting the status report of budget authority, outlays, and revenues for fiscal year 1985. This status report compares current level to the budget aggregates in S. Con. Res. 32, the First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1986, adopted by the Congress on August 1, 1985. As you know, that budget resolution also revised the fiscal year 1985 budget resolution. The current CBO estimates of budget authority, outlays, and reveunes now reflect the economic and technical assumptions that underlie S. Con. Res. 32.

It should be noted that the Section 4(b) exemption, contained in H. Con. Res. 280, the First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1985, no longer applies. That section provided an exemption to the Section 311(a) budget ceilings for committees that remained within their own "discretionary action" 302(a) allocation. According to Section 4(c) of H. Con. Res. 280 that exemption would cease to apply when a subsequent budget resolution is agreed to. Agreement to S. Con. Res. 32 by the Congress on August 1, 1985, fulfills that condition.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. GRAY, III,
Chairman.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT FOR A BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I have taken up this special order tonight to talk about an issue that is on the minds of nearly every American, but that few in this House or in the other body choose to talk very loudly about, and that is the question of the budget. But more importantly, that is the question of a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget and limit taxes.

This is an issue that has been talked about at great length by a variety of people for the last 7 to 8 years. Movements have been going on in the States across the Nation to encourage our Congress to respond accordingly. Now some 32 States have petitioned the Congress for the purpose of asking them to issue forth an amendment to balance the Federal budget, and yet Congress has failed to respond.

It was with this concern in mind, and with the conviction that I have developed over the last several years while serving in this body that, in fact, the Congress itself and this House included cannot control its spending habits, that spending has in itself become an institutionalized process, and that we no longer control or have the will, most importantly the fiscal responsibility to respond. So we have watched in a progressive way over the last 5 to 6 years a deficit grow from some $40 billion to today's $200 billion. We watched our Budget Committee's struggle this year in an attempt to reduce that $200 billion down to around $170 billion, and in all reality, they failed.

Just before the August recess, we saw the budget resolution come out with some 68 billion dollars' worth of reconciliation in it. We see the pressures building here now and saw the action on the floor today that demonstrates that this body, although it might wish to chose the rhetoric and demonstrate to the American people that it is interested in reducing deficits, it really does not have the will. It does not have the will because the structure and the nature of this body, and the body across the way will not allow the kind of fiscal integrity and responsibility that well over 80 percent of the American public now demand.

With those concerns in mind, and with my belief in it, and the belief of a lot of other people in this House that the only way we begin to control the deficit was to control or change the structure by which we formulate the budget itself, I and others became convinced that the only avenue for doing so was to begin to push progressively for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget and limit taxes.

With that in mind, some 1½ years ago, I created the organization called CLUBB. [Constitutional Leaders United for a Balanced Budget]. And today, well over 120 Members, Republican and Democrat alike, have joined with me, both in the House and in the other body to move this issue. Now we have in this body House Joint Resolution 27 which is the constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget and limit taxes. As of today, 193 Members, Democrat and Republican alike, have joined in cosponsorship of that legislation.

The other body has crafted an amendment that has now left the Judiciary Committee, and we would anticipate votes on that constitutional amendment proposal in the other body in late September or early October.

Why are we seeing the renewed momentum on this issue? I think it is very simple. It is simple to understand because the American people have said so loudly and clearly "Get your fiscal house in order." We can no longer tolerate a $200 billion deficit, nor can we tolerate that which a $200 billion spawns, and now nearly $150 billion in trade deficit, and an activity that is in place that is deindustrializing this Nation at a more rapid rate than ever in the history of this country.

I have said on numerous occasions in the last minute that this is a bipartisan issue. It is not Democrat, it is not Republican. It is American, because the American people are crying out for fiscal responsibility.

So I would now ask the cochairman of CLUBB, who has worked closely with me to build this coalition here in the House, who is the primary cosponsor of the House joint resolution, the gentleman from Texas, CHARLIE STENHOLM, to join with me in his comments for a few minutes before we ask our other colleagues to participate with us.

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank my colleague from Idaho for yielding this time, and I want to commend him for the leadership that he has shown in the organization of our CLUBB, our Congressional Leaders United for a Balanced Budget, that has been not only an attempt to focus attention nationwide and in other States, but actually doing it, of getting us to a position in which we have the wherewithal to focus attention in those key States if we in the Congress are unwilling to deal the balanced budget issue. We do have 32 States who have said that is what we want done.

Two more and the Constitution takes over where the lack of will in Congress has been. Without the leadership of the gentleman, Mr. CRAIG, we would not be there. I am proud to be associated with the gentleman from Idaho and the other Members in focusing on this very important question. It seems that everybody is for a balanced budget. We are beginning to hear it talked about by almost every Member of this body. The unfortunate thing to date is, we still just talk about it. There are some who are going to suggest now that because we are about to do this, or we have done this, or we have made a good faith step in the right direction with the budget this year that no longer is it going to be important to focus on the Constitution. Nothing could be furthest from the truth. I think at this very moment it is imperative in this body that we move steadily toward an actual vote and implementation of the constitutional amendment in order to back up whatever it is that we might be actually about to do in the area of spending in this body, proceeding towards a balanced budget.

I guess I would conclude my remarks at this moment by sharing again a little statement that was made 10 years after our Constitution was written by Mr. Thomas Jefferson. He said at that time:

> I wish it were possible to obtain a single amendment to our Constitution, I would be willing to depend on that alone for the reduction of the administration of our government to the genuine principles of the Constitution. I mean an additional article taking from the Federal Government the power of borrowing.

Oh, how we might wish some day in the near future that we had not borrowed the $2 trillion we have borrowed in order to sustain a standard of living we have been unwilling to pay for in our generation.

Those words of Thomas Jefferson, I think, are going to ring in these Halls some day in the future, I hope in an orderly process as suggested by the gentleman.

Again, I commend the gentleman for his leadership and look forward to working with him and our other colleagues in a bipartisan way to put a little bit of deeds to our words concerning our concern about the deficit.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank the gentleman, my colleague from Texas, for the leadership he has taken on this particular issue. There is no question that without him he would not have the number of cosponsors that we have today on House Joint Resolution 27; nor would we have the number of Members we have in CLUBB.

The gentleman has worked with me in stressing the bipartisan approach. We have accomplished that because, as I said earlier and certainly Congressman STENHOLM has said, this is an American issue; it is not a Republican issue nor is it a Democratic issue.

With a $2 trillion national debt and well over 110 billion dollars' worth of financing needs in the 1986 budget just to finance that debt, we are indebting generations and generations in front of us to an obligation to pay for the kind of living style we wish to live but that we are unwilling to pay for.

I would next like to ask my colleague from Oregon, BOB SMITH, who has taken a leadership role on this issue, who started early on when he first came to this Congress to jump into the issue of a balanced budget and to carry it forth to work with a variety of groups across this country, to begin to build that growing interest which now exists in America, to achieve a constitutional amendment, to balance the budget and limit taxes.

Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Idaho.

I thank the gentleman for taking this time because I think it is essential that this body and the other body of the Congress of the United States understand that the continuous spending habits which have prevailed in the past 40 years, really have come to significance in the last 10 years, are really the kinds of efforts that are destroying the economic future and opportunity for our country, for our families, and for our children of the future.

To bring us somewhat in light, I would want to share with the body and with my colleagues some numbers since I have been in the Congress, only. That has not been a very long time compared to many who are here.

But in 1982, I arrived and we had a tax increase in 1982. Some have forgotten that. It was called TEFRON, $98 billion. In 1983 we had another tax increase, Social Security repair which cost $165 billion. In 1984 we had another tax increase, so-called Tax Reform Act. That was another $51 billion out of the taxpayers' pockets. In that same year we also had a gas tax increase of $5.5 billion.

Suddenly in 1985 we have the so-called Deficit Reduction Act which supposedly saved from $38 billion to $56 billion out of spending; but we know, those of us here, that that was smoke and mirrors, based upon faulty background, and we know that there was very little saving.

So what we have done, and what I am trying to point out, without saying so, we have raised taxes since 1982 in every year and our deficits continue to build.

The point of this is that the Congress, again, has not addressed the issue of spending and their spending habits.

To bring this to light, let me point out that in 1981, after only 209 years of our existence, our total national debt was $997 billion; 4 years later, just 4 years later, it had doubled, and we will be facing the heartburn of the question of raising the debt ceiling to $2 trillion before this year is out.

We have doubled the debt in this country in 4 years.

What is a greater problem is the question of the interest on the debt. The interest on the debt in 1981 was $111 billion. The interest on the debt today in this budget we are facing is $184 billion. Anybody in this business or anybody who has to face a budget knows that when you leverage a business or a household to the tune that you can no longer pay the interest on the debt, then you have sunk either the business or your household is out of business.

Therefore, I think that I have identified that the Congress has not controlled spending. Therefore, I believe there must be a systemic change. The change must be in the constitutional amendment to balance the budget which will become the 27th amendment to our Constitution.

We only amend our Constitution when it is absolutely essential. This becomes essential.

Let me say, I think it is safe to say there are only two categories of U.S. Representatives who serve in this House: The ones who know that their constituents want this amendment and the ones who have not yet asked.

The only alternative left is this balanced budget amendment, and I urge every Member of this body to either become a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 27 or if they are already a cosponsor to go get a colleague and join us because the fate of the Republic rests on his or her and our decision.

I thank the gentleman for allowing me this time.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Oregon for his leadership and his direct participation in this effort. He has been a stalwart in moving the issue with our colleagues here in the House. I think in your comments today the gentleman brings up some obvious issues, at least in the minds of the American public.

I was told today that with a $200 billion deficit, just this year's deficit, that we are talking about every man, woman, and child in this country being indebted another $10,000. That is the kind of thing that is almost unbelievable: it certainly is to the average man and woman out there.

When you turn to a high school student and say, "How much do you owe the Federal Government?" well, they look at you and say, "Gee, I don't owe anything." If they earned a little money this last summer and qualified and paid their taxes, it was probably very minimal, they do not think they owe anything.

But in reality, with a $2 trillion debt and the old line that, "Gee, whiz, national debt is no problem because you just owe it to yourself," the reality is we do owe it to ourselves. But now we are having to finance that national debt, and, in so doing, we have become a debtor nation for the first time in 70-some-odd years. Now, we are asking foreign governments and foreign interests to put money into our markets so we can afford to pay for the lifestyle that this Congress and this Government has decided they want to spend money on.

I think that is a very, very dangerous position for this country and the citizens of this country to allow our economy to get into, but we are now a debtor nation; and that debt rose progressively, and is held by foreign interests. Is that bad? Most certainly it is bad. It is bad because of what it generates ultimately, and that is a $120 billion trade deficit, and that is an awful lot of people out of work, and no new jobs in the hard sectors of our country, and especially from the States that you and I come from in the West being created.

So let me thank you once again for being a participant, and being an absolute activist in this effort.

Now I would like to yield to my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO].

Mr. GALLO. I thank the gentleman from Idaho. I complement him for bringing this to the forefront. A lot of people have talked about this particular issue, and very few have done something about it.

I would like to relate an experience that I just had recently, going back to the district and talking about the many problems we think the citizens are interested in; and whether it be tax reform or whether it be the environment, came out loud and clear to me in a town meeting that I had, and numerous meetings with individuals throughout the 11th District in New Jersey, that the question most raised and the most concerned, was dealing with a balanced budget.

They cannot understand; "they" meaning the people back home, why we cannot control the budget. They have to control that household budget, and they cannot understand, frankly, why we are sitting with such a large deficit, and apparently as you have indicated, not the will to control the spending habits.

So when I look, sometimes we here in Washington, being away from our constituents, have a little foggy view of what their concerns are; but I can tell you it is clearly the deficit as the number one priority.

Now it is interesting to note that when we look at our States, 48 States have a balanced budget requirement. The people I have talked to; some in the Congress, some outside the Congress, say, "DEAN, you are talking about a balanced budget. Do you know how much success you are going to have with that? It cannot work."

There is a defeatist attitude here that says you cannot balance the budget. In reality, when you look at the fact that 32 States have already signed on, petitioning Congress to have a constitutional convention, I think it proves that it is not a ridiculous matter; it is not something that States take in a frivolous fashion; it is something that we should stand up and start understanding is a large concern.

I have heard my colleagues mention the fact that we have the over $200 billion deficit; we also have over right now a $1.8 trillion national debt. As indicated, we are talking about every man, woman, and child owing $10,000. Now that is a heck of a legacy and one that I do not want to be part of.

I think the job that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] and our colleague from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] in getting over 191 or now maybe 193 sponsors on this bill, I think suggests very strongly that there is a concern by this Congress, and all we need, frankly I would suggest, is maybe a few more of our colleagues that are just as concerned.

Those same colleagues that go back to the district and say, "Hey, we're concerned with this, and we want to see a balanced budget"; but they have not put their names on the line.

When we talk about balanced budget, the first question I get after that is, "How can we do that? How can we do that in a year?" I think it is pretty obvious to everyone that you are not going to do it in a year.

As it was explained and as we have discussed, it is something that is going to take a minimum of 4 and possibly 5 years, and it can be done with very little disruption; just a little bit of courage and a little bit of determination.

Mr. CRAIG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLO. I certainly will.

Mr. CRAIG. When the gentleman talks about a framework of 4 to 5 years to balance the Federal budget, one of the questions I oftentimes get in speaking on this issue across the country is: Congressman, do you really think you can balance the budget? Do you really think you can get rid of $200 billion?

My answer is no. You cannot do that overnight; it could not be done next year; but what you are suggesting in a 4- to 5-year period is establishing a framework under which this Congress would operate to progressively reduce the deficit, knowing that out there at a 4- or 5-year period, they must bring it into balance. Is that what I understand of you?

Mr. GALLO. That is absolutely right. There is that concern, and I think it can be done. I know we have discussed it; some of my other colleagues have discussed that. It is a workable solution, and one that I think has a great deal of merit, and one that should be followed through on.

I know that when we talk about this year there are very few sessions that are going to be left; I think that it is imperative that all of us that are as concerned, and your organization do everything in its power to inform those Members that have not signed on to bring about a recognition by the House and the Speaker that this Congress is serious about having a constitutional amendment dealing with a balanced budget.

I know that those States, and right now it was mentioned by the gentleman from Texas, we have 32 States that have signed on. Constitutionally, to take this out of the Congress' hands, we need two more States.

It is my understanding that the State of Michigan is in deliberation on this particular issue, and hopefully they will vote in favor of it. Another State that may play a very important role is my own State of New Jersey. That State, I had before coming here, the opportunity as minority leader to introduce a balanced budget amendment requiring the Congress to act and as of yet, that has not taken place, but I know it is in the good hands of Senator Dorsey in the New Jersey Senate, and a number of House members.

I would hope that they would react positively to this, because I think as you go out more and more, this question is not going to fall on its face; you are not going to forget about it; you are going to hear more and more about it.

So in conclusion, I just want to compliment you and also our colleague from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], those members of that organization which I am proud to be part of, as a member, in trying to bring the awareness level to the public and to this Congress.

People today do understand that deficits mean higher costs to them, not only in the possibility of inflation, but also in the real dollar sense as far as interest.

So to you I congratulate you, and I am pleased to be part of this particular debate and dialog, and I hope that it brings about a better understanding with our colleagues.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me thank my colleague from New Jersey who, coming to this body as a freshman, very quickly said, "I want to be a part of that issue, because I so strongly believe in it." As the gentleman has explained, he has been a leader in his State legislature on this issue in attempting to get the State of New Jersey to petition the Congress for the purpose of an amendment to balance the budget. There is no other issue, in my opinion.

When the gentleman talks of the kind of figures he mentions, that every man, woman, and child in this country based on a $2 trillion national debt, now owes $10,000, and that for every $200 billion of deficit that is then moved into the debt column, that that adds $1,000 of debt to each one of those individuals.

I think it is only a matter of time before the American public stand up and says, "Enough. We don't care what program it is, whose program it is, how that program affects me or my neighbor or my community, stop it, Congress, stop it, you have done too much, you have gone too far, and now you have consumed such a large portion of the gross national product of this country and you have committed another large portion of it on an annual basis."

We are not far away from seeing interest on the debt as a single line item in the Federal budget of being No. 2 in size. And, you know, it is interesting. We can sit here, and we do on a regular basis, and debate which program has merit and which program does not have merit and what we will cut here and what we will not cut here. But there is one item that has no debate, none whatsoever. The Budget Committee merely pencils it in, in cooperation with the Office of Management and Budget and the Treasury, and that is called interest on the debt. We cannot decide how much we will pay and when we will pay it. It must be paid. That is the only section of the Federal budget that commands no debate. When that becomes the single largest item or the second single largest item, it will buy no services, it will buy no goods, it will put food in no one's mouth, it will put no missiles in place to protect us. It will simply consume a monstrously large amount of the gross national product of this country for the purpose of financing excess spending of periods past.

Now I would like to recognize another colleague of mine, another freshman who joined this effort and who has been a leader in the area of concern of a balanced budget, my colleague from Texas [Mr. BOULTER].

Mr. BOULTER. I thank my colleague for yielding. I just want to tell you how grateful I am to you, Congressman CRAIG, and also to my very good friend and distinguished colleague from Texas [CHARLIE STENHOLM], for your leadership on this issue, and especially for forming CLUBB [Congressional Leaders United for a Balanced Budget]. And I must say to you that there are two organizations in this body that I am particularly proud to be associated with, and one of them is CLUBB, the group within the House of Representatives that is actively working toward the constitutional amendment to balance the budget and limit taxes, and the other group is the Grace caucus, which I am proud to be the chairman of, because, I will tell you, I came to Congress for the first time this session, and even before being sworn in on January 3, I became a cosponsor of the constitutional amendment to balance the budget and limit taxes, and I did that because in my campaign I talked about and committed myself to doing something about controlling Federal spending.

I do believe, incidentally, that as horrendous as the deficit is, even if our budget were in balance, at this level of Federal spending we would still have a very, very severe problem, and the deficit is more a symptom of what is going on in this country than it is the problem.

But I will tell you how my people feel about it that I represent: They truly believe that the number one issue in our country today is not tax reform, though we need that, but it is the deficit and the threat that it poses to our children. And you have very adequately pointed out, Congressman CRAIG, some of the dangers and danger signs that we see right now. The $150 million trade deficit, that is very much related to this fiscal deficit. The almost $2 trillion national debt, what is the interest on that? Is it $145 billion right now? Something like that. I can tell you that within this other group, the Grace caucus, we have done some calculations that at current levels of Federal spending, only 15 years hence, when my children will be entering the job market, we will have an annual debt not of $2 trillion but of $13 trillion by the year 2000. And what kind of a world will our kids live in if that happens? I do believe that their liberties, their freedoms are linked to their economic opportunities, and if they are having to work the greater portion of every day just to pay the interest on the national debt, they do not have any economic opportunity and they will not have the liberty and the freedom that they enjoy today.

For my part, I have promised myself and the people I represent that I will never vote for any kind of tax increase until certain reforms are set in place, and one of those is the constitutional amendment to balance the budget, because I truly believe that increased revenues would just be used to further programs that we need to terminate.

I want to speak, for a moment, about my experience on the Budget Committee. It has been a terrific honor to serve on that committee, and also on the conference committee. But I can tell you that every special interest group in America came before our committee, all applauding our efforts to cut the deficit, but each and every one of them saying, "You have got to cut the deficit, but * * *." And this deficit reduction package that we came up with, I supported, I felt like it was the responsible thing to do, but we all know it is no victory over deficits. At best, it is a truce. I feel like our efforts to cut the deficit really fell victim to the same thing that I fear tax reform is falling victim to, and that is special interest groups, to the detriment of families and children, and it is so important, it is the number one threat to our country today, this Federal spending. I just want to congratulate you and recommit myself to working with you and the other Members of CLUBB toward resolving this great crisis which we are in, which I think can only be done with the passage of a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me thank my colleague from Texas for those kind words and also to say very clearly you are a leader in this body, willing to stand up and speak out on those things you believe in and to take up issues that are as controversial here, not nationwide, but here, as the constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget and to limit taxes. I appreciate your leadership in this area. One of the things that was very pleasing this year, as we saw the freshman class come in, both sides, Democrat and Republican alike, great numbers joined this cause because they knew right upfront, early on—it did not take them long to learn—that the only way we were really going to change the habits of this body and especially those fiscal habits, those spending habits, those institutionalized ways that we pour money out, was to do something structurally different to change the system and to do that through a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. So I appreciate your leadership in that area.

I would now like to recognize my colleague from Pennsylvania, an outspoken critic on Federal spending, certainly a leader in this House as it relates to keeping what spending levels we have done as much as possible, taking tough stands and making the point hard for a good many people here because it is so important that we vote on these critical issues. I appreciate the leadership of my colleague, BOB WALKER, from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to take issue, for a moment, with a comment that my colleague from Texas made a minute ago. It is just a difference in degree or a difference in rhetoric to some extent, but I think it is an important difference. I think the major problem facing the country that the American people have recognized is a spending problem. I think that the deficit problem, we tend to talk around here about deficits, but the deficit is the symptom of the spending problem, and I know that that is what the gentleman was reflecting. But I am trying to make it clear to my constituents that there are some who talk deficits around here who want to talk deficits because their idea is to use taxes as a way to solve the deficit problem.

Well, that is not the real problem. The problem is a spending problem, which is precisely what the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution speaks to. It says that it is time that we discipline ourselves on spending. And that is absolutely essential for the future of this country. It seems to me that our colleague from Oregon, when he talked about the fact that the survival of the Republic depends on us finding a way to discipline ourselves on spending, has related the issue, because it is the issue. We cannot go on much longer adding $1,000 a year to every family's personal debt and to the personal debt of every man, woman, and child because of what we spend and have this Nation survive economically. And if it does not survive economically, it cannot survive in any other way. So we really are at a moment of national crisis that needs a solution.

The balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is not a perfect tool but it is a useful tool, and it is in fact the kind of disciplinary tool that will allow us to address this problem in a meaningful way. I think we ought to recognize why it is that we need to do so. And nobody has pointed out that more clearly than the gentleman from Idaho here this evening when he has mentioned the fact that $200 billion worth of deficit this year means adding $1,000 to each family's personal debt.

We have a hard time visualizing $200 billion. We have a hard time visualizing $2 trillion. But $1,000 of additional debt in a year is something that most families can visualize, and most average families—maybe too many people in this Congress are too far away from most average families—but most average families think long and hard before they incur an additional $1,000 in debt. And yet day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year, we pile that debt onto them, we spend the money for them, and often it is done without very much thought.

Mr. CRAIG. You are talking about the newborn baby, at this minute. We are not talking about adults only, are we?

Mr. WALKER. The baby that just this second came screaming into the world as an American has a thousand dollars of debt on his head as a result of what we are piling up in deficits. If you take a look at the $2 trillion, he has $10,000 in overall debt, and I think we ought to look at that, too, because most average American families in this country incur $10,000 worth of debt for only a couple of things. One is to buy a house, most average families incur that much debt, and to buy a new car most families incur that much debt. But we have incurred it for them right here at the Federal level. We have said we are going to pile $10,000 worth of debt onto you and you are going to pay for it. The fact is that they pay for it just as assuredly here as if they had incurred it themselves. They pay for it with the higher interest rates; they pay for it with higher costs in the society as a whole when that kind of debt becomes inflationary. They pay for it. They pay for it over and over and over again. Yet, they do not make that decision. It would be a very tough decision for them to make as a family. Families think long and hard in this country before they buy a home or buy a new car because it is so much debt. Yet, Congress does it day after day.

We did it today. We could not cut our spending habits today to save $22 million on something like Amtrak. We cannot do it at all. We need discipline. The only disciplinary tool that has any chance at all of being effective is the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. The gentleman from Idaho has provided us with some real leadership toward getting us to the day when this House might actually have the guts to vote on it. That is the problem. We lack the guts to vote on it around here. So we might actually get the guts to vote on it because of the leadership shown by the gentleman from Idaho. I congratulate him for his work and for taking this special order.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania for his comments and for the leadership role he has taken on the issue of fiscal responsibility.

I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. BOULTER. I thank the gentleman.

In response to my colleague from Pennsylvania I think you are exactly right. What I said was that the deficit is the symptom. I think the greatest need in our country today is for some capital. That is exactly why Japan is beating us so badly right now and why we have a $150 billion trade deficit right now.

The real problem is the ever-increasing level of Federal spending, and as you so eloquently point out, just the sheer lack of courage by the Members of this body to say "no." As a result, with this kind of Federal spending which the deficit reflects, we have a crowding out of private sector initiative at every level, whether it is capital formation or volunteer work or helping our neighbors. The Government seems to be trying to do everything for everybody and there is less incentive for me as an individual to do it. There is less opportunity to get our hands on the capital. It is killing our farmers our small businessmen and everybody knows that. You are exactly correct.

I know one thing, it would make it easier for me, I do not think any of us is immune from the pressure to spend, and it would make it so much easier to say "no" if there were this constitutional prohibition against overspending.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that I do not know of any constituency for the Federal deficit. Everybody is against the Federal deficit, yet we have one and we have one year after year. I understand what the gentleman is saying with respect to a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. In fact, I came here thinking that is probably the wrong thing to do, and after hanging around several years I decided it is probably something we ought to do.

I do not necessarily support the same constitutional amendment that the President supports for a number of very important reasons, but I think the kind of language that Thomas Jefferson suggested in the original debate about this would probably make some sense in the Constitution.

It is important to understand that you can change the Constitution, but that does not mean that you balance the budget. The only way the budget gets balanced is one, if the President recommends a balanced budget and two, if Congress adopts one. If we change the Constitution tomorrow, there would be a President, Republican or Democrat, and a Congress, Republican or Democrat who would say, "Let us have a capital budget and an operating budget. Let us do it that way."

The point I am trying to make is this: We have a shared responsibility between a President who recommends big budget deficits and a Congress that follows his lead. We have got to solve the problem. We do not have the luxury of avoiding it any longer. Changing the Constitution, which I think is something we ought to do but do in the right way, will not solve the problem. The President and Congress will solve the problem by reconciling that which they want to spend with the revenues they are willing to bring in. I might say after attending meetings in my district, people say, well, how do you solve this thing? I scratch my head and say, well, it is very difficult at the moment because the biggest part of the current budget some say has to be increased. Notably defense. We must have some kind of increase in the largest portion of the budget. On the revenue side of the budget, we prohibit any sort of additional revenue. With that kind of mathematical equation, you cannot resolve the issue. I say that when you stand in the well and talk about the deficit you are talking about the issue that a lot of Americans are concerned about. All of us, from both parties, need to do what we must, what we can to try and move this fiscal policy of this country to some sort of stability moving towards a balanced budget.

I am with you; I am simply here today that ultimately a person, a President, a Congressman, a Republican and a Democrat must vote in the right way to balance the budget as between revenues and spending. That is ultimately the way you get that done.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me thank my colleague for making those statements and I am certainly the first to admit that House Joint Resolution 27 may not be the perfect document, and I would encourage my colleague to come join with us in the activity and the debate and support getting the issue out to the floor of this Congress so that we can show the American people that we are really sincere. That we are sincere in changing the Constitution to put into it the tool, not the absolute corrective measure, but the tool that will force us, not allow us, but force us to be fiscally responsible. You and I have both served here long enough to know that we can find any excuse in the book and probably do pretty good at home selling it to our constituents as to why we ought to spend money. The bottom line is we are spending a great deal more than we are willing to take in. In so doing that, we are creating a major fiscal problem in this country.

Now, we are willing to spend $100, but we are only willing to take in about $80. The question is can we take in the other $20 and allow the economy, your farmers and my farmers, to exist? Is there going to be enough money out there for them to borrow their operating lines and to be able to conduct their business? If Government really took all that it is now spending, or is spending really the issue? I think it is, and I think my colleague concurs with me in that. But join with us, come with us in creating the tool. More importantly, providing the avenue and the opportunity here on the floor of the House in which we can create that tool, the constitutional amendment to force this body and the other body to, for the first time in a great long while, to be fiscally responsible. I thank my colleague for joining with us this evening on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I now would like to yield to my colleague from Texas, Congressman ARMEY, who, once again, is one of those freshmen who came here and joined early on in this issue, recognizing the problems we have with the deficit and the debt. He joined the balanced budget effort, became a member of CLUBB, is a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 27, and has been an outspoken leader in his freshman group and here in the Congress on the question of fiscal responsibility

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by pointing out how much I appreciate the gentleman from Idaho taking this special order and discussing this as well as the other work you have done. I do have some prepared comments and Mr. Speaker, I would ask that they be placed in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to just focus very quickly on a few issues because we have some other people who want to speak. I embrace, endorse and work for the balanced budget amendment with a certain reservation. That reservation being that it ought not to be necessary. The basic fact is we have a Congress that for too many years, too many sessions, time after time in each new session of Congress, we have a Congress that gets out of hand and they let spending get out of hand. They have not had a sense of discipline and I have become convinced that they may not get a sense of discipline and restraint in spending.

The American people have said, and I think are saying to us daily, "Enough is enough. You have got to hold the line on spending. If you cannot get the discipline on a basis of appropriation bill by appropriation bill, then find the discipline in the budgetary process and begin with a balanced budget amendment or rule, and if you will not adopt a balanced budget amendment for yourselves to obtain that discipline, we will force its adoption through the States." And we are very close to the American people succeeding in forcing this adoption in that manner.

I think it is time that we stand up at this point and say to the American people, "We hear you. We respect you. We do not want you to have to send your message through the State legislatures. We are ready to respond. We are ready to pass this amendment, obtain the rule, learn the discipline, practice the restraint and quit spending your money."

As a final observation, that young baby that is born in America today with $10,000 worth of debt is going to have $28,000 worth of debt by the time he or she is 18 years old and beginning to earn a living. Can you imagine going to your first job already $28,000 in debt, a sum considerably less than you are likely to earn for some years to come?

As a freshman Member of Congress, perhaps I am better able to recall the frustration and bewilderment with which the average American views $200 billion annual deficits and a $2-trillion national debt. Our constituents hear a lot about fiscal responsibility and budget cutting, yet these tremendous deficits persist and our national indebtedness continues to grow. Indeed, it was Congress' inability to act in a constitutional and fiscally responsible manner which motivated me to seek this office.

Committed as I am to fiscal responsibility, one of the first things I did as a Member of Congress was to cosponsor House Joint Resolution 27, the balanced budget/tax limitation amendment. I was also pleased to join with a number of other concerned colleagues in Congressional Leaders United For A Balanced Budget, a group dedicated to passage of a balanced budget/tax limitation amendment. This measure is not an end unto itself; it will, however, force Congress to begin to exercise the fiscal responsibility which the people demand.

By requiring a balanced budget, except in emergencies, it would force the Congress to live within its means—something which every individual must do, and something which Congress has put off for too long.

I also think it is important to stress the "tax limitation" aspect of House Joint Resolution 27. The answer to our budget crisis does not lie in tax increases. We've tried this route before and the long and the short of this act is that it doesn't work. A spendthrift Congress continues to spend what we take from the American people in taxes, and spends more, and more, and more.

Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a number of difficult spending decisions daily. But let me remind my colleagues that we asked the people for this job and we have a responsibility not only to them, but to future generations of Americans, to put our fiscal house in order. The longer we postpone the day of reckoning, the more painful it will be.

Mr. CRAIG. I would like to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, for those valuable words and those observations. He has been strong and outspoken on this issue, and we appreciate his leadership here in the House for fiscal responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DENNY SMITH] who I came to this Congress with back in 1981, who in a very short time recognized that the only way we were going to control our spending habits was to do something which is rather fair and equitable but that was very strong in its effort, and that was to freeze the Federal budget. I believe he started that idea some 3 years ago, and if we had followed his leadership at that time, we would not be struggling with a $200-billion deficit today.

But not only did he lead in that area of fiscal responsibility, he early on recognized the need for the tool, as our colleague from Pennsylvania said, the tool of a constitutional amendment to force this Congress to balance the budget, and became a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 27 and a member of the CLUBB organization.

I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DENNY SMITH].

Mr. DENNY SMITH. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I just cannot tell you how much thought goes into the past here, the past 5 years, and I have to thank the gentleman and the people of western Idaho who have sent him here and the opportunity to help provide that tool to the citizens and the taxpayers in this country.

I remember when we were campaigning 5 years ago as citizens of this country, the gentleman from Idaho and I in the western Oregon area, and 1980 is just a short period ago. When we got to the Congress in 1981, we were faced with one of the tough votes in early 1981 that I think those of us who came here to balance the budget had to face, and that was whether we were going to raise the national debt ceiling at that time to exceed the $1 trillion mark for the first time. I believe it was $980 billion at the time. I am proud to say that I voted against that, and I think that was a very good vote at that time. I still am proud of having done that, and especially when we look back on the fact that since 1981 the spending in the budget of this Congress and in these United States has gone from $660 billion a year to $1 trillion.

So I am proud to join with my colleague tonight in trying to bring more attention to the need to have a tool that will help us balance this budget.

When I travel around Oregon and around this country, too, people say to me, "Can we really balance the budget? Is it really possible for us to balance the budget?"

Then I will tell them, "Sure it is. You have to balance your budget. The State has to balance its budget. All the companies in this country have to balance their budgets."

Yet we cannot seem to balance the budget here. I had a telephone conversation about a week ago with one of my constituents, and he said, "Say, I have kind of a simple idea. Why do we not just cut 10 percent out of everything in this entire budget and get to a balanced budget?"

I said, "Well, I can go you one better than that. We can just freeze the budget. We can just start this process." And yet the media have talked a great deal about the fact that we have a $58-billion budget deficit cut. We did not cut anything. Having served on the Budget Committee for these last 9 months, I can say that the budget process is really dead. It is dead without that tool that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] and those Members who have been here and have been talking about it this evening need, along with the rest of the Members in this body.

If we are going to have the ability and the courage to really straighten out the fiscal morass that the finances of the United States is in, we have got to have the balanced budget amendment.

The leadership of the gentleman from Idaho, and the Congressional Leaders United For a Balanced Budget has just been crucial. If we can get those other 2 States and force this constitutional convention, we will force the leadership in this body, this House of Representatives of the people of the United States, to act and bring forward on this floor the opportunity to debate and to get into the Constitution of the United States an opportunity for all of us in this body and all citizens to enjoy the balanced budget and what that would bring to us, which is financial sanity and a fiscal opportunity to straighten out the finances of this Nation and of the entire world.

So I congratulate my colleague, and I appreciate his taking this special order. I am glad to help him at any time in the future and stand ready and able and willing to vote with him.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Oregon for those statements, those kind words, and most assuredly his leadership in these areas. He has not only been a bulldog on the issue; he has been a watchdog in calling attention to the activities and the spending habits of this Congress when they clearly deserve to be called to the attention of the American people.

I just wish we had had the wisdom 3 years ago to follow his leadership in suggesting that then was the time to freeze the budget. I am convinced if we had done that then, we would not only be a long way toward bringing ourselves toward a balanced budget, but we would see the kind of economic resurgence in this country that would probably have unemployment down a couple of more points than it is now, and interest rates would be down a couple more points, and we would not be staggering under the weight of the deluge of products from all over the world as we become the world's warehouse of goods instead of the world's manufacturer of goods.

So I thank my colleague for his leadership, his wisdom, and especially his effort on the issue of the constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], once again a freshman in this body, who has been a leader on the issue not only here but in his own State early on when he came and joined the CLUBB organization, became a cosponsor of the balanced budget resolution, and has certainly served here for his constituents in North Carolina as a leader for fiscal responsibility.

Mr. COBLE. I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Idaho, and the gentleman from Texas who cosponsored this proposal with him. It is a long time coming and needs to be passed very imminently.

As the gentleman just implied, in 1979, as a sitting member of the North Carolina House of Representatives, I was one of the cosponsors of the resolution that urged the Congress to indeed adopt a balanced budget amendment. That was 6 years ago, before the balanced budget amendment revolution was in full force. I knew then it needed to be done. It needed to be done, it seemed to me, and I do not mean this critically, because the Members of this body simply lacked the discipline to do it voluntarily, and I believe if this bill is passed, I think it will not be a voluntary effort.

□ 1920

It will be a direction that has been given, and we will have no choice but to adhere to it.

I am an enthusiastic cosponsor of the gentleman's proposal. I hope that our other Members share the optimism the gentleman and I have concerning the fate of this legislation.

Let me say to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] that I said some months ago to my colleagues on the floor, "When we come on the floor, you know, we must insert our respective cards into our voting machine, and that activates the machine." I said to some of my friends on the floor, "Sometime when your machine is activated, press the no button. We have a no button on our machines."

I do not mean this to sound negatively, but many Members on this floor are incapable of hitting the no button. The no button works. Try it, you might like it. I do not like to be "Congressman No," but that no button works, and until we are willing and disciplined to activate it, we are whistling in the dark. Join me in voting no occasionally when no is the right vote, and join me in supporting the gentleman from Idaho and our colleague, the gentleman from Texas, who cosponsors this with him, and let us get this bill rolling.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for having yielded to me.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina, for the good sense he makes in his statement and in his support of the constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget.

I find it so interesting, as I have the opportunity to speak in my district, across my State, and in other areas of the country, that the American people ask the simple question: "Why not? Why can't you do it? If you don't do it, what will ultimately happen to our country?"

What happens when the $2-trillion national debt becomes $3, and then $4, and then $5, and then it takes $200 billion to finance it on a regular basis? Do you simply walk away from the debt? Do you default? Do you say to those who bought the bonds of this country, who borrowed, or loaned the money to this country to operate, that we are going to walk away from our debt?

No, we cannot do that as a nation. We cannot invite world financial collapse by our fiscal irresponsibility. The American people understand that, but for some reason this body does not.

As the gentleman from North Carolin [Mr. COBLE] knows, we struggle and we argue, and we find some good reason to support the budget that we support. We have 435 Members in this House, and there are hundreds of special-interest groups who will tell us privately in our offices that they agree with us that we have got to cut the spending, that we have got to bring the budget under control, but they ask, in their particular area, would we please fund them at an adequate level because theirs is unique and theirs is special?

That is, of course, one of the reasons why this body can no longer say no, because all of us have at least one special-interest group we find it pretty difficult to say no to, and then collectively we find it very difficult to say no to all of them. That has resulted in record deficits, and a record debt, and an economy that is now struggling to try to come alive and provide the sustenance and vitality that the men, and women, and young people in this country are asking for so they may have an opportunity and a job.

The constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget and limit taxes is not absolute, as has been said by many of our colleagues here this evening, but it is a valuable tool in guiding and directing the Congress of the United States toward fiscal responsibility and providing the ultimate test by which their constituent can then judge them to see if they really do in Congress what they say they would like to do while they are back in their districts.

I thank my colleagues for joining with me in this special order tonight, and I urge my colleagues here in the House who are not now sponsors of House Joint Resolution 27 to join with us in this most critical issue at a most important time in our history.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE ISSUE OF DUTY-FREE ETHANOL IMPORTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 days within which to extend their remarks on the subject of my special order, and I also ask unanimous consent for permission to insert, during the course of my statement, certain written documents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this special order tonight relative to an issue that is very important to the Midwest and certainly one which is important to our Nation's economy and to the deficit which has been spoken to this evening by many Members.

The issue is relative to a decision made by the Department of the Treasury on August 26 relating to the import of Brazilian blended ethanol. This decision by our Treasury Department, as we will explain during the course of this special order, will have a significant negative impact on American farmers and farm families, on American workers, on the American Treasury, and ultimately on the security of our Nation as it relates to our energy independence.

I am glad to be joined in this effort relating to this issue by my colleagues: first, by the gentleman from Iowa, Congressman JIM LEACH; the gentleman from North Dakota, Congressman BYRON DORGAN; and the gentleman from South Dakota, Congressman TOM DASCHLE. Prior to making my remarks, I would like to yield to my three colleagues who have stayed with me this evening. First, I yield to my colleague from the other side of the aisle who has joined me from the beginning in this effort, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH], for the purpose of a statement.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would like to stress, as, I think, all Members of the House understand, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] has led this issue of ethanol more than any other Member of the House and has in fact stood up for the interests of farmers on many issues as profoundly as any Member I know.

I would just like to make three brief observations this evening. One relates to the farm economy. We all understand that it is in difficulty. We also understand that one of the ways we deal with the issue is to seek out new markets for products. Ethanol has as much potential in the great Corn Belt as any other product.

I will be introducing certain legislation tomorrow which will be designed to establish a strategic ethanol reserve which will in effect have the same balance as the strategic petroleum reserve. In theory, however, it will be a reserve based on products that are grown in America, as contrasted to the strategic petroleum reserve, which is based on products which are produced abroad and which also are depletable.

The second point I would like to make relates to the fact that as we look at the whole issue of the farm economy, there are a lot of reasons for the problem. One is the mix of fiscal and monetary policy that has given us a highly valued dollar and high interest rates. In that mix, we in the Congress bear a good deal of responsibility, as does the Federal Reserve Board for administering a rather taut monetary policy for the last 4 or 5 years.

But with regard to the ethanol issue, there is a third aspect that relates to an administration that is of a classic State Department variety. I happen to believe that we have one of the most professional and competent State Departments in the world, but it is a State Department that is politically attuned and not economically attuned. It is a State Department that does not stand up for American economic interests in the same way and with the same degree of professionalism that it stands up for American political interests.

What we have in the ethanol issue is the advocacy of the U.S. Ambassador to Brazil on behalf of the Brazilian Government, in fact, in this case a Brazilian petroleum company that is state-owned and which has under its jurisdiction a strategic ethanol reserve and which also desires to sell ethanol in the United States of America. The American Ambassador requested over 1 year ago of the U.S. Government that we bend the law of the United States to allow ethanol to be imported from Brazil to America without certain tariff restrictions that existed. The American Ambassador also, in a communication formally to our Government, asked that our Government supply him a resident expert on tariff laws that would be able to advise the Brazilian Government on how to get around the tariff laws of the United States.

The arrogance of that request, coupled with the lack of judgment involved with trying to bend the law of the United States in such a way that the American economy is jeopardized, I think, underscores a problem with the U.S. State Department that ought to be well understood by this body. I will say that the Ambassador at issue—and I think it is important to understand this—is a professional career diplomat of distinguished record, excellent stature, and qualifications, and so as I view it, what is at stake is a bias and orientation within the Department of State, and this Congress has a responsibility to shed light on what is happening with Brazilian imports into this country.

Then, finally, let me just conclude by noting that if we think that something is rotten in the state of Denmark, as Shakespeare used to say, or rotten in the State of Washington, as is being reflected on issues of this nature, nothing reflects more on the lack of priorities in this country than the fact that the greatest agricultural country in the history of the world is today importing in the Farm Belt itself, oats from Sweden, hogs from Canada, and now the equivalent of corn or corn substitutes from Brazil right into the heartland. This can imply only one thing: that something systemically is wrong with Government, because the system we have of American agriculure is unrivaled in the world.

So somehow we have to start with a Washington perspective to serve the farmer as the farmer has served America.

With that as a basic orientation, let me suggest that the special order of the gentleman from Illinois is very well taken and I appreciate the gentleman's leadership on the issue.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the gentleman from Iowa.

At this point I would like to yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE].

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and I, too, want to commend him. No one in the House has taken this issue on with more determination or with more leadership than has the gentleman from Illinois. We all owe him a debt of gratitude for his persistence in pursuing this issue as doggedly as he has over the last several months.

I think we need to talk a little bit about why we are here.

Today's special order is an opportunity for those of us who have fought long and hard for development of a viable domestic fuel ethanol industry to turn the spotlight once again on what I perceive to be a very ill-advised administration decision which clearly stifles this important industry's tremendous potential. We are talking here about the August 26 Customs Service ruling which exempts certain marketers and traders from a congressionally mandated 60-cent duty on blended ethanol imports.

The United States has a growing ethanol industry. We know that. It is well documented. Over the past several years it has been competitive with foreign-government subsidized imported ethanol, largely due to a 60 cents per gallon import duty imposed by Congress in 1980. However, certain marketers and traders have increasingly sought to circumvent that duty, and I think the gentleman is going to be addressing that issue in much more depth at a later time.

Earlier this year, the U.S. Customs Service issued several letter rulings permitting Brazilian-made ethanol blended with the additive toluene to enter the United States duty free. Under pressure from farm-State Members of Congress, the Customs Service announced on August 2 that it would revoke the rulings and reinstitute the 60-cent duty on toluene-blended ethanol. It appeared the problem was solved until the Treasury Department issued a further ruling on August 26 which permits certain shipments of blended ethanol to enter the United States without the duty until November 1.

Well, that is the story so far.

This latest administration ruling places both the U.S. ethanol industry and American farmers in serious jeopardy, I might add at a very vulnerable time. It could allow up to 500 million gallons of imported ethanol to enter the country duty free. Nothing could be a more significant blow to our prospects of succeeding.

These imports are going to undercut the long-term potential of the industry and provide a short-term blow to the farm community at a time when the country faces a serious problem of agricultural surpluses.

Consider the costs of this decision: 200 million bushels of corn will not be converted into ethanol in the United States, in a year when the United States has a bumper crop of corn; a 200-million bushel surplus could drive down the price of corn 15 cents a bushel, according to the National Corn

Growers; and $1.2 billion in farm income will be lost if those 200 million bushels are not converted into ethanol.

Most significant in terms of the deficit, the U.S. Treasury could lose up to $300 million it otherwise would have collected in import duties on the foreign-made ethanol.

As the cofounder of the congressional alcohol fuels caucus, I have been involved in the private sector/government partnership that has been so successful so far in building a substantial fuel ethanol industry in a relatively short period of time. Today, private sector investment of over $1 billion has built an industry that will process nearly 250 million bushels of corn—roughly the equivalent of our exports to the Soviet Union—into nearly 600 million gallons of ethanol. Moreover, in addition to providing a critically needed outlet for our productive farmers' grains, this industry is also producing the most environmentally acceptable alternative to lead as an octane enhancer in gasoline.

The Customs Service August 26 ruling places narrow special interests over the broader national interest in violation of the intent of Congress and without benefit of meaningful congressional review. Congress should not allow the administration to run roughsod over farmers and ethanol producers in order to benefit a few marketers and traders who stand to make substantial profits.

We must be committed to seeing this ill-conceived Customs Service decision reversed. A number of Members have already urged Treasury Secretary Baker under the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois to reverse the Customs Service's August 26 ruling and require the collection of import duty for all ethanol/toluene blend. I hope additional Members will join this effort and raise similar concerns with the Secretary.

In addition, I believe that we must look beyond this immediate challenge to the domestic fuel ethanol industry and take greater initiative implementing policies which will expand—not impede—the growth of the domestic ethanol industry. It is imperative that we succeed in the campaign we have begun to make the farmer not only a food, feed, and fiber producer, but also an energy producer.

Attainment of the National Corn Growers' goal of 1 billion bushels of corn into ethanol by 1990 is feasible, and we must take the innovative steps needed to insure that the industry's market opportunities are met. The EPA's decision to reduce lead in gasoline has created an incredible potential of an alcohol equivalent octane gap of 60 billion gallons over the next decade. It should be our objective to have every gallon of that gap filled by agriculturally derived, renewable ethanol. Hopefully, administration officials will learn from their mistakes in the toluene import incident and work with Congress to provide the meaningful short-term incentives which the domestic fuel ethanol industry needs to realize its full potential.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank my colleague from South Dakota who is also a member of the Agriculture Committee for his leadership on this issue and for his cooperation through the alcohol fuels caucus and the promotion of alcohol fuels over the years.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], a member of the Ways and Means Committee who has joined us in this effort.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I want to thank Congressman DURBIN for this special order and the opportunity to speak on it.

I have felt for a long while that the ethanol industry is an industry of the future for the midwestern part of this country, the so-called Farm Belt. It seems to me that a country with energy problems and the need to move toward energy independence is a country that ought to look to a vast resource, notably kernels of corn that we grow in great abundance, barley, wheat and other agricultural products, as a source of energy. To take a kernel of corn and extract from that kernel the alcohol content, you still have left after you have achieved the alcohol, you still have left a protein feed stock; so using our vast agricultural surplus to extend our energy supplies makes good sense to me.

I would have preferred, for example, when we built this program called the PIC Program down at the Department of Agriculture that we would have instead built a network of ethanol alcohol plants across the Midwest that would be there for many, many years, using surplus agricultural products to extend our energy supplies in this country through the use of ethanol alcohol; but that was not the case. That was not done, and I think to the detriment of our agricultural community.

We are developing an ethanol industry in this country. We are doing it slowly. We would like to see much more rapid progress than currently exists, but still that industry is developing, with the help of Congress in many different ways. It will be in my judgment the industry of the future in the Farm Belt.

At the moment there are several threats. One is the loss of the tax exemption that exists, the 6-cent exemption that exists for ethanol.

The President says, "Let's get rid of that." Well that is going to be phased out in 1992 under present law. Plans have been made, facilities have been constructed based on that notion that we will phase out that exemption in 1992.

I would like to see us continue on that schedule to allow the ethanol industry to continue to build and to grow and by 1992 we will phase that exemption out and that industry will be self-sufficient and will be a major part, in my judgment, of the economic foundation of the Midwest.

Another threat that exists currently is the threat of imports, imports to the tune of 100 million, 200 million or perhaps more millions of gallons from Brazil.

I think the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa and others have adequately described what the difficulty is.

I find it absolutely amazing that the Ambassador would in letters be asking questions about how do we bend the rules here? How do we bend the law so that we can move in some ethanol alcohol into the American economy duty-free and with preferred status? How do we do that?

Well, you do not do that. The reason we established these kinds of things in the U.S. Congress and in our Customs Service is that we are trying to achieve a certain kind of public policy.

□ 1940

And we have an ambassador to another country saying how can I down in this country move some of the products from this country back into my home country and bend the law in order to get it done.

I will tell you what, I am baffled and puzzled by the behavior of the Ambassador.

Well, this past weekend I was at the caucus that was held at of the Ways and Means Committee on Saturday and Sunday. Attending that caucus was the Treasury Secretary, James Baker. I had a chance to visit with the Treasury Secretary about this issue and told him of my concern and your concern about these imports, and what it would do to a domestic industry. I mean, this has the potential of devastating an important growing industry in this country.

The Treasury Secretary said well, "all we are going to do at this point is maintain contract sanctity," and I accept that. I mean, I understand the need for contract sanctity. I'm sure the gentleman in the well, Mr. DURBIN, coming from a State that is a major part of the Farm Belt, cares about contract sanctity. We have talked about it in many instances in many different ways, contract sanctity with respect to grain sales to the Soviets, contract sanctity so that we make certain that our trading partners understand that when we make an agreement to sell agricultural products to them, we are going to keep that agreement.

So I understand contract sanctity, and when the Secretary of the Treasury said, "look, we are going to insist on and maintain contract sanctity with respect to the Brazilian exports to the United States," I understood that.

And once I began looking into contract sanctity on Monday, and talking to the Customs Service, I understood that the way the Customs Service looks at this is that we have the threat of seeing 175 million gallons, roughly one-third of the domestic industry production for 1 year, flooding into this country in a very short time frame under their definition of some sort of contract sanctity.

So just a couple of hours ago, I sent something down to the Treasury Department, to Jim Baker, reiterating my concern, and remembering our conversation of this weekend about contract sanctity, and asking him to look into the Customs Service interpretation of what all of that means. Contract sanctity does not mean to me that some folks get together after an August 2 date and say, "well, we were going to make a sale here, and so let us exchange some papers, and create the sale, and we will rush in a bunch of ethanol alcohol under the limit of this Customs Service regulation and avoid some of the duty." I am hoping that the Treasury Secretary in the next few days will take a close look at that and will respond to my inquiry, and I am hopeful that the Treasury Secretary will assure us that contract sanctity means what we think it means; that is, if there were written contracts, binding contracts made in good faith prior to that August 2 date, we understand that. But we do not understand the threat of 175 million gallons being thrown in here under the loosest definition of contract sanctity that I have heard of for some long while.

So those are concerns. We have a plant in Walhalla, ND, that is up and operating and working well. It takes barley that we grow in great abundance, puts it in the front end of that plant and out the back end and you get two things. You get alcohol, ethanol alcohol, and you still have the protein feed content left. I just think it makes great sense to do that with an alcohol commodity that we cannot seem to sell overseas we produce so much of it.

We do a couple of important things. First, we provide new markets for farmers who are desperately searching for new markets, and second, we extend an energy supply we need to extend in this country.

I would like to say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], has been the consistent leader on this issue in Congress, and I appreciate that. I am going to work on this issue very hard in the Ways and Means Committee on the tax exemption issue that I talked about earlier. I am working in a number of other ways, but I give credit to these few in Congress who understand and have the vision that this industry is critically important to American agriculture that is now in trouble, and this industry is very, very important, I think, to the energy future of the United States. If we have that kind of vision, and if we make the right decisions in the months ahead, we will, I think, see 10 years from now a strong and proud ethanol alcohol industry, and we will know we made the right decision to help that industry grow and be prosperous. I just appreciate the gentleman's special order.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the gentleman from North Dakota.

As Congress returned this September to start the fall session, there were two major issues which we had to tackle. One was a farm bill, and we are moving with some progress on that front. The second was the issue of our trade relations with other nations around the world.

In my home State of Illinois, as I traveled about my district during the month of August, it was increasingly apparent that this was to be a year of a bumper crop. The fields have never looked better, corn and soybeans in every direction. The projections from the U.S. Department of Agriculture are that we are going to have a bumper crop of corn in the United States this year, over 8 billion bushels produced.

Can you think of what kind of welcome news that would be in other countries of the world where people starve to death for the lack of protein in their diet, all the pictures we have seen on television, but here in the United States where we should be welcoming the news of a bumper crop, many of us who live in farming areas are concerned, because a bumper crop at today's prices means that, unfortunately, prices may go down even more. And the farmers in my area of the country, and across the United States who are having a difficult time to survive look on a bumper crop as a mixed blessing, more production, but lower prices. So there is that concern.

And what we look to to make up the difference with this bumper crop is more demand, and naturally more exports. Forty percent of America's agricultural production is exported. So the more we can sell overseas, the better.

But also, we look for more domestic consumption, whether we are talking about Americans eating more dairy products or whether we are talking about the sale of ethanol in the United States. We are hoping to increase the demand for this bumper crop, this production, and in so doing increase the price and the return for the American farmers.

So I came back to Washington prepared to face the difficulties of the farm bill, in trying to take our scant resources because of our budget deficit, and apply it to a nationwide problem facing our farmers. But a few days before I returned, there was a decision, which we have referred to this evening, by the U.S. Department of the Treasury which affected not only the income that farmers could receive, but also affected the whole trade issue that is before Congress during this session. It revolves around the issue of production of ethanol, and as has been described this evening, we in the United States are blessed with a very productive domestic ethanol industry. I am proud to say that my home State of Illinois is considered the Saudi Arabia of ethanol. We produce 50 percent of all of the ethanol in the United States in my home State, within only a few miles of my home.

The significance of this industry has been stated. Some 600 million gallons of ethanol is produced each year and some 250 million bushels of corn converted into this product, and in the process, we create more demand for our products to raise our price, to help our farmers survive. And something else, we move closer to the day that we all hope for of energy independence. We do not depend on importing grain to produce ethanol. We have got it and plenty of it. And the more we can do to produce this ethanol, the better we are as a nation.

As has been mentioned, the decision by the Department of Energy to phase out the use of lead as an additive in our gasoline that we use in our automoblies creates a unique opportunity for our farm community and for the ethanol industry, because, ladies and gentlemen, we can move to the use of ethanol as an octane additive to replace lead, and in so doing help our farmers, rely on a domestic supply, and have in ethanol an environmentally safe product, all three together.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield to my colleague from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding. I compliment the gentleman's leadership in the field of attempting to discover an alternative fuel to a diminishing supply of petroleum energy throughout the world. Just in a short time that the gentleman has been here, he has recognized this national need, this preeminent national concern of discovering an alternative fuel to the declining supply of petroleum energy.

I am advised that it is virtually unanimous among all energy-knowledgeable people that the current, that the known supply of petroleum energy has been reduced by 50 percent during the last 100 years, and that during the next 50 years, maybe even as soon as the next 30 years, the remaining known supply of petroleum products, petroleum supply will be depleted.

□ 1950

There is a commanding need in our society today to discover an alternative to petroleum. As the gentleman from Illinois has pointed out, it will do three immediate things for our Nation, in addition to making a supply of energy available.

One, it will clean up our environment. Brazil, since 1980, has reduced the poison, the lead poisoning, in its atmosphere by 75 percent, in only 5 years.

Two, alcohol fuels will reduce our dependence upon foreign oil. Last year the United States spent $57.3 billion for its imported oil bill.

That happens to represent more than one-third of our trade deficit which is plaguing our Nation.

Finally, to revert, to change to an alcohol fuel supply will provide a market for our farm products which will bring wealth to the farm community and provide to it the infusion of economic vitality that is so lacking today.

I comment the gentleman for his leadership.

You know, the subject of alcohol fuel has been well known to modern civilization for about 50 years. I recently obtained a book from the Library of Congress, just yesterday in fact, entitled "Energy Beckons" by Hale, the author. The subject of this book is that opportunity beckons for the American people to seize alcohol fuels as an alternative to petroleum energy that will provide us with new energy as well as new income in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from taking this special order this evening, and I commend him for his leadership.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas.

As I mentioned in my remarks earlier, returning to Washington, I found that there has been a curious current toward the end of August, where the U.S. Department of the Treasury made a ruling, a significant ruling, one that affects not only the importation of Brazilian ethanol but affects farm income in America.

I have taken it upon myself to investigate the nature and the history of this ruling, and I would like to share it this evening and make it part of our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It begins with a letter dated July 5, 1984, which I will submit at this point for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I would like to quote from it.

First let me tell you it is a letter from the U.S. Ambassador to Brazil, a gentleman by the name of Diego C. Asencio. This letter from our Ambassador in Brazil to the U.S. Customs Service, a little over a year ago, contains some interesting information. It was addressed to William Von Raab, Commissioner of the U.S. Customs Service, who still holds that position today. Let me read portions of this letter which I think are significant:

EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Brasilia, Brazil, July 5, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM VON RABB,
Commissioner, U.S. Customs Service,
Washington, DC.

DEAR COMMISSIONER: Recently my Senior Commercial Officer, Mr. Emilio Iodice, and I met with Shegeaki Ueki, the president of the Brazilian state petroleum company Petrobras. Among the subjects we discussed was the tariff treatment of Brazilian anhydrous alcohol exported to the U.S.

Because of the lack of foreign exchange due to growing debt service requirements, Brazil has become a world leader in the substitution of fuel alcohol for gasoline in automobiles. Unfortunately (from Brazil's perspective), the very high U.S. tariffs on alcohol have greatly limited exports of Brazilian alcohol to the U.S.

As you can see from Mr. Ueki's note, Petrobras is interested in obtaining a favorable tariff ruling on the importation of anhydrous alcohol that is pre-blended with additives such as MTBE, BTX and others. According to Mr. Ueki, this product would be used as an additive to gasoline. What the Brazilians are interested in is finding some formula to export a product of alcohol, but which is different enough to qualify for a lower tariff rate.

In view of the bad news they are about to get alcohol in the Congress and from the States of California and Florida, a positive response on this subject would elicit a most positive reaction on the part of the Brazilians. It would serve somewhat to mitigate what has been considered here a growing protectionism stance on our part.

I realize that you do not normally involve yourself in details like this, but I would appreciate your help in seeing that Mr. Ueki's letter gets to the right office in Customs. After the ruling is made, I would be happy to transmit it to Mr. Ueki.

This is an example of the guidance that a future Customs Attache could provide to the Embassy.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

DIEGO C. ASENCIO,
Ambassador.

Mr. Speaker, here in this letter we have the beginning of a chain of events which finally culminated on August 26, a little over a year later, in a ruling by the U.S. Department of the Treasury, and I will describe to you the impact of that ruling.

But it must be remembered as we begin this discussion this evening that it started with a letter from our Ambassador asking our Customs Service to find ways for the Brazilians to avoid paying duty on ethanol they would ship to the United States of America.

This letter, of course, was sent to the Customs Service. Within a few days it was reported that there were Brazilian exporters of ethanol who were looking to mix their ethanol with some blend of additive, whatever it might be, to avoid paying the duty.

By September 12 of that year, the chief of the Classification Branch of the U.S. Customs Service, a Mr. Schifflin allowed this blended ethanol to come in in a duty-free status into the United States. Some 3 or 4 months later, the Treasury Department gave to our Ambassador what he requested, a means for Brazilians to ship ethanol into the United States without paying the duty.

Subsequently, through January and through the month of June in 1985, letter rulings were given to Brazilian exporters to send their products to the United States duty-free. What does it mean to send it in duty-free? Is it significant? Let me tell you how significant it is. The Brazilian ethanol industry is a state industry and heavily subsidized. They are able to produce ethanol at a much lower price than the United States because their government subsidizes their industry. Our duty is 60 cents a gallon to bring the price of their product as it comes into the United States at least at a level equal to the cost of production in the United States so as to keep our industry strong and to make up for their State subsidy. Now, if they can send in their ethanol duty-free, they stand to gain a profit of at least 60 cents a gallon on each gallon they send to the United States, a handsome profit for the exporters.

Let me tell you, the tankerships that are coming in have a capacity of between 8 and 15 million gallons. What it means is that an exporter who can get a letter ruling from the Department of the Treasury can make anywhere from $4.8 to $9 million every time a ship comes in, a very lucrative profit to be made. These letter rulings were made, consistently made. Those of us in Congress who felt they were inconsistent with our law in the United States requiring a duty started to protest. By August 1985, the U.S. Customs Service admitted they had made a mistake, almost a year after the first ruling they said that, "we are wrong, we should not have let that blended ethanol in, to come duty-free." Imagine the impact that has had already. They said on August 2 that they made a mistake. A lot of us breathed a sigh of relief, felt that we had won the battle. We went back to our districts for the August break to tell the farmers that the domestic ethanol industry has a chance, that we had won that battle. We were all very pleased with that result.

Then the other shoe dropped.

On August 26, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Baker, announced that because some companies had made corporate decisions in reliance on the earlier ruling which had been viewed as an incorrect ruling, but in reliance on that ruling that he was going to open up again the possibility for Brazilian exporters who had signed contracts before August 2 of this year to ship to the United States duty-free. Therein lies the problem and the reason that we have met here this evening.

□ 2000

Because the impact of this decision is one which touches every single American citizen. Prior to Secretary Baker extending until November 2 the opportunity for the Brazilians to export, duty-free, our Secretary of Agriculture, a member of the same cabinet as Secretary Baker, sent him a letter urging him not to open the market.

Unfortunately, on August 26, Secretary Baker made that decision, and our subsequent investigation has disclosed that the Brazilians are now in a position where they can export up to 500 million gallons of ethanol, blended ethanol, into the United States duty-free before November 1, 500 million gallons. Almost 1 year's production of America's domestic ethanol industry can come in duty-free in 60 days.

What does it mean? The significance is the fact that we will lose first $300 million we could have collected in duties. You heard the special order before; the concern about the budget deficit. Ladies and gentlemen, as we were in our districts during our work period, the Treasury Department made a decision that could deny the U.S. Treasury $300 million that could be applied to reduce our deficit or to spend on worthwhile programs to help American citizens.

This was not a decision which was made by Congress; it was a decision made by the administration, an administration that has said from the beginning they are committed to reducing Federal spending. They cost us $300 million; up to that amount, with that decision.

So what happens if we import 500 million gallons of ethanol? We will at least take 200 million bushels of American corn off the market that otherwise would have been used for the production of ethanol. When you take 200 million bushels of corn off the market that is not being produced into ethanol, what does it do to the price of corn? It lowers it, and the national corn growers tell us that it lowers it by 15 cents a bushel, or a net loss to American farmers of $1.2 billion in income by this decision by our Treasury; $1.2 billion lost farm income.

The Treasury has lost $300 million; the farmers of America have lost $1.2 billion; there are a lot of smiling faces among Brazilian exporters, making millions of dollars for every tanker that they bring in duty-free, and now what will happen to the 200 million bushels of corn? Our Government will have to buy it. We will have to buy the corn that could have been produced into ethanol at an expense to our Treasury, a significant expense, for the purchase and storage of the surplus of corn which we already have.

As we debate the farm bill, we are trying to find ways to reduce Government spending on farming, while the Department of the Treasury has found a way of increasing the cost of our farm programs.

Several colleagues have joined me in asking for an investigation of this situation. We want to know who the people are and the companies are who will profit from this decision. We would like to know what motivated the administration and the Department of the Treasury to make this decision at a time when it clearly hurts American citizens across the country; in particular our farmers.

It hurts the people working in the domestic ethanol industry, and I will confess that I stand before you today with a parochial interest; I represent Decatur, IL, a town that has been hard hit by this recession; a town of high unemployment; a town that is trying to come back, and one of our major industries is ethanol; and this decision by my Government and your Government may easily cost us jobs in Decatur, IL.

Certainly people will go to work in Brazil to produce the ethanol, but they will do it at the expense of American citizens.

I have asked for an investigation because it is clear to me that the Department of the Treasury has violated our clear statutory intent to charge the 60 cents duty. It is also clear to me that when they opened it up for 90 days, they frankly opened the door to whatever the Brazilians want to send to this country.

I would also like to have it clarified as to what is the role of the U.S. Ambassador to Brazil? If he represents our country, why is he looking for ways to take money out of our Treasury? Why is he fighting for the Brazilians instead of fighting for the American citizens and companies that are affected by this decision?

Therein lies the real concern. Is this administration serving the American people, the American farmer, and the American worker? Are they truly concerned about trade issues, when on one hand the President of the United States says that he is going to take punitive action against Brazil because they will not allow us to send American computers in, and yet on the other hand reaches a decision which takes so many American jobs away, to the benefit of the Brazilians.

My colleague from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] said earlier that the Secretary of the Treasury reminded him of contract sanctity; and those of us from farming areas are certainly sensitive to that particular element.

Contract sanctity basically says you are going to keep your word, if you enter into a contract, you are going to follow through, whether it is the United States selling grain abroad, or wherever it might be, and I suppose the Treasury Secretary is saying that if the Brazilian exporters entered into a contract to send ethanol to the United States that we should be in some way cognizant of the fact that that contract exists and respect it.

But there is another sanctity here; there is the sanctity of the law, the sanctity of the law in the United States that imposes this duty, and I wonder if the decision of the Department of the Treasury violates that sanctity.

I wonder, too, if this administration, in making this decision, has considered the impact on Decatur, IL, on Pekin, IL, on the people across this country.

We face many tough decisions in the trade area. We face many tough decisions when it comes to farming. The American farmers can never cope with the weather if the conditions go bad; they cannot control it. They can hardly cope with foreign policy and wars overseas and how it affects the demands for their product.

But little did we know in the farming areas of America that we would have to do battle with our own Government to help farm income in the United States. This battle will continue; in requesting an investigation from the House Ways and Means Committee, in also asking my colleagues to join me, in letters to Secretary Baker concerning this decision; in letters to Secretary Shultz concerning our Ambassador.

We have just begun to fight on this battle, and it is one that we have to continue for the benefit of our farmers and the people working in the ethanol industry across the United States.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentlemen from Iowa and Illinois, Mr. LEACH and Mr. DURBIN, for their leadership on the important issue of grain ethanol production and use in the United States. I want to particularly commend them for arranging this forum to specifically discuss the issue of Brazilian ethanol imports.

Many of the facts regarding this situation have already been presented. The delay in imposing the 60-cent-per-gallon duty on Brazilian blended ethanol imports could clearly cause a major disruption in domestic ethanol production, further contributing to the excess supply of corn in this country. It is estimated that the price of corn may drop by 15 cents per bushel as a result of this inordinate delay.

Let's contemplate the economic consequences of such an action. Not even considering the effect of this action on the prices of other commodities, the 15-cent price reduction will reduce the value of our oncoming record corn crop by $1¼ billion. The U.S. Treasury could lose as much as $300 million in foregone import duties on the foreign-made ethanol. Undoubtedly, more Federal outlays will be incurred to stockpile the estimated 200 million bushels of corn that will need to be warehoused, because they will not be used in ethanol production.

We are all aware that our colleagues on the Agriculture Committee have approved their version of the 1985 farm bill. We also are aware that one of the biggest struggles in the committee debate was to contain budgetary costs, while enhancing export competitiveness and protecting farmer income. It appears that the current version of the bill at least makes a substantial effort in this direction.

In view of the tight budgetary constraints faced by our Agriculture Committee colleagues and the worst economic circumstances that our farmers have faced in half a century, it only makes sense that these imports, which basically subvert the congressional intent behind our ethanol import duties, be subjected to these duties as soon as possible. I join my colleagues in calling for immediate action to place the full 60-cent-per-gallon duty on all imported ethanol, whether blended or not.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of these efforts, and to state again my full support for the American ethanol industry.

As we well know, all of agriculture is at a critical juncture. Export markets are shrinking while production potential continues to expand. In recognition of this reality, efforts are underway in my district to develop new markets to make greater use of our abundant corn harvests, and to do so right here at home. Corn growers in Minnesota have taken the lead in promoting the use of ethanol in gasoline since the 1970's. By working together with the State and Federal Government, they have successfully built a market where none existed before.

I believe a great opportunity exists to further expand on their efforts with the phase-down in lead ordered by the Environmental Protection Agency. I would hope our Government would do everything in its power to continue to expand the market for renewable fuels.

Some inside and out of the U.S. Government have suggested it would be good to allow Brazil to use ethanol sales for servicing its growing international debt. To those so concerned, I hope they will show an equal concern for our efforts in the House to help U.S. farmers obtain markets and a price to meet their debt. One way to do that will be to expand production of ethanol here at home.

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to action being taken by the U.S. Customs Service and the Treasury Department that could have disastrous effects on the American farmer, the American ethanol industry, and on the United States' efforts to become independent of foreign energy sources.

In 1980, Congress imposed a duty on ethyl alcohol imports to promote the development of the domestic ethyl alcohol industry and reduce American dependency on imported petroleum. The U.S. Customs Service, in its discretion, determined that ethyl alcohol blends containing less than 60 percent ethyl alcohol would be exempt from the import duty.

Most recently, the U.S. Customs Service and the Treasury Department announced a decision exempting certain marketers and traders from the Custom Service's earlier decision to impose a 60-cent duty on blended ethanol imports. Under this decision, certain marketers and traders of blends of ethyl alcohol containing up to 97 percent foreign ethyl alcohol are exempted from the import duty.

This is a clear violation of the intent of Congress in the 1980 law. After our experience with the OPEC oil embargo, Congress saw the need to develop our domestic energy industry to lessen our dependence on foreign energy sources. The ethyl alcohol industry is well on its way toward becoming a major domestically produced source of energy. If we go forward with the Custom Service's decision, we can write off the past 5 years of work in becoming energy independent and say goodbye to the U.S. ethyl alcohol industry. It is a step backward, and it places the United States in a position where it is more vulnerable to those nations who control world energy supplies.

Perhaps more important in light of the current crisis in the agriculture economy is the effects this decision would have on the commodity market and farm income. It could allow up to 500 million gallons of imported ethyl alcohol into the United States duty free. This would mean that 200 million bushels of corn would not be converted into ethanol in the United States, in a year when the United States has a bumper crop of corn.

Adding 200 million bushels of corn to the U.S. market could drive down the price of corn 15 cents a bushel, according to the National Corn Growers Association. A direct result of that drop in the price of corn would be a $1.2 billion drop in American farm income, during a time when the American farmer is operating with an overhead that is already higher than the return he is able to realize.

We are also faced with an immense Federal deficit. As a result of this decision by the U.S. Customs Service, the Treasury will lose $300 million in import duties on the foreign-made ethanol. That is not to mention the added expense of purchasing and storing the surplus corn.

Furthermore, ethyl alcohol is an important part of our efforts to clean up the air we breathe. It serves as a lead-free gasoline substitute which will help move us toward our national goal of removing tetraethyl lead from gasoline. The demand for ethyl alcohol is sure to increase as the Environmental Protection Agency continues to implement its lead phaseout plan, so why not keep our domestic industry on its feet long enough to become suppliers for this new demand?

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I believe the U.S. Customs Service should reconsider its decision on this matter. This is simply not the right time to be placing more burdens on the American farmer, the American ethanol industry, or the Federal deficit for the purpose of promoting foreign industries.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I strongly object to the August 26 decision to exempt ethanol imports from the duty Congress imposed in 1980. This is another bleak example of how the administration victimizes farmers with a policy that is shortsighted and contradictory.

The ethanol industry has great potential to help us deal with the problems of huge commodity surpluses. Even with the current oil glut, ethanol is a competitive product in the energy market. As the EPA moves to phase out lead in gasoline, ethanol's role as an octane booster in fuel will become even more important. Ethanol can play a key role in the future of both our agriculture and energy industries.

Ethanol is a fledgling industry, however, and the one thing that can surely ruin it is an inconsistent Federal policy. Businesses can't survive when the rules of the game are constantly being changed. We have an ethanol plant in the district I represent, and from talking with the people at that plant, I know that they need a Federal policy they can count on if their business is going to survive.

This decision is the most recent example of a contradictory Federal farm policy that has been disastrous for rural America. The Government told farmers to plant fencepost to fencepost and then cut off their markets with embargoes. They've laid the groundwork to develop a domestic ethanol industry, and now they're helping foreign countries deal a crippling blow to that industry. It's time the administration united behind a coherent and farsighted policy that the agricultural economy can depend upon. The duty on ethanol must be reimposed immediately.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman for taking the time to bring this vital issue to the floor of the House. Many farmers in my district will be adversely affected by this policy. They, as well as I, are glad to see that there are others in this body who will speak up for farmers * * * America's backbone. And, as we in this body know, the strength of that backbone is being severely tested with this policy and many others embraced by this administration.

This unwarranted policy on ethanol places thousands of corn farmers in my district and throughout the Midwest in financial jeopardy. And why? So that a few marketers and traders can make millions on foreign-made ethanol. The farmers in my district have suffered enough under this administration without piling on this insensitive policy.

Just look at the numbers: 200 million bushels of corn will not be converted into ethanol in this country under this policy; the price of corn will drop 15 cents a bushel under this policy; $1.2 billion in farm income will be lost under this policy; and the U.S. Treasury will lose $300 million it otherwise would have collected in import duties.

The farmers in the Ninth District of Missouri can't afford 15 cents less for a bushel of corn; my farmers can't afford fewer sales. And why should they, especially at the benefit to imports.

This is bad policy. The administration has made another mistake and those to suffer will be the farmers of America.

CUYAHOGA VALLEY NATIONAL RECREATION AREA CELEBRATES 10TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area [CVNRA] was authorized by Congress in December, 1974 and established as an unit of the National Park System in June, 1975. This past weekend, the CVNRA set aside time to commemorate its 10th anniversary at an event-packed birthday party attended by thousands of its neighbors.

For all the people involved in day-to-day activities of the park, the 10th anniversary was a good time to stop and reflect on just how far we've come in the CVNRA. In fact, work to preserve the unspoiled lands between Akron and Cleveland started in 1962—well before Congress acted—with the founding of the organization which would come to be called the Cuyahoga Valley Association. The association was instrumental in focusing the public's attention on the fast-encroaching urban sprawl and the need to preserve the valley's unique historic, scenic, and natural resources. Without this grassroots support and the vision of such tireless supporter as the late Jim Jackson, we might not have been able to establish this park.

In 1975, the late Bill Birdsell, the first superintendent of the CVNRA, was faced with the enormous challenge of physically piecing a park together where only a handful of the lands destined for Federal ownership were owned by the Park Service. Now, 10 years later, most of the land needed for visitor purposes has been acquired, and the CVNRA is moving forward in other important directions under the leadership of its present superintendent, Lewis Albert. Superintendent Albert has been responsible for the explosion in visitation and development activities in the park since he assumed his position in 1980. Through initiatives including start-up construction of a comprehensive trail system; and program of leasing of historic structures, many of which will be open to the public; and excellent interpretative programs such as the National Folk Festival, and CVNRA is reaching out to ever-increasing numbers of visitors who can enjoy the many, varied recreational opportunities available. In 1984, well over 1 million visitors came to the CVNRA. With the continued assistance of Congressman RALPH REGULA, who with our former colleague, Charles Varrik, was an original author of the CVNRA legislation, the next 10 years will certainly see continued development of the CVNRA resources and further increases in visitation by people throughout Ohio and beyond.

One of the best reviews of the first 10 years of the CVNRA was an article by Sue Klein appearing in the Bath Country Journal. The writer was long associated with the Cuyahoga Valley Association and provides an excellent perspective on the progress made so far and many of the people, in addition to those I mentioned above, who have made it all possible. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the article be printed in its entirety in the RECORD:

PROGRESS IN THE CVNRA IN 10 YEARS? IT'S BEGINNING TO SHOW!

It's been 10 years since the first Superintendent, Bill Birdsell set up shop on Rt. 303 in an old home. Those first months he had no staff, no budget and no land. He mowed his own lawn, washed his own windows and borrowed a card table and chair from the Holiday Inn. His first title was actually "project manager".

In comparison, today there are 23 rangers, a maintenance staff of 30, 17 interpretive staff and with many other personnel, the total number of employees is 87. Today's C.V.N.R.A. has an operating budget of close to $3 million. 80 percent of the 19,000 acrea scheduled for federal protection has been accomplished. 14,746 has been acquired for a total cost of $85,179,500.

But what real changes have occurred down in the Valley as a result of the C.V.N.R.A.? The list goes on ad infinitum. But a sampling of a few projects gives one a feeling for the complexity of creating a park in urban, industrial northeast Ohio.

FIRST THE GROUNDWORK WAS LAID

Much research and cataloging, structure removal and restoration of environmentally damaged areas was needed. Mapping and planning had to be done before new tangible development open to the public could be accomplished.

Under research, inventories and studies were done in such areas as oil and gas wells on park lands, park animals, erosion and siltation, historic structures reports, archeological surveys, 100 oral histories and more.

Environmental restoration efforts have taken many directions. 500 structures were removed from the C.V.N.R.A. Many were removed intact or as salvage by private citizens. For example, the Auto Auction Yard on Station Road was removed from beneath the Rt. 82 bridge. Approximatley 1,000,000 tires were removed from a dump on the floodplains of the river. Acquisition and removal of a garage and dump site resulted in restoration of the area to a natural condition as a beaver marsh.

Maps of soils limitations, utilities and watersheds, (to name a few) had to be produced.

Major "plans" had to be researched and completed including a General Management Plan, a Transportation Plan, a Land Protections Plan, a Pond Management Plan (there are 100 ponds in the C.V.N.R.A.) along with plans for each of the many individual projects within the park.

NEW DEVELOPMENT AND NEW PROGRAMS

Since 1979 the park has offered interpretive and visitor services. This staff, now numbering 17, staffs the 2 visitor centers (Canal Road in the north and Happy Days Visitor Center on Rt. 303) and conducts the interpretive programs. The visitor centers offer many books and educational material relating to the park.

A look at their list of year round interpretive programs reveals a full schedule catering to many interests (stars, plants, animals, other parks, recreational activities, etc.). Weekends sometimes have as many as 10 programs scheduled!

In addition many special events like the Folk Festival have been a part of the yearly program.

The historical restoration and the development and construction of visitor use facilities have just begun. Major work has been done at Virginia Kendall (which the state of Ohio gave to the C.V.N.R.A.), the Jaite Headquarters, Oak Hill Day Use Area, the Stanford Farm, the Earthlore Environmental Education Campus and the lock tender's house on the canal.

Jaite is the historic company town now being used as park headquarters. Oak Hill is an area on Oak Hill Road with lakes for fishing and hiking. The Stanford house is an historic structure that will be opened soon as a youth hostel. Earthlore is made up of three environmental centers on Oak Hill Road. Besides the educational opportunities, there are overnight facilities available to students. The historically significant lock tender's house will soon serve as a canal museum and the visitor's center for the north end.

Historic preservation is an important part of the park's development. Of the 250 structures identified as potentials for the National Register of Historic Places, 75 are now owned by the park. Because the park can't use and restore all of these historically significant structures, an Historic Leasing Program has begun. Bed-and-breakfasts, a youth hostel (these two buildings are ready now) and some other private ventures compatible with the goals of the park will use these historic buildings in the very near future.

Over the past 10 years the development of a volunteer program has been a major accomplishment. Many citizens have given volunteer hours to the park. Last year alone, 507 V.I.P.'s (Volunteers in the Park) gave time. Of these, 150 volunteer their time on a long term basis.

One of the most recent park additions is the many signs that identify the park's boundaries along the access road. People are now more aware than ever of the fact that there really is a park down there.

Near and dear to the hearts of many locals is the Everett Road Covered Bridge. Work began on its restoration (for non-motorized traffic only) in July. Along with the bridge, major restoration and stabilization is now being done on the village of Everett (corner of Everett and Riverview). This will be used as an artist colony in the near future. Brandywine Falls is the newest point of interest. It just recently opened to the public for viewing, hiking and picnicking.

The C.V.N.R.A. has come along way since Bill Birdsell set up shop with a borrowed card table 10 years ago. The park administrative officers in the historic Jaite village with its full staff and computers is but one example of progress.

Park Superintendent, Lewis Albert, says:

"Now that many of the behind-the-scene things have been completed in the first ten years, the park's second decade should see much more actual physical development—including natural and historic resource preservation, as well as visitor use developments for recreation and education. We are very confident and excited about the C.V.N.R.A. in the next 10 years."

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT RULES FOR CONSUMERS—BLOCKS UNFAIR BAD CHECK FEES

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, the California Supreme Court ruled recently that States retain the power to stop national banks from charging unconscionable rates for bad checks.

In expressing the court's decision, Justice Allen Broussard said banks are bound by a duty of good faith and fair dealing in setting their fees. The court's ruling, based on a 1979 California statute dealing with unconscionable provisions in a contract, has important implications for banks, other States, and the Comptroller of the Currency.

In 1983, former comptroller of the currency C.T. Conover issued a ruling shortly before presentation of arguments in the California suit against Crocker National Bank stating that national banks can set whatever fees they choose irrespective of State provisions to the contrary. This clearly anticonsumer ruling by the Comptroller was unanimously rejected by the California Supreme Court.

Absent action at the Federal level, some States are moving forward with progressive legislation to make banking responsive to consumer's needs. At issue is whether Federal regulators will allow national banks, chartered by the Federal Government, to ignore proconsumer State statutes.

In recent years, fees charged by banks and other depository institutions for bad checks and basic banking services have generally risen dramatically. In a growing number of cases, the charges exceed processing cost to the point where they are punitive beyond reason.

To ensure that basic banking services are available to all consumers, I have introduced the Financial Services Access Act (H.R. 2011) to create limited transaction, service free accounts.

The decision by the California Supreme Court is an important victory for consumers, but it should not end there. The comptroller of the Currency, as the regulator of national banks, should close regulatory loopholes that allow national banks to circumvent State statutes to the detriment of consumers or work with Congress to enact strong proconsumer legislation to cover the pricing practices of national banks.

A REPORT ON SOVIET JEWRY

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, last month, my colleague and friend from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] and I traveled to the Soviet Union to meet with Soviet refusenik families in Moscow and Leningrad. Our trip, which was sponsored by the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews, was an enlightening and enriching experience, and I will not soon forget the many courageous men, women, and children that we were able to meet.

This afternoon, the Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East and the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations held a joint subcommittee hearing on religious persecution in the Soviet Union. As a member of both subcommittees, I was delighted that we were able to devote ourselves to this important subject which influences so many lives in the Soviet Union and, indeed, throughout the world.

I insert my remarks for the hearing in the RECORD following my statement:

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

Mr. Chairman: I want to commend the Subcommittees for scheduling hearings on the important subject of religious persecution in the Soviet Union. Today's hearing will help call attention to the plight of hundreds of thousands of Jews living in the Soviet Union who are denied basic human rights, including the right to worship and exercise their religious and cultural traditions. In future hearings, I hope the subcommittees will have an opportunity to examine the Soviet Union's policies against other religions and their members. The persecution of Baptists, Adventists, Jehovah's Witnesses and Orthodox and Roman Catholics is not only widespread, but in many cases is justified in the Soviet constitution and the penal code. The abuses have been well documented by human rights organizations here in America and throughout Western Europe. The incidents have ranged from defamation in the press with no right to reply, to discrimination in employment, housing, education and public life based solely on the religious beliefs expressed by Soviet citizens. These hearings provide an important forum for the dissemination of the information we have on religious persecution in the U.S.S.R. and will, I hope, send a clear message to Soviet Authorities, some of whom we may suppose are in this hearing room at this moment, that the House of Representatives intends to speak clearly and consistently for those Soviet citizens who are denied religious freedom and basic human rights.

Mr. Chairman, during the month of August, I travelled to the Soviet Union with my colleague Mr. Levin to meet and talk with Soviet dissidents and refusenik families. Our trip was sponsored by the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews, and I am particularly pleased that the Union's president, Morey Shapira, is scheduled today as a witness. He and his organization are making a real contribution in the effort to free Soviet Jewry and bring about a change in the Soviet Union's policies of religious repression.

My trip to the Soviet Union was the first visit I have made behind the Iron Curtain, and I cannot adequately express how moved I was by the experience. Of course, during my stay in Moscow and Leningrad, Congressman Levin and I, and our wives, had an opportunity to see the famous sights that are an important part of any trip overseas. We walked through Red Square and saw Lenin's tomb. We visited the War Memorials and passed through the Winter Palace. We admired paintings in the Hermitage and marveled at a Russian opera company.

Yet the most emotional moments of our stay in the Soviet Union did not occur in the hallways of a palace or within the great open space of an opera house. The most emotional moments, the moments that have produced memories that I will remember throughout my life, came in private homes, humble homes, of Soviet citizens who welcomed us in and shared what little they had in a spirit of warm hospitality. The courage and determination of Natasha Khasin, Lev Bronshtein, Lev and Elizaveta Shapiro, and many other refuseniks, were the highlight that I will long cherish. These brave people, who have suffered enormous hardships because of their beliefs, gave us their time, their thoughts, and their hopes. They long to leave the oppression of the Soviet Union, to live in their homeland of Israel, to be near the family and friends who have already gone.

For Jews in the Soviet Union, 1985 is a year of harsh oppression, consisting of increased violence, harassment and a renewed campaign of officially sanctioned anti-Semitism. In addition, the small trickle of emigration from the U.S.S.R. has become even smaller; emigration has reached its lowest point in over a decade. In 1984, only 896 Soviet Jews were allowed to leave, compared with over 51,000 only five years ago. More than 400,000 have received letters of invitation from Israel, in accordance with regulations designed by the Soviet bureaucracy to discourage emigration. Yet the Soviet government would have us believe that all Jews who wish to emigrate have already left.

Life for Soviet refuseniks consists of severe economic and social hardship. To file for emigration often means the loss of one's job, one's friends, and often the hope of a quality education for one's children. In many cases, examples of vilification in the media and by public officials add to the difficulties faced by those who seek to leave the Soviet Union. One refusenik I met, Lev Shapiro, was the victim of a clearly orchestrated campaign of public harassment in May of 1970, when a Leningrad newspaper specifically targeted him for slanderous attacks.

The situation in the Soviet Union for all Jews is tenuous. In the last year, as members of the subcommittees are aware, the Soviet government has stepped up its continuing campaign to eliminate the persistence of Jewish culture from Soviet society. Several teachers of Hebrew have been arrested, prosecuted and jailed, often on trumped-up charges linking the use of drugs in religious rituals. These are not isolated incidents. They are a blatant attempt by the authorities to eliminate Jewish consciousness and distance Soviet Jews from their fellowship with world Jewry.

Another related example for this orchestrated attempt to violate the human rights of all Soviet Jews was the broadcast, less than a year ago, of a show called "Hirelings and Accomplices," over Leningrad television. The show suggested that Soviet Jews seeking to live in Israel or in the West are in some way related to an international anti-Soviet conspiracy. The program argued that Soviet Jews were being used as "pawns" in a plot inspired by "capitalists" in the West, and that many Soviet Jews are, in fact, traitors to the Soviet state. That charge, in effect, places many Soviet Jews in the category of capital criminals, subject to the death penalty solely for desiring to maintain their religious and cultural identity and to teach their children of their rich heritage.

In the face of such abuses, the Soviet refuseniks continue to persevere. The sense of dedication, the commitment to hope, the resolute optimism of so many of the people I met during my brief stay in Moscow and Leningrad came as something of a surprise. For many of them, life is trying and difficult. Yet, they refuse to give up hope, hope that one day the Soviet government will end its repressions and obey the Scriptural command to "undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppressed go free."

Those of us in the West, who have the freedoms that so many in the Soviet Union long for, have an obligation to maintain our efforts to secure their rights. The Soviet government must know that their policies are seen and they are opposed. We need to pursue every avenue possible to increase emigration and liberalize Soviet barriers to worship. We need to take every opportunity to speak to the real issue of respect for basic human rights within the Soviet Union. We need to continue to offer hope and assistance to those who suffer and are denied the opportunity to live and to worship in the land of their choice.

The Soviet refuseniks represent the power of individual courage in the face of unsurmountable obstacles. Their vision, strength and dedication are an inspiration to all who struggle against enormous odds anywhere on earth. I know that many members of the House participate in efforts to secure the release of refusenik families throughout the Soviet Union. Through statements on the floor and letters to Soviet officials, members have let their commitment be known. The refuseniks I met and spoke with were unanimous in their appreciation of these efforts, and they strongly supported continuation of them. They see us as a source of strength for them, their knowledge that we have not forgotten them sustains them in their struggle and comforts them in the hours of despair. While few believed that the new leadership in the Kremlin would be any different than the hard-line leadership in the past, many expressed a sense of optimism that some positive change might come about as a result of the coming summit meeting in Geneva. I know that all of us share in that hope.

Next week, millions of Jews throughout the world will celebrate the holiday of Rosh Hashanah, the beginning of a new year. Yet, Jews in the Soviet Union who celebrate the holiday will do so with the knowledge that the Hebrew they use is regarded as subversive and the faith they express may cost what little freedoms they currently enjoy. These hearings today can make a substantial contribution to a greater understanding of the difficulties faced by refusenik families in the U.S.S.R. One can only hope that the years of struggle and sacrifice that they have endured will soon come to an end.

When first applying for exit permits, the dream of thousands of Soviet refuseniks was Bashanah Habaah B'Yirushalayim, "Next year in Jerusalem." Today, their supporters and friends in the West, with continued concern for their safety and security, pray with them, Bashanah Hazot B'Yirushalayim, "This year in Jerusalem."

FAMILY STRESS AND THE FARM CRISIS

HON. VIN WEBER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, as we discuss farm policy, it is important to look both at general trends and at the experience of individual farmers. We have to keep in mind the people affected by the policies we enact. A delegation of farmers from Minnesota recently visited my office, telling how low prices were devastating their farming operations. They were witnesses to the high price we will pay, in human terms, if we do not drastically change our current farm policy.

One member of that delegation, Bill Spiczka, left me an essay that his daughter, Kim, had written. Kim is a sophmore at Foley High School in Foley, MN. Her essay on family stress and the farm crisis won first prize in the Minnesota Farm Crisis Essay Contest. I would urge my colleagues to review this thoughtful piece.

FAMILY STRESS AND THE FARM CRISIS

(By Kim Spiczka)

The reports throughout the past few years of the depressed farm economy do not go unnoticed by farmers, especially not family farmers, who seem to be the ones most affected by it. This has affected me personally, as well as my parents. I can also see the adverse effect it has had on farm communities. I'd like to share my views on those topics with you.

Farm stress has had a lot of effect on my relationship with my friends. When my friends ask me to go out for a hamburger, fries and a soda, and I have to turn them down for lack of money, I feel inferior to them. When we go shopping, my friends head straight for the cash register, and all I can do is window shop. Somehow I question why I, a dedicated farm girl, should feel inferior to my peers because my parents have chosen to be stewards of the land.

Because of the frustration caused by farm stress, my relationships with my friends suffer. I, along with my parents, am stressed when the milk check won't cover the machinery repairs, the electricity bill, and insurance costs, let alone provide for what we farm kids term luxuries: a new pair of jeans or dinner at a restaurant. I get depressed after a days work of milking cows, baling hay, and fixing fence. I ask myself, "Why? What did I do it for? Did I really make any money for the family? When farm income is so low, will this make any difference?"

Our family works hard together, laughs and cries with one another, and prays alike that God will protect his stewards. We also share the stress most family farmers are experiencing today. I can see how this causes a problem for my mom because she has the added stress of being a wife, mother, housewife and a family farmer alongside my dad. I am the oldest child at home, and I do a lot of work on the farm, but so does my mom! I read of a study by the Cornell University in New York, which found that when things are going well on the farm, the marital satisfaction is higher than in marriages off the farm. However, when pressures mount and stress rises, more problems are caused for married farm women than for those married women who don't live on the farm. The study pointed out that the biggest factor of stress for farm women is role conflict in having to play all the roles the farm woman has to play. Also, in the May/June edition of Fertilizer Progress, stress is said to be caused by worry, anger, frustration and fatigue. These all are things faced by my parents all the time on the farm. Not only that, the article went on to explain that when stress is increased, the bodies immunity to diseases is much lower, making farmers more susceptible to disease. Also pointed out in the article, the major cause of heart disease is emotional stress. High-fat diets were named as the second biggest factor in the cause of heart disease, and in the article on stress, most people under stress eat more, increasing their fat and cholesterol intake. What the farmers do have going for them as far as heart disease is that only 19 percent of them smoke, as compared with 44 percent of other people, and this is the third leading cause for the disease that kills 740,000 people a year. This is a clear indication on how stress does, and can, affect farmers.

Along with farmers, communities have suffered greatly because of the depressed farm economy. We all know that farmers, just the same as other people, deserve the finer things in life. The only difference is they can't afford them! When farmers can't support the business community, which depends on the farmer's business, the community does not make money. This causes small businesses to close, and then larger businesses to shut down. The January 13th news broadcast on WCCO television station in Minneapolis reported that in ten years from now, we will lose one-third of all farms, taking with them one-half of the banks, and 600 small towns in Minnesota alone. According to Minnesota State Representative Steve Wenzel, 17 families per day in Minnesota go under. The national figure is more alarming at 250 farms closing down every day.

As a direct response to the stress problems faced by farmers, people have begun programs like "Project Support," a service of the University of Minnesota Agricultural Extension department. Programs such as this one offer farmers and their families free counseling on stress management. This only goes to show that the problem has reached alarming heights.

In portraying how one farm family has been affected, and how the farm community is affected, I hope to have enlightened others as to the effect stress does, and will undoubtedly continue to have, on farm families and the farming communities.

A NEW ACTIVISM

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today an event is occurring which gives hope to those of us who have tried to reconcile the ideals of participatory democracy with the realities of the trench warfare of legislative deliberation. Being released today is preliminary agreement in principle between the environmental community and part of the agricultural chemical industry on changes to the Pesticide Regulatory Program authorized under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act [FIFRA]. The agreement was reached after months of negotiations between representatives of environmental, consumer, and labor groups and representatives of major agricultural chemical companies.

In reaching this agreement, the two sides have overcome stalemate with statesmanship. FIFRA is a complex statute, and pesticides are an emotional area of public concern, leading to a legislative logjam in which each side has been able to block the other. But each side loses in this situation: The environmental community fails to gain the increased protection that it seeks, and the agricultural chemical industry sees a frustrated public turn to State legislatures and the courts to seek redress. The negotiations have returned the solution of this issue to Congress with brightened prospects for action in the 99th Congress.

This nascent agreement is not perfect, and it is still in a conceptual stage. It does not include all of the nettlesome issues on FIFRA which have plagued us since 1978, the last time we enacted major amendments to the act. Numerous interest groups have not been involved in this process and may have problems with some of the points of this agreement.

All of us must exercise caution in either praising too loudly or condemning prematurely the terms of this agreement, lest it fall apart. In this negotiating process there is a glimmer of hope for the ultimate solution to this and other protracted legislative struggles. It is the process which is as important as the eventual product. I know of no other area where negotiations such as these have occurred, and the participants, who have labored long and hard, are to be congratulated.

We need to encourage this new example of responsible activism. We need to support other efforts, such as the Environmental Protection Agency's initiatives to develop regulations through negotiations. We need to encourage the spread of this enlightened approach to other areas of legislation.

In conclusion, I would like to insert an excerpt of a recent speech given by Mr. Louis Fernandez, chairman of the board for Monsanto. He more eloquently makes the case for this process than I can.

[From the Chemical and Engineering News, Sept. 2, 1985]

ACTIVISM

(Louis Fernandez is chairman of the board of Monsanto. He spoke earlier this summer before the National Petroleum Refiners Association. The following are excerpts from his text)

When a business person such as myself sends a message to government these days, it is usually a variation on the theme, "get off our backs." While there is a certain satisfaction in taking that position, I fear that we in business no longer have that luxury. Government already is involved in how we run our affairs, and that involvement will not, and perhaps should not, go away.

The question has long ceased being whether government will be involved, but how that involvement will manifest itself. One answer to the "how" question is by people in government adopting an "activist" legislative and regulatory role. The business community must then follow suit by actively supporting those efforts.

All of us in society can benefit from a government that actively and creatively encourages cooperation and builds consensus among the diverse groups it serves. An activist government seeks out, listens seriously to, and considers the positions of all interested parties as a matter of basic operating procedure. It doesn't wait for a concern to erupt into a crisis before taking action.

Most important, an activist government believes that, behind the masks we all wear proclaiming our allegiances, be they business or environmental or government or whatever, are people who share fundamental values and goals for our country and our world. The most important thing an activist government can do is modify the current rigid and cumbersome regulatory and legislative structure under which we all suffer, and for which we all must share the blame.

If the public must react to a fait accompli, whether before a Congressional committee or regulatory review board, one cannot help but be negative. It is unreasonable to think that any outside party would agree entirely with a proposal unless it was the author. Something interesting happens, however, when the public gets to discuss an issue prior to the formulation of policy. Participation becomes positive. We can make suggestions, we can review and discuss various points of view, and we can agree to compromises that will be reflected in the final bill or regulation.

The Environmental Protection Agency has been experimenting with this activist approach: bringing interested parties into the process early, and it deserves credit—and support. We in industry, environmental, and consumer groups benefit because EPA better understands our points of view. EPA benefits because it can exploit our expertise.

My proposal for an activist government is not something I offer lightly, but, over the past two years, I have seen the cooperative approach to solving environmental problems work. I believe in the process. I also believe that our society has already paid the price of seemingly never-ending confrontation, and that it is time to find a better way.

For government, an activist approach offers the opportunity to anticipate and respond to issues before they become controversies. For the business community, an activist approach may result in laws and regulations that are more practical, and more tied to fact and science rather than emotion. We may even see fewer regulations that constrain our ability to conduct business but offer little benefit to society.

For the public, an activist approach by their government may help restore faith in that very large federal institution that so affects our lives. When government acts in ways that reflect the opinions of its constituents, then it is truly fulfilling the obligations it has assumed.

MR. JOSEPH R. BOLKER'S THOUGHTS ON SECOND HOME MORTGAGE INTEREST DEDUCTIONS

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, recently I received correspondence from Mr. Joseph R. Bolker, president of Brighton International in Los Angeles, which discusses that section of the President's tax reform plan—that is, Treasury II—relating to mortgage interest deductions on second homes.

Mr. Bolker, who is one of California's most respected and successful builders/real estate developers, makes, what I believe, a well thought out argument on why the President's plan could be a serious blow to the economy. Mr. Bolker points out that by simply having this proposal on the table, a construction slowdown has already occurred in many southern California communities and should it ever become law, we could expect the middle class to be hit the hardest and the Tax Code to become even more complex.

The text of Mr. Bolker's letter follows. I urge my colleagues to review it.

BRIGHTON INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT CORP.,
Los Angeles, CA, August 27, 1985.

Re: Second home interest deduction proposal.

Congressman GLENN M. ANDERSON,
32 District, Long Beach Boulevard, Long Beach, CA

DEAR GLENN: As a builder/developer, my experience dictates that the provisions of the above stated proposal under the President's tax plan will seriously impair second home construction and the service economies associated with it. Just from having the proposal on the table, I have witnessed a slowdown in our area.

This proposal is unfair and unsound economically. The typical second home purchaser is a middle class family, not the ultrarich, as some might think. The propsal in reality, benefits the rich and throws the burden on the middle class individuals who as a practice must borrow to make major purchases. The wealthy will merely continue to write off against extensive investment income and effectively avoid any limitation.

In addition to being unfair and furthering complexity, limiting the tax deduction does not make economic sense. Second homes are a major component of the economic base for many of our resort communities. In my estimation, this provision will harm those communities and put people out of work for no real gain in tax reform.

I hope that you will pay close attention to this portion of the President's tax package and fight for the deletion of second home mortgage interest limits in future legislation. Thank you for your attention to my comments.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH R. BOLKER,
President.

NATIONAL CHILD SAFETY WEEK

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Child Safety Week. We have our colleague, Representative LEWIS, to thank for introducing this legislation and guiding it through the Congress.

As legislators, we are all aware of the need to heighten awareness to the problem of inadequate child safety. We must see to it that our constituencies are aware of how they can actively reduce the numbers of children which disappear from their homes every year. Americans must know how to promote child safety and how to look for signs that a child is existing in an unsafe environment.

Although much progress has been made in recent years in bringing the incidence of runaways, abused children and the problems of child safety generally to the attention of the American public, it is essential that we do everything possible to encourage the growing momentum toward improving the safety of every child in this country.

Again, I commend Representative LEWIS for his introduction of this resolution and I look forward to this week being a productive one in educating the American people in this critical area.

BINARY NERVE GAS WEAPONS AND THE DANGER OF PROLIFERATION

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, binary nerve gas weapons increase the risk of chemical weapons proliferation and the risk of their use by terrorists. This has been one of the main reasons why Congress has turned down the Reagan administration's request to produce this new generation of lethal chemical weapons in each of the past 3 years. A decision now to modernize our chemical arsenal with this new generation of binary nerve gas weapons would undermine many of the military, technical, political, psychological, and moral constraints which have inhibited proliferation.

In 1984 I requested a Congressional Research Service [CRS] study which exposed the adverse proliferation implications of producing binary chemical weapons. The CRS study also underlined the urgency of pursuing a comprehensive and verifiable world ban on new chemical weapon production. The study led me to conclude that the United States should be working hard to secure such a ban rather than breaking our own moratorium on production and launching a new generation of chemical weapons.

The CRS study identifies a number of technical features about binary weapons that would increase the likelihood of chemical weapons proliferation in other countries. These technical features include: First, binary chemical weapons are technically easier to produce than current unitary chemical weapons; second, the production of binary weapons require lower investments of capital, skilled, labor, and expertise than current unitary chemical weapons; and third, the raw materials needed to produce binary weapons are commercially available throughout the world.

Finally, as to the potential use of chemical weapons by terrorists, the CRS study observes that this frightening possibility would be encouraged by a U.S. decision to produce binary weapons. The report stated that:

A move by the U.S. or any other state to produce, stockpile and deploy binary nerve gas weapons . . . would probably reduce the political and motivational factors inhibiting a terrorist decision to seek such weapons . . . In a world in which unitary or binary chemical weapons become integral components of states' military programs, the risks of chemical terrorism could be expected to increase.

A recent article by Don Oberdorfer in the Washington Post on September 9, 1985, mentions the CRS study and points to a number of troubling proliferation developments. I want to share this article with my colleagues since I think it sketches accurately many of the proliferation risks associated with chemical weapons. I also hope that my colleagues will conclude as I have that funding production of new binary nerve gas weapons is extremely inadvisable particularly because of the new risks of chemical weapons proliferation that binary weapons present. The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 9, 1985]

CHEMICAL ARMS CURBS ARE SOUGHT—OFFICIALS ALARMED BY INCREASING USE OF BANNED WEAPONS

(By Don Oberdorfer)

The dirty yellow cloud of poisonous gas has supplanted the atom's mushroom cloud as a symbol of the most pressing proliferation danger facing the world, in the view of government officials from the United States and several other countries.

While no nation has joined the A-bomb club since India conducted a nuclear test in 1974, the deadly chemicals known as "the poor man's atomic bomb" have been repeatedly used in warfare in the 1980s, and in ways that experts fear may promote their further use.

In an effort to stem the tide, officials and chemical specialists from the United States and chemically advanced Western European and Asian countries held an unpublicized meeting for several days last week in Brussels, under the leadership of Australia, to discuss ways to prevent the production and use of chemical weapons from spreading to additional countries. This was the second meeting since June of this group, whose existence is so sensitive with some governments that it has not been given a name.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said earlier this year that the United States thinks that at least 13 nations have chemical weapons, compared with five in 1963, and that additional nations are trying to get them.

"The sad fact," Shultz said, "is that a half century of widely accepted international restraint on the use or development of chemical weapons is in danger of breaking down."

Other U.S. officials have said that at least 15 countries belong to the "chemical weapons club."

"Proliferation is an enormous problem," said a senior State Department official who has been deeply involved in low-key U.S. efforts to limit them. "I'm afraid that the number [of chemical weapons nations] could double in the next decade."

Since Iraq used mustard gas and nerve gas against Iranian troops in early 1984 and again this year, concern has mounted, generating U.S. interagency studies, chemical-export controls and unpublicized international meetings with American allies to consider joint actions.

The most acute worry is that a future Iranian offensive will trigger another Iraqi poison gas attack and that, in retaliation, major Iranian gas attacks will be launched on the battlefield or against civilian targets. Such an exchange would be the first time since World War I that both sides have used chemical weapons in a war.

Officials are also concerned that if Iran uses chemical weapons it might also supply poison gas to terrorist groups.

Recent U.S. and international discussions have covered such items as restricting shipments of "precursor chemicals" that could be used in chemical weapons and creating "trigger lists" of chemicals whose acquisition should set off alarms in world capitals. The antiproliferation program in the chemical-weapons field is in its infancy, however, compared with the extensive international drive to halt the spread of nuclear weapons.

"Unless we in the West and others get our act together soon to stop the spread of chemical weapons, we will pass up a good opportunity," said Kenneth L. Adelman, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. "We can possibly nip this looming threat early, before chemical weapons become as commonplace as hand grenades in Third World armies."

Prof. Joseph Nye of Harvard University, who served from 1977 to 1979 as the key U.S. negotiator in creating a "suppliers' group" of advanced nations working together against nuclear weapons proliferation, said that the drive against chemical weapons is "not even as far along" and that it faces considerably more difficult problems.

Nye said it is more difficult to obtain a broad political consensus against chemical weapons, which lack the "species threatening" dimension of atomic weapons. For example, the Soviet Union, which has cooperated in the effort to control nuclear-weapons proliferation, is considered a big part of the problem in the proliferation of chemical weapons.

Moreover, chemical weapons are much easier to manufacture—and thus more difficult to control—than nuclear weapons.

Particularly worrisome, Nye said, are growing programs here and in the Soviet Union to investigate bioengineering, especially the creation of potent new biological substances, as a weapon of war.

The fields of chemical and biological warfare are governed by separate international agreements, but are closely related. The distinction is that biological weapons are living organisms, while chemical weapons are not. Falling in a middle ground are toxins such as "yellow rain," described by the United States as a chemical byproduct of biological processes.

Mounting concern about the spread of chemical weapons in Third World nations comes as a 40-nation conference in Geneva continues to work on a new worldwide chemical weapons ban, without notable success, and as the United States appears about to resume production of nerve gas for its chemical-weapons stockpiles.

Production was halted by President Richard M. Nixon in 1969, but the Reagan administration has waged a three-year battle to restart it.

After a major fight, a House-Senate conference committee authorized resumption of poison-gas production in July, and an appropriation to supply the money is pending on Capitol Hill.

Resumed U.S. production of chemical weapons "could well promote proliferation" by other nations, said a 1984 study by the Congressional Research Service, "but if it does, it will be one factor among many doing so."

The extensive use of gas warfare in World War I generated worldwide revulsion that led to the Geneva Protocol of 1925 outlawing the use of chemical and bacteriological weapons. The protocol, signed by 106 nations, does not outlaw the development or possession of such weapons, only their use. Nonetheless, it eased fears about the weapons for most of the years since.

The Japanese reportedly used gas in Manchuria. And the Italians were said to have used it in Ethiopia in World War II. Egypt is thought to have used mustard gas against Yemen in 1963 and 1967. These attacks against unprotected troops or populations were limited in their international impact, however.

Chemical warfare drifted back into the headlines in September 1981, when the Reagan administration charged the Soviet Union with using poisonous "mycotoxins"—popularly known as "yellow rain"—in southeast Asia. Later the administration charged the Soviets with supplying traditional chemical weapons and "yellow rain" toxins that were used in Afghanistan as well as Laos and Cambodia.

The "yellow rain" charges were and are disputed by a number of private scientists, but the administration continues to reaffirm them. Last month, the State Department said that after "extensive review and analysis by independent authorities in the field as well as government experts . . . our conclusions stand. Chemical and toxin weapons have been used in southeast Asia and Afghanistan."

U.S. officials said, however, that reports suggest that use of chemical weapons and "yellow rain" in those areas has greatly diminished or stopped in the past year or two.

Whatever doubt still exists about "yellow rain," there is little doubt about Iraq's use of chemical weapons against Iranian ground troops in February to April 1984, and again this spring. In both cases, U.N. reports and other independent studies backed up the charges, and Iranian soldiers suffering from poison-gas attacks were treated at hospitals in Western Europe.

"Iraq has gotten away with the use of chemical weapons with minor costs," said Brad Roberts, an expert at the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies. He said this is likely to spur the acquisition and use of poison gas by other countries because "Third World defense planners can see that Iraq turned back a major offensive by Iran with chemical weapons" but hasn't seemed to suffer for it.

Iran has threatened to retaliate in kind. And on April 24, the State Department said Iran "has been seeking to develop a chemical-weapons capability and may now be in a position to use such a weapon." Late last month, a U.S. official familiar with the intelligence said, "Iran has the capability" to use chemical weapons. A few limited chemical attacks attributed to Iranian forces in the past, he said, apparently relied on Iraqi chemical shells captured on the battlefield.

Because chemical-warfare capabilities are shrouded in secrecy and nations rarely admit that they possess such weapons, clear-cut, well-confirmed facts are rare.

A February 1985 report in Chemical and Engineering News, which is said to reflect official information, listed four countries as confirmed possessors of chemical weapons: the United States, Soviet Union, France and Iraq.

Eleven other countries were listed as those "alleged to possess" chemical weapons: Egypt, Syria, Libya, Israel, Ethiopia, Thailand, Burma, China, Taiwan, North Korea and Vietnam.

A September 1983 U.S. intelligence estimate from CIA and other sources, first made public by Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta in August 1984, gave these details:

Egypt received Soviet chemical-weapons training, indoctrination and materiel in the 1960s while it was the major Soviet client in the Middle East.

Syria has "probably the most advanced chemical-warfare capability in the Arab world" with the possible exception of Egypt. As of 1983 no Syrian production facility had been identified and there was "no need" in view of chemical agents and delivery systems reportedly flowing from the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia.

Libya met with "little success" in obtaining chemical weapons plants from Eastern or Western Europe but may possess lethal chemical agents for "experimental purposes."

Israel undertook a chemical-weapons program after capturing large amounts of Soviet-supplied equipment from its Arab foes in the 1967 and 1973 wars. Israel is thought to have "at least" nerve gas, mustard gas and riot control agents with "suitable delivery systems" and to have tested its weapons as early as 1976.

Ethiopia acquired "chemical agents, munitions and decontamination equipment" from its Soviet ally. Reports of lethal Ethiopian attacks against Eritrean insurgents are "unconfirmed," although many U.S. officials consider them credible.

Thailand, in response to a Vietnamese chemical-warfare threat, is "upgrading its capabilities" by improving its research and acquiring protective equipment from the West. U.S. officials said recently, however, they do not think that Thailand possesses offensive chemical weapons.

Burma has been seeking since at least 1981 to produce mustard gas. The Central Intelligence Agency estimated that Burma should be "self-sufficient" in chemical weapons by the spring of 1984, most likely for use against internal insurgencies.

China has a "small" offensive chemical-warefare capability. China is thought to have suffered gas attacks in a skirmish with Soviet forces in 1969 and Vietnamese forces in 1979.

Taiwan has "an aggressive, high-priority program to develop both offensive and defensive capabilities." Taiwan has produced at least mustard gas, the report said.

North Korea "reportedly stores and produces" crude chemical weaponry, but the reports are "unsubstantiated."

Vietnam's chemcial-weapons capability, with "a range of agents" in addition to "yellow rain," is reported by U.S. officials to have been "transferred" to that country by its increasingly close ally, the Soviet Union.

Soviet forces are thought to have stockpiled chemical weapons in a number of Eastern European countries, and there is controversy in the U.S intelligence community about whether these nations have their own production facilities. A West German official said his government thinks that East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Poland are producing chemical weapons.

A number of other nations, including South Korea, are reported to be interested in acquiring chemical weapons. A proposal that U.S. forces in South Korea be armed with chemical weapons—in light of reports that North Korea has them—is under study in the Pentagon.

WOMEN VIETNAM VETERANS SHOULD BE INCLUDED IN AGENT ORANGE STUDIES

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, today, I and several members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee are introducing legislation requiring the Veterans' Administration to proceed with the implementation of a study on the health effects of agent orange on women Vietnam veterans. On August 2, 78 Members of Congress sent a letter to the Cabinet Council Agent Orange Working Group urging the approval of study guidelines so that a study may proceed. Two years have lapsed since the need for a study was recognized. Still, we get the same bland promises of interest from the VA and Department of Health and Human Services but no concrete action. I submit for the RECORD the letter sent to the Agent Orange Working Group Chairman on August 2, and two responses to that letter.

I believe we have been more than patient, but enough is enough. It is unconscionable that women Vietnam veterans were not included in the initial Agent Orange studies conducted by the Centers for Disease Control. While the proposal for a women's study has been under consideration for so long, significant numbers of female Vietnam veterans, and their children, continue to suffer serious health problems. For many of these women, any study will be too little, too late. But this Government has a responsibility to those many other women who may yet be helped by such a study and who may at least be relieved of the uncertainties with which they have lived for so many years.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

The materials follow:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, August 2, 1985.

Mr. CHARLES BAKER,
Chairman, Cabinet Council, Agent Orange Working Group, Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BAKER: In February, 1984, ninety Members of Congress wrote to the Administrator of the Veterans Administration, Mr. Harry Walters, expressing their concern that women Vietnam veterans had not been included in epidemiological studies then being conducted by the Center for Disease Control. Mr. Walters responded that this was "an issue of prime concern to me" and that in September, 1983, he had "instructed my staff to investigate the possibility of studies on women veterans who served in Vietnam and their exposure to dioxin." In July, 1984, at a Hosue Veterans' Affairs Committee briefing on the CDC's ongoing Agent Orange projects, the CDC acknowledged the feasibility of a study concerning the health effects of Agent Orange on female Vietnam veterans.

Since that time, the Cabinet Council Agent Orange Working Group has been considering the development of a study on this subject. We understand that the Science Panel was not satisfied with one study protocol proposed by the CDC in April of this year. We further understand that the CDC then submitted a proposal to the Science Panel for a more limited study of women Vietnam veterans which could be, according to Mr. Walters, "accomplished more expeditiously and which should answer the same concerns with virtually comparable scientific validity."

In the last six months, several members of both the House and Senate have written to you and other parties involved with the Science Panel's deliberations to stress the urgent need to adopt a study protocol and to proceed with a study without further delay. In your response to several of these Members, you state, "The Science Panel feels that the health needs of female Vietnam veterans should receive high priority and are concerned that this should be done in the most expeditious way."

It has now been almost two years since the need to do such a study was recognized. To date, not even an outline for a study has been approved. Three major studies involving male Vietnam veterans and their exposure to Agent Orange have long been underway. We strongly feel that the health needs of women Vietnam veterans deserve the same expeditious and careful consideration.

We recognize that it takes time to develop and implement a reliable, scientific study; but much time has already elapsed. We firmly believe that it is time for the Veterans Administration, the Center for Disease Control and the Science Panel to put their many verbal expressions of support into concrete action by approving a study protocol so that implementation of that study may proceed.

Our commitment to this study continues to be strong; so, too, is our determination to effect its implementation, whether that be through the administrative process or legislative action. We appreciate your kind attention to our concerns.

Hon. MARCY KAPTUR,
House of Representatives,

DEAR MRS. KAPTUR: This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 2, 1985, urging the development and implementation of a scientific study, of the health effects of agent orange, on female Vietnam Veterans.

I have asked the Acting Assistant Secretary for Health to give your concerns prompt attention. We expect to provide you with a more thorough response in the near future.

Thank you for bringing this matter to my attention.

CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL,
Atlanta GA, August 23, 1985.

Hon. DON EDWARDS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. EDWARDS: This is in response to your letter of August 5 regarding the implementation of an investigation of the health of female Vietnam veterans.

The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) has determined that a study focusing on the health of female veterans is feasible and has prepared two draft research protocol outlines for epidemiologic studies of female veterans. These outlines have been submitted to the Chairman of the Agent Orange Working Group for review. If the research protocol outlines submitted to the Agent Orange Working Group are approved, we shall pursue a study of female veterans' health as rigorously as we are presently pursuing the epidemiologic studies of the health of male veterans.

Thank you for your continued interest in this important public health issue.

Sincerely yours,

DONALD R. HOPKINS, M.D.,
Assistant Surgeon General,
Acting Director.

H.R. 3297

To require the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration to provide for an epidemiological study of the gender-specific effect of exposure to the herbicide known as Agent Orange on female veterans

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AGENT ORANGE STUDY FOR FEMALE VETERANS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR EPIDEMIOLOGICAL STUDY.—(1) The Administrator of Veterans Affairs shall provide for the conduct of an epidemiological study of any long-term adverse gender-specific health effects in females of service in the Armed Forces of the United States in the Republic of Vietnam during the period of the Vietnam conflict as such health effects may result from exposure to—

(A) phenoxy herbicides (including the herbicide known as Agent Orange); and

(B) the class of chemicals known as the dioxins produced during the manufacture of such herbicides.

(2) In providing for such study, the Administrator may expand the scope of the study to include an evaluation of any long-term adverse gender-specific health effects in females of such service as such health effects may result from other factors involved in such service (including exposure to other herbicides, chemicals, medications, or environmental hazards or conditions).

(3) The Administrator may also include in the study an evaluation of the means of detecting and treating adverse gender-specific health effects found through the study.

(4) The Administrator shall provide for the study to be conducted through contracts or agreements with public or private agencies or persons.

(b) FUNCTIONS OF OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT.—(1) The study required by subsection (a) shall be conducted in accordance with a protocol approved by the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment.

(2) The Director shall monitor the conduct of such study in order to assure compliance with such protocol.

(3)(A) Concurrent with the approval or disapproval of any protocol under paragraph (1), the Director shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report—

(i) explaining the basis for the Director's action in approving or disapproving the protocol; and

(ii) providing the Director's conclusions regarding the scientific validity and objectivity of the protocol.

(B) If the Director has not approved such a protocol during the 180 days following the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director—

(i) shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report describing the reasons why the Director has not given such approval; and

(ii) shall submit to such committees an update report on such initial report each 60 days thereafter until such a protocol is approved.

(4) The Director shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress, at each of the times specified in the second sentence of this paragraph, a report on the Director's monitoring of the conduct of such study pursuant to paragraph (2). A report under the preceding sentence shall be submitted—

(A) before the end of the six-month period beginning on the date of the approval of the protocol by the Director;

(B) before the end of the 12-month period beginning on such date; and

(C) annually thereafter until the study is completed or terminated.

(c) DURATION OF STUDY.—The study conducted pursuant to subsection (9a) shall be continued for as long after the submission of the first report under subsection (d)(1) as the Administrator may determine reasonable in light of the possibility of developing through such study significant new information on the long-term gender-specific adverse health effects in females of exposure to dioxins.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—(1) Not later than 24 months after the date of the approval of the protocol pursuant to subsection (b)(1) and annually thereafter, the Administrator shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report containing—

(A) a description of the results thus far obtained under the study conducted pursuant to such subsection; and

(B) such comments and recommendations for administrative or legislative action, or both, as the Administrator considers appropriate in light of such results.

(2) Not later than 90 days after the submission of each report under paragraph (1), the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register, for public review and comment, a description of any action that the Administrator proposes to take with respect to programs administered by the Veterans' Administration. Each such description shall include a justification or rationale for any such action the Administration proposes to take. Any such proposal shall be based on the results described in the report under paragraph (1) and the comments and recommendations on that report and any other available pertinent information.

(3) The requirement in paragraph (1) for the submission of annual reports expires upon the submission of a report after the completion of the study under subsection (a).

(e) BUDGET ACT PROVISIONS.—(1) This section does not authorize the enactment of new budget authority for a fiscal year before fiscal year 1987.

(2) A contract to carry out the study under subsection (a) may be entered into only to the extent that—

(A) appropriated funds are available to carry out the contract; or

(B) the contract provides that the obligation of the United States to make payments under the contract is contingent upon the availability of appropriated funds for such payments.

(f) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term "gender-specific health effects in females" includes effects on female reproductive capacity, reproductive organs, and reproductive outcomes, effects on female-specific organs and tissues, and other effects unique to the physiology of females.

SHOULD WEAPONS BE TAX DEDUCTIBLE?

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to my colleagues attention an editorial from August 30, 1985, New York Times regarding the fundraising and spending efforts of some tax-exempt American organizations. The specific concern of the Times' editorial is the potential that the current conflict in Nicaragua may be turned into a war financed in part by Americans who contribute to organizations supplying the anti-Sandinista contra rebels. In one case, Ellen Garwood of Austin, TX, has contributed $65,000 to the U.S. Council for World Freedom, which in turn has used the money toward the purchase of a helicopter for the contras. I think the Times raises some interesting points on these activities, and I believe my colleagues will find it of interest.

I ask that the text of the editorial be inserted in the RECORD.

MAKING WAR THE PRIVATE WAY

An organization called the U.S. Council for World Freedom was granted Federal tax-exempt status in 1982 after its treasurer pledged that it would never provide "materiel or funds to any revolutionary, counterrevolutionary or liberation movement." This council now boasts it has raised as much as $300,000 for the "contra" rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist regime. What about the tax pledge? The council president says he didn't know about it. Besides, says the current treasurer, the fund-raising has President Reagan's backing and "the blessings of the Government."

This breezy view of the law calls to mind Richard Nixon's remark to a television interviewer: "When the President does it, that means it is not illegal." The point is not limited to tax exemption. The council's activities provoke concern over a wider danger: the Administration's willingness to privatize its diplomatic and military activities.

When private citizens make war, they violate the Constitution; it ordains that only the Federal Government can make war. Nevertheless, the White House has virtually franchised out the contra war to fringe groups and has assigned a National Security Council aide to encourage private funding of the insurgents. The effect has been to circumvent Congress, which voted last year to end U.S. funding of the contras, a ban now partly lifted. The White House insists no laws have been broken.

The most visible fund-raiser is John Singlaub, a retired general and president of the World Anti-Communist League and the U.S. Council, its American chapter. He is doubtless a patriot, but the league has attracted some peculiar freedom fighters. It has been a "gathering place for extremists, racists and anti-Semites," the Anti-Defamation League said in 1981. General Singlaub contends that this is no longer so, that former Nazi SS officers and other extremists have been purged.

The general acknowledges that he should have known about the pledge to Internal Revenue. He also says no American contributions were used to buy arms. This will come as news to Ellen Garwood of Austin, Tex., who says she gave $65,000 toward the purchase of a helicopter, which will be gallantly named "Lady Ellen."

The most obvious danger of turning Nicaragua into a private-sector war is that it violates the Constitution and risks entangling America's good name with extremist groups accountable to no one. If privatizing wars of liberation is accepted, where does the Government draw the line? By what standard can it discourage Americans from buying guns for the Irish Republican Army?

There's little evidence of Administration worry over where its zeal is already leading. Minnesota's level-headed Senator David Durenberger, chairman of the intelligence oversight committee, is worried. He plans hearings when the Senate returns Sept. 9, and it will be none too soon. Sandinista supporters are matching General Singlaub's campaign with their own, and there are plenty more foreign fights that excite Americans on one side or the other. If the White House wants war, the body it must persuade is the U.S. Congress, not the U.S. Council for World Freedom.

WHY CAN'T THE CONGRESS BALANCE THE NATION'S CHECKBOOK?

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, during the recent recess, I am certain that most Members of Congress were asked, as I was, to explain the threat that the growing deficit poses for our country. And I am sure that most of us responded, in part, by explaining how complicated the country's finances are.

But, Mr. Speaker, the complex deficit issue was greatly simplified for me recently when I received a letter from a boy scout in my district. Dax Hoxsie is from Americus, GA, and he asked me to explain something to him that he doesn't understand. Let me read a portion of his letter:

Because my parents both work, I often hear them talking about our household budget, bills, and balancing the family checkbook. I often hear, too, on television about the Nation's budget not being balanced. My question and concern is this: Why is it that the Government can continue to spend the money it does not have? Why can't the Nation's checkbook be balanced?

Mr. Speaker, Dax has asked a simple, direct question. In my opinion, this Congress has no real answer to give him. Of course, we can cloud the issue with complexities and politics. That's what we've done evertime the subject has come up.

But, if we cast aside the rhetoric and look honestly at our spending habits, can any of us offer a sound reason for spending money we don't have?

The debts we are mounting up will not be foregiven or forgotten. Eventually, the money we borrow will have to be paid back.

Unfortunately, those of us doing the borrowing won't be the ones to make the payments. Dax Hoxsie, and all those other children watching us and wondering what we're doing, will be handed the bill for our purchases.

I hope when that day comes, a few of the borrowers are still around. Then, they can answer the questions that I'm sure Dax and his generation will still be asking:

Why couldn't you stop spending money you didn't have? Why couldn't you balance the Nation's checkbook?

I hope I'm not one of those still around, Mr. Speaker, because I don't believe there is a satisfactory answer we can give our children.

HONORING MR. NORMAN HSU, U.S. POSTAL SERVICE AWARD NOMINEE

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an individual who has distinguished himself in his community.

Mr. Norman Hsu has been nominated by the Hacienda La Puente Unified School District as their entry for consideration by the U.S. Postal Service for its National Community Service Award.

Mr. Hsu a resident of Hacienda Heights, a beautiful community located in the 34th Congressional District of California, has spent many hours volunteering his time to his community.

He is a member of the Hacienda Heights Kiwanis Club, a member of the Hacienda Heights Cable TV Advisory Committee, Little League, Bobby Sox, PTA and School Boosters.

As a member of the Hacienda Area Chinese Association, he has worked to provide educational programs for the growing Asian community of Hacienda Heights. He has also been an effective liaison with the local school district and community, helping many Asian adults make a smooth transition into the American mainstream.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in congratulating Mr. Norman Hsu for being chosen as the district nominee for the National Community Service Award of the U.S. Postal Service.

HENRY HYDE: INTELLIGENCE PROBLEMS AND SOME SOLUTIONS

HON. DAN LUNGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, over the past several months, there have been a number of spy cases—both here and abroad—that raise serious questions about the Western World's ability to keep a secret. It is quite clear, for example, that both the United States and West German intelligence services have experienced damaging penetrations by agents of the Soviet Union and their Eastern Bloc surrogates.

As a consequence of these latest spy revelations, a number of suggestions have been offered by a variety of experts as to what the United States can do to tighten up its overall security and intelligence apparatus. Some of these recommendations have included legislative initiatives that must warrant immediate consideration. As we consider these proposals, I urge my colleagues to read the following speech given last fall by our distinguished colleague from Illinois, HENRY HYDE.

Although some of what he had to say has been overtaken by events, much of it is still very relevant today. Of special significance are his observations and recommendations regarding congressional oversight of the U.S. intelligence community and his critique of the Intelligence Identities Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, I, therefore, insert Mr. HYDE'S speech at this point in the RECORD:

CURRENT INTELLIGENCE PROBLEMS AND SOME SOLUTIONS

(Congressman Henry J. Hyde)

At the outset, I wish to thank you for the invitation to address this 10th annual Convention of Former Intelligence Officers. What makes this occasion especially meaningful to me is that I am an ex-naval intelligence officer officer myself. That experience, coupled with my positions on the House's Judiciary and Foreign Affairs Committees, have heightened by awareness of the need for an effective U.S. intelligence capability. This background also has made me very appreciative of the role people like you have played in maintaining that capability.

In my remarks today, I shall focus primarily on the reasons behind House Joint Resolution 633, the legislation I introduced on August 1 of this year which would create a Joint Committee on Intelligence. However, I also will discuss briefly the Intelligence Identities Protection Act—a measure Congress passed some two ago with the objective of deterring disclosures of undercover intelligence personnel.

What caused me to become concerned about Congress' current intelligence oversight arrangement was the furor last spring over the mining of the Nicaraguan harbors. That episode illustrates a problem of overwhelming importance. Specifically, one must ask how capable Congress is of practicing responsible congressional oversight of intelligence activities, once those activities are viewed as an integral part of a foreign policy that has become controversial and the subject of partisan debate.

After Vietnam and Watergate, both Houses of Congress decided to establish Select Committees on Intelligence following extensive investigations of U.S. intelligence activities by panels headed by then Congressman Otis Pike and late Senator Frank Church. Early on, both of these committees appeared to conduct their business in an amicable and bipartisan manner with little evidence of politicization. Unfortunately, such a turn of events was too good to last, and for the last two years or so, the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, in particular, has become increasingly politicized. Of late, its Senate counterpart has also reflected a political coloration not seen heretofore.

One of the intelligence community's most illustrious and respected alumni, Admiral (ret.) Bobby Inman, resigned in October 1982 as a consultant to the House Intelligence Committee because he felt it had become politically partisan. He cited as his specific reason for leaving the fact that he had not been consulted on a subcommittee report critical of the U.S. intelligence performance in Central America. In the admiral's opinion, the report, which emphasized El Salvador, was "put out on party lines."

In his resignation announcement that was reported in the October 15, 1982 edition of the Washington Post, Inman also indicated that the congressional Intelligence Committees' oversight of the intelligence agencies must be nonpolitical in order to earn public credibility. He went on to add that "if the country doesn't establish a bi-partisan approach to intelligence, we are not going to face the problems of the next 50 years." Admiral Inman also offered some sage advice on avoiding leaks by recommending that "none of the staff should have any personal relations with the media."

A serious question with dangerous implications presents itself: Is our democratic form of Government unable to keep any secrets, no matter how sensitive to our national interests? As we all know, the calculated, politically motivated leaking of highly sensitive information has become a Washington art form, and one that is not confined to Congress alone, as a number of these unauthorized revelations have come from various places in the executive branch as well.

With respect to the question of mining Nicaraguan harbors, leaks to the press caused a number of Senators, who knew about the mining activities when they voted for additional assistance for the Nicaraguan resistance forces, to turn around a few days later and disingenuously condemn the mining by voting for a resolution prohibiting it. Such election year flip-flopping called into question the integrity of the oversight process, and jeopardized the President's Central American Aid Program. Senator Leahy and I have strong differences of opinion regarding the President's foreign policy vis-a-vis Nicaragua, but the Senator was right on the mark when he said, "there were Senators who voted one way the week before and a different way the following week who knew about the mining in both instances and I think they were influenced by public opinion, and I think that's wrong and that is a lousy job of legislative action."

It appears the only way to mount a successful covert operation these days is for such an activity to have the nearly unanimous support of both Intelligence Committees and the involved agencies of the intelligence community. Anything short of that is doomed to failure, as opponents will selectively leak material to their acquaintances in the media with the expressed purpose of torpedoing the operation. Moreover, as recent press disclosures clearly demonstrate, you can count on a flurry of these leaks just before anticipated congressional action on the issue in dispute.

What is especially disturbing is that those who are doing the leaking probably have never stopped to think what the short and long-term implications of their revelations will be with respect to U.S. Intelligence efforts, as well as to U.S. foreign policy. They are so preoccupied with scoring political points that they do not even begin to realize how their actions may be impacting on the lives of U.S. Intelligence and Foreign Service personnel overseas. Furthermore, with respect to the Contras, I doubt if any of these professional leakers have given any thought as to how their discloures might jeopardize the thousands of people in the Nicaraguan resistance movement to which the U.S. made a commitment.

One of the cardinal rules of intelligence is that one does not confirm the accuracy of news accounts regarding sensitive intelligence operations. Yet, we saw in the wake of the initial press disclosures, the chairman of the House Permanent Select Intelligence Committee do just that during a public appearance before the House Rules Committee, and subsequently on the House floor. Ironically, according to one press account, Chairman Edward P. Boland's explanation of what his committee knew and when was partly motivated by a desire to remove any doubt that the CIA had not fully briefed the committee on mining activities. That's a commendable reason, but at what cost to our intelligence capabilities?

Finally, in a move that must have left foreign intelligence services incredulous, the CIA felt obliged to issue a press release that for the first time implicitly and publicly acknowledged its involvement in the mining by citing 11 occasions when it briefed congressional Intelligence Committees on the matter.

What an unseemly spectacle then unfolded! The chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, Mr. Goldwater, excoriated the CIA for not being forthcoming. Shortly thereafter, the committee's vice-chairman, Senator Moynihan, announced his resignation from the committee, claiming that he was not properly briefed on the mining matter either. That charge was particularly perplexing to the executive branch because, at least a week before the Senate voted on the assistance to the Nicaraguan resistence forces, Mr. Moynihan reportedly requested a legal opinion from the State Department on the mining question. Nevertheless, CIA Director Casey (in a triumph of discretion over valor) apologized to the Senate Intelligence Committee for his perceived sins and Senator Moynihan decided to remain on the committee. The upshot of this bizarre scenario has been a serious deterioration in relations between the CIA and Congress with a consequent loss of trust—the most vital ingredient in the oversight process.

All of this, of course, makes a mockery of the oversight system and what must be the most overt covert program in intelligence annals. If what is at stake here was not so important, we could pause and have a good laugh at ourselves. Unfortunately, that is not the case. Our friends and intelligence contacts around the world have taken note of our sorry performance in recent months, as have the dedicated American intelligence personnel and the thousands of Miskito Indians and other Nicaraguans dependent upon us for continued support. What they have observed cannot be reassuring. Indeed, they must be wondering why they ever cast their lot with such an unreliable and whimsical partner.

In short, we cannot afford to allow what presently masquerades as congressional intelligence oversight to continue any longer. With politics intruding so heavily on the process, the prospects of more debacles are a distinct possibility. Public discussion of alleged CIA involvement in the election of Jose Napoleon Duarte as President of El Salvador, and revelations concerning purported U.S. support of the Afghan rebels are just two examples of what I mean.

It is time to give serious thought to merging the existing Intelligence Committees into a joint committee composed equally of Republicans and Democrats who, in addition to the requisite trustworthiness, competence and responsibility, also possess the rare restraiant to subordinate political considerations to the national interest. Such a committee must be backed by a small cadre of apolitical professionals with the same exemplary personal qualities as the committee's members.

Creating a new joint oversight panel along these lines would diminish the possibilities for partisan posturing and significantly reduce the number of individuals having access to sensitive information, thus minimizing the risk of damaging unauthorized disclosures. At the same time, it would retain in a more effective and concentrated manner the essentials of congressional oversight over the activities of our intelligence agencies and preclude the possibility of executive branch intelligence components playing one committee off against the other.

It would also address some other practical problems that have resulted from two committees overseeing the intelligence community. As we have learned in recent months, the two committees often reflect different perspectives, and they frequently do not focus on the same matters. Moreover, there apparently is hardly any interaction or coordination on the issues, contrary to what most of us had assumed. For example, the media carried not too long ago unattributed criticisms from the House Intelligence Committee that the CIA may have overspent its budget in its supposedly covert operations in Nicaragua. This view was not shared by the Senate Intelligence Committee. Confusion reigned!

Another thing to bear in mind in this connection is that Congress has increasingly insisted upon being consulted and briefed by the executive branch concerning national security and foreign policy questions. A large percentage of these are intelligence-related and require the involvement of high level executive branch officials who are often hard pressed to meet the demands of both the House and Senate Intelligence Committees. This is particularly true during fast breaking crisis situations. A consolidated oversight panel would provide one point of contact for consultation and briefings in those instances where time is of the essence.

In summary, a Joint Intelligence Committee would not only eliminate the problems just cited, but it would also encourage bipartisan cooperation, and thus ensure a more effective congressional oversight arrangement. I am pleased to report that before Congress adjourned, this idea had gained the bipartisan support of such respected voices in Congress as Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, and Senator Sam Nunn, who presently sits on the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. In addition, Senator Dan Quayle, chairman of a select committee studying ways of improving the Senate's committee system, has indicated that he will offer the joint committee concept as a recommendation that should be featured in his panel's final report to the Senate in mid-December of this year.

Such a favorable reception has led me to believe that when Congress reconvenes in January, my bill will be placed high on the legislative priority pole, and you can rest assured that I will be vigorously doing all I can to see that it is enacted into law. As one of your distinguished colleagues, Cord Meyer, noted in a recent column, it is an idea whose time has come and "there seems to be no better way of reconciling security with accountability in a dangerous world."

Before concluding, I would also like to share with you my thoughts about the Intelligence Identities Protection Act that Congress passed a couple of years ago.

As a Member of Congress, I frequently witness legislative efforts that are long on symbolism but short on substance. Sometimes these efforts are so useless that they remind me of a baseball pitcher with the stylish windup of hall of famer Sandy Koufax but who forgot to pick up the ball! In other words, all windup—no pitch.

A case in point is the Intelligence Identities Protection Act. What triggered this nobly intended—but largely ineffective—initiative was a relentless stream of disclosures.

Certain individuals, including turncoat U.S. intelligence officer Philip Agee, were busily and systematically disclosing the names of those clandestinely employed by the various U.S. intelligence agencies. Against this compelling backdrop, Congress finally attempted to remedy a situation that was seriously undermining human intelligence collection efforts worldwide.

Lamentably, the legislation that eventually emerged was so watered down that it has not really accomplished its objective of deterring the exposure of undercover intelligence personnel.

After considerable debate, Congress determined that for a non-Government individual to be convicted under this legislation, the Government would have to prove that such a person had engaged in "a pattern of activities intended to identify and expose covert agents and with reason to believe that such activities would impair or impede the intelligence activities of the United States."

Clearly not covered by this legislative provision would be those journalists who, during the course of a story, casually mention the name of a covert intelligence operative. Particularly instructive in this regard is the conference report to the Identities Protection Act which offers the following interpretation:

"A journalist writing stories about the CIA would not be engaged in the requisite 'pattern of activities,' even if the stories he wrote included the names of one or more covert agents, unless the Government proved that there was an intent to identify and expose agents. To meet the standard of the bill, a discloser must be engaged in a purposeful enterprise of revealing identities—he must, in short, be in the business of 'naming names.'"

Armed with this congressional analysis and legislative history, many journalists have no qualms about dropping the name of an undercover agent in order to make a story a little "sexier" or seemingly more credible. For example, the Washington Post ran an article by correspondent John Lantigua in an early July 1984 edition that illustrates my point.

The thrust of the story concerned an American citizen waiting to be tried in Nicaragua for espionage. Among other things, Lantigua reported that this individual declared that he sold intelligence information to a U.S. diplomat whom Lantigua named and claimed an unnamed former U.S. State Department official had revealed as having been employed by the CIA.

In my opinion, such a titillating disclosure violates the spirit, if not the letter, of the Identities Protection Act. (Incidentally, it is interesting and ironical to note that Lantigua took pains to protect the anonymity of his ex-State Department source while having no compunction whatsoever about revealing the alleged CIA ties of a U.S. Embassy employee who may have been falsely identified as can be the case in leaks of this nature.)

These actions point up that, from an intelligence standpoint, the random or isolated disclosure by an individual journalist can be just as deleterious as the wholesale revelations that used to be featured in the Covert Action Information Bulletin.

In fairness to the Washington Post, it must be mentioned that it is not alone in allowing the publication of reports with damaging revelations regarding those under cover. As Jay Peterzell indicates in the May/June 1984 edition of First Principles: National Security and Civil Liberties, such prestigious and reputable news organs as the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal have also published—since the passage of the identities protection legislation—similar stories in the apparent belief that they would not be "exposed to the prosecution under the Identities Act as now interpreted, even though many of these disclosures appear to have embarassed the U.S. Government or to have interfered with ongoing intelligence activities."

Elsewhere in the same article, Peterzell insightfully observes that "perhaps the most significant effect of the conference report on the legislation is to resolve the doubts of reporters and others about the intended scope of the Identities Act. Lawyers for the Washington Post and the Christian Science Monitor said the report had convinced them the act is not meant to apply to reporters who identify an agent in the context of a news story."

In sum, the Intelligence Identities Protection Act has turned out to be largely symbolic legislation. I will concede that it does appear to have caused the Covert Action Information Bulletin to stop publishing its "naming names" column, but even this notorious journal has dared to reveal occasionally the identity of individuals within the context of a story.

Again, Peterzell is informative as he points out that the Bulletin's editor, Louis Wolf, has stated that "on several occasions we have published articles that discuss CIA activities and identified people when it was important to the story. We got legal advice and went ahead."

Short of remedial legislation, my only and fervent hope, therefore, is that responsible, professional journalists will emulate the example of the Christian Science Monitor which decided, according to Peterzell, not to reveal a name "for moral rather than legal reasons."

That is indeed a transcendant reason and such restraint could literally mean the difference between life and death for some dedicated employee of this Nation's intelligence community.

In conclusion, I want to reiterate my appreciation for this opportunity to speak to you today and I would welcome any suggestions—legislative or otherwise—that you may have to enhance U.S. intelligence.

SCOUTING ANNIVERSARY: THE THOUGHTS OF YOUTH

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, Longfellow wrote in "My Lost Youth":

A boy's will is the wind's will,
and the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts.

That spirit of youthful adventure, of high hope and valiant enterprise, has always been at the heart of the Boy Scout movement. In this 75th anniversary year of Scouting in America, I am glad to join with those around the world who are celebrating the ideals and the achievements that have marked the Boy Scouts since their beginnings at the turn of the century.

The spirit of scouting was conceived in 1899–1900 during the long ordeal of Mafeking—a town under fierce siege for over 200 days in the Boer War and bravely defended by Robert Baden-Powell, destined to be founder of Scouting. His "Scouting for Boys" in 1906 was a call to British youth and youth everywhere. The first troops were begun in 1908, and by 1909 over 11,000 Boy Scouts gathered for a jamboree at London. In 1910 the movement was introduced into America by Daniel C. Beard, Ernest L. Seton, and James West. These were men who hoped by precept and example to make it possible for boys to pass from youth to manhood strong in character and in body alike. "Mens sana in corpore sano"—the historic ideal of the ancient Greeks—was a guiding principle in the Scouting movement: "A healthy mind in a healthy body". By the application of this ideal in daily life, Scouting sought to instill values into boys that would carry them into adult life as happy, useful citizens, dedicated to the common good.

Since that time three-quarters of a century ago over 70 million Americans have participated in Scouting in one form or another. That tremendous statistic becomes very personal for me when I recall that I am myself an Eagle Scout and that I have a page who will become an Eagle Scout this evening at an Eagle Scout Court of Honor in McLean, VA. Scouts have been prominent in every area of our Nation's life from 1910 to the present day, exemplifying in their lives the principles and values for which scouting stands. The roster of former Scouts includes many Members of Congress, President Reagan, former President Ford, and many, many more.

It would be difficult to overstate the service rendered by Scouting to the quality of American life in any era, but especially in the early decades of this century. This was a time of rapid urbanization and industrialization. Social and economic changes were transforming the very face of our country. The benefits of the outdoor life and of health-giving activities in the open air and under God's free sun and skies were too often denied to millions of boys. A New York City study done at that time indicated that 93 percent of the students in local public schools were "anemic and in need of open air treatment." The lure of hills and the woods, and the lore of generations of woods men and naturalists, conspired to win the hearts and minds of boys—and of the men who helped them—who felt themselves to be, in the famous phrase of the poet Keats, too "long in city pent."

To one who has been long in city pent,
'Tis very sweet to look into the fair
And open face of heaven.

Something of that spirit, that feeling for the wildness of nature and its challenge to a boy's will, has always been present in Scouting.

But also the early decades of this century were a time of heavy immigration from the Old World. Newcomers were often confused and perplexed by the conditions of American life. The growing diversity of ethnic, cultural, and religious backgrounds underlined the need for binding values, ways by which people of different traditions could be brought together. Scouting was one such means—as it still is. The stated purpose of the Scouts—"to promote * * * the ability of boys to do things for themselves * * * and teach them patriotism, courage, and self-reliance"—was itself a response to the urgent necessity of the time. As members of the Boy Scouts of America, boys acquired a sense of larger loyalty that strengthened the Nation's moral fabric.

The theme of self-reliance runs all through our history, a theme strikingly articulated by Emerson in his essay of 1841: "Discontent is the want of self-reliance; it is infirmity of will." The call to boys to cultivate self-reliance in Scouting was balanced by its message of patriotism, a concern for the common good and for civic virtue.

It is hardly surprising that Scouting has had such great appeal to American boys in every generation. Chartered by Congress in 1916, in the midst of the Great European War into which this country would be drawn within a year, the movement grew from 100,000—1914—to over a million by the outbreak of the Second World War.

At this anniversary occasion, it is fitting that we look again at the Scout Oath and ponder its significance: every Scout pledges on his honor "to do my duty to God and my country * * * to help other people at all times * * * to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight." That oath reminds us—and I fear we need reminding—that duty to God precedes all other obligations. It is an oath that could not be permitted in any totalitarian country, past or present. It is an oath deeply rooted in the history and traditions of America. The Scout Law lists the qualities of a Scout in a well-known litany of virtues—" Trustworthy, Loyal, Helpful, Friendly, Courteous, Kind, Obedient, Cheerful, Thrifty, Brave, Clean, and Reverent." An organization which tries to foster such ideals is surely deserving of respect from all who care deeply for the quality of our Nation's life. And I would note the presence of reverence in that sequence: reverence as an attitude defined by the dictionary as "profound respect mingled with love and awe." An irreverent generation is ultimately an uncaring people. It is the sense of duty—to God, to country, and to other people—that must begin and end in reverence, that profound respect for the source of life and author of liberty.

Think for a moment how deeply the traditions of religious faith inform and sustain the foundations of our national life. Freedom of conscience and of worship is at the heart of our country's heritage, and such freedom would be empty without the vibrant reality of faith in all its rich diversity. The role of religion in our common heritage was definitively expressed by George Washington himself in his first inaugural (1789):

No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than those of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency; and in the important revolution, just accomplished in the system of their united government the tranquil deliberations and voluntary consent of so many distinct communities from which the event has resulted cannot be compared with the means by which most governments have been established without some return of pious gratitude, along with an humble anticipation of the future blessings which the past seem to presage * * *.

That "spirit of pious gratitude" invoked by Washington is, I venture to assert, the same spirit that finds expression in the Scout Oath. Our "duty to God" involves no creedal or sectarian identity. It is a broad-based commitment to the Power "that hath made and preserved us a nation." To be sure, we are free not to make such a commitment. But then we are clearly rejecting the moral and spiritual tenets on which Scouting is founded.

"Duty to country," patriotism, takes many forms also. It may mean service in the Armed Forces, or it may mean the quiet obligations of citizenship that are present in every area of human life, in family life, in business and the arts and sciences, the professions, and the like. It is the loyalty that binds State and Nation into indissoluble union.

Above all, Scouting is concerned with the transformation of boys into men. Its dedication to the work ethic, education, morality, reverence, inculcates these ideals as a very way of life, giving direction, and purpose to the energies and enthusiasms of boys. So it is truly that we may say with the poet,

A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts.

I congratulate and commend the Boy Scouts of America on this, their 75th year, confident that their story of achievement, good times, and service to all has only begun.

HONORING MR. ROBERTO GARCIA FOR OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO COMMUNITY AND STATE

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an individual who has distinguished himself in his community and State.

Mr. Roberto Garcia of Sacramento, CA, has served as chief equal employment opportunity officer, for the State employment development department since 1981, following a progressive career in State service that began in 1969 as a job agent in southern California.

An outstanding employee, Mr. Garcia has always found the time and the energy to work with various community groups involved with increasing educational and employment opportunities for young Californians.

As chairman of the State planning committee for the 1984 and the 1985 Chicano and Latino Youth Leadership Conference, Mr. Garcia has once again demonstrated his committment and leadership in coordinating the week-long conference held in Sacramento. His example serves as a positive role model to the participating high school students and to the many volunteers and supporters of the conference.

Several of my constituents have participated in this annual conference and I am pleased to note that the positive experience and support that the students receive under the leadership of Mr. Garcia is very encouraging to the parents in my district.

On September 18, 1985, members of the community from throughout California will convene in Sacramento to honor the dedication and outstanding job that Mr. Garcia has performed as chairman of the conference for the past 2 years.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in congratulating Mr. Roberto Garcia for the honors being presented to him by grateful parents, students, and the numerous community leaders and organizations for his contributions and support for the development and education of our young people.

ENVIRONMENTAL AWARD WELL-DESERVED TRIBUTE TO ROBINS AIR FORCE BASE

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, on September 5, it was my privilege to take part in a Pentagon ceremony honoring Robins Air Force Base. Maj. Gen. Cornelius Nugteren, the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center commander, was present to receive the 1984 Secretary of Defense Natural Resource Conservation Award, a tribute which Robins has worked long and hard to earn.

The Department of Defense has stewardship over 24 million acreas of land, and the Conservation Award Program is designed to reward excellent natural resources management by military installations. Robins Air Force Base earned the award by producing outstanding programs in community relations, outdoor recreation, reforestation, and fish and wildlife management.

The most outstanding aspect of Robins' conservation efforts, however, is their program of wetland development. At the present time, 800 acres bordering the Ocmulgee River are being nominated as a national landmark, due to the interest and efforts of the base.

Their natural resource programs include nature education field trips for schoolchildren, base-sponsored Scouting programs, an excellent timber management program, and an effective and efficient cardboard recycling program. At Robins, the beauty and the value of our natural resources is recognized, protected, and appreciated.

Conservation of our natural resources is more than simply caring for the beauties we now enjoy. At Robins, they have instituted a program to cultivate a love and appreciation of nature in our children, so that conservation efforts will become ingrained in the next generation. Conservation is preservation, and the best way to preserve for eternity is to influence those who will follow us.

I have always taken great pride in representing Robins Air Force Base in this Congress, because its high standards of leadership are famous. It has taken the lead once again, on an issue of importance to all of us—protecting our natural resources.

I want to offer my commendation to Robins Air Force Base for its excellent service in this area, and I want to salute General Nugteren for his leadership in natural resources management. Robins Air Force Base sets a standard of excellence which all military installations are encouraged to follow.

WHERE IS ANDREI SAKHAROV?

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, three months have passed since anyone in the West has seen or heard any news on the whereabouts and condition of Nobel Prize winner Dr. Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Dr. Yelena Bonner. The Soviet Government, in violation of every conceivable standard of compassion and respect for basic human rights, has refused to allow these eminent individuals to travel, to meet with their children, or to maintain contact with friends, supporters, and relatives in the U.S.S.R. and in the West.

Eleven days ago, the Sakharov's son, Alexsey Semyonov, began a hunger strike in Washington to call attention to the plight of his parents. This act of desperation on his part appeared to him to be the only alternative he had to secure attention to the treatment of his parents and to force the Soviet Government to act. Last Thursday, I joined several Members of this body at the Soviet Embassy where we met with Alexsey and joined in voicing our opposition to the Soviet's treatment of the Sakharovs. Soviet officials at the Embassy again refused to discuss the condition of the Sakharovs and refused to accept a petition we offered in behalf of the Sakharov's.

Mr. Speaker, as the United States and the Soviets prepare for the summit conference in Geneva, no action by the Soviet Government could do more to ease the tensions that exist between our countries than a liberalization of their repressive violations of basic human rights. Thousands of Soviet citizens are denied the basic rights guaranteed in the Soviet constitution, in the U.N. "Declaration of the Rights of Man," and in the Helsinki Final Act. Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner are only two of many individuals in the Soviet Union who must rely on voices in the West to plead their case and raise the issue of their freedom with the Soviet regime. I hope all members of the House will join in expressing our continued outrage at the failure of the Soviet Government to move on the issue of human rights. In particular, I hope all Members of the House will continue to press our concern over the abuses directed toward Andrei Sakharov and his family. Mr. Gorbachev and his colleagues in the Kremlin must be assured that the continued abuse of the Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner's human rights will not be forgotten by the House of Representatives or the American people. This tragedy has gone on long enough. It is time for the Soviet Government to bring it to an end.

Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post published an article Monday by Alexsey Seymonov in which he explains why he has taken the daring risks of a hunger strike in an effort to secure news about his parents. I ask that it be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 9, 1985]

A SIMPLE REQUEST: I'D LIKE TO SEE MY PARENTS

(By Alex Semyonov)

Ten days ago I started a hunger strike near the Soviet Embassy to protest the Soviet Union's persecution and mistreatment of my parents, Dr. Andrei Sakharov and Dr. Elena Bonner. My demand: to see my parents, either in the West or in the U.S.S.R. Why have I taken such a step? I do not regard a hunger strike as a weapon of choice—only of desperation. But did I have a choice?

For over half a year nobody has seen my parents. We do not any longer have any communication with them. My parents' health is poor. In the past few years my mother has suffered three heart attacks. She is a disabled World War II veteran, legally blind in one eye. To save her eyesight, she needs surgery; she may also need bypass heart surgery. My stepfather also needs expert care for a number of illnesses. Yet in their exile my parents are treated only by KGB-supplied doctors whose actions are determined by KGB will and not by the needs of their patients.

That in itself is bad enough, but lately their situation has become even worse. We learned (long after the fact) that in April Dr. Sakharov began a hunger strike. Immediately my parents were isolated from each other and the rest of the world. Later the Soviets showed two videotapes made with hidden cameras: in June, to prove that my stepfather had ended the hunger strike, and in July, to claim that the Sakharovs were reunited. Why, then, is there still no word from the Sakharovs themselves?

The silence is threatening. Having achieved the complete isolation of my parents, the KGB is free to do anything to them, even to kill, and count on that never becoming known to the world (remember Raoul Wallenberg? We are yet to learn his fate 40 years after the Soviets removed him from Vienna and into the Gulag.)

I believe human rights should be the underlying principle in the policies of Western countries toward the Soviet Union; thus I believe my parents, who have become symbols of the struggle for human rights in the Soviet Union, should be vigorously defended by Western countries. Unfortunately, I cannot see that happening now in the Sakharovs' critical and tragic situation.

Many Western countries, justly outraged by South Africa's breaking the moral laws of humanity, are right now applying or considering punitive actions against that state. The Soviet Union is disregarding both moral and legal obligations. The U.S.S.R. has signed international treaties (the Helsinki Accords, the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights) in which it obligated itself to respect human rights.

South Africa still allows its Nobel Peace laureate, Bishop Desmond Tutu, to be outspoken and free. In Poland, a winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, Lech Walesa, is under severe restrictions, but at least is at home and with friends. What country, then, can the Soviet Union be compared to in its treatment of my stepfather, the only Russian ever to win the Nobel Peace Prize? Only one example comes to my mind: Carl von Ossietzky, a German journalist and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, who was imprisoned by the Nazis. But with this qualification: von Ossietzky was released and allowed to leave Germany.

But the Western countries have effectively dropped human rights issues from the agenda of their relations with the Soviet Union, probably believing that this way progress in other areas can be more easily obtained. I think this is self-defeating: sensing a weakness in the Western positions on principles, the Soviets become confident they can bully the Free World to accept the short end of the deal on any other question too.

As the situation of my parents was worsening in the last year, there was also a change in the policy of the National Academy of Sciences, of which my stepfather is a member. Five years ago, when the Soviets forcibly moved Dr. Sakharov from Moscow, the NAS discontinued scientific exchanges with the Soviet Union. This step was in complete accord with the NAS's traditional strong stand in defense of human rights.

Now, however, under the presidency of Dr. Frank Press, the NAS has reversed course. Although no improvements had been made in Soviet human rights policies, and nothing had changed in cases particularly important to the scientific community—such as those of Drs. Orlov and Scharansky—and although the Sakharovs are still in Gorky and worse off than before, Dr. Press went to Moscow and signed an agreement resuming the exchanges. He did so on the day that was the fifth anniversary of my stepfather's illegal exile. The very choice of the date says to the Soviets that human rights are not important to the NAS anymore. Even in the face of consequent protests from scientific organizations and a number of individual scientists, including some Nobel laureates, the NAS has refused to change its position.

In view of all this, believing my parents to be in mortal danger, I have started this hunger strike. I know that I cannot win alone. But there are many people concerned about my parents, and with their help I hope the situation can be changed. The administration can be moved from a passive position of denouncing the Soviets' treatment of my parents to actively seeking a resolution of the case.

It would, I believe, have lasting negative effects on East-West relations if Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev had a friendly meeting and afterwards we learned that the Soviets had killed or let die the Sakharovs and kept it a secret. I also believe that now, before the summit, my parents can and should be rescued.

ELLIE KNEPPER

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take just a moment to correct an oversight that resulted in an omission from my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on July 17.

On that day, I addressed my colleagues about efforts across the Nation to recognize the service and sacrifices of American MIA's and POW's and their families.

In particular, I mentioned that the city of Dunedin, FL, was one of the first communities in the country to pay special tribute to our Vietnam veterans, in particular those who did not return from Southeast Asia. A number of individuals in the community were instrumental in that effort, and I was pleased to be able to honor them by reading their names into the RECORD.

Unfortunately, the name of one person who had an active role in Dunedin's tribute was inadvertently omitted. Therefore, I want to take this opportunity to recognize Ellie Knepper. Ellie was instrumental in Dunedin's successful and moving efforts to dedicate a new stadium to those who served in Vietnam and, in fact, was the founder and chairman of the Stadium Committee. She certainly deserved to be mentioned along with those other individuals who participated in these efforts.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, August 29, in Geneva, the United Nations Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities adopted an updated version of a genocide study which includes a reference to the Armenian massacre in 1915 and 1916. The fact of this inclusion in an official United Nations document is extremely encouraging.

Members of the Armenian community here in the United States, who have been working for many years to set the historical record straight regarding those terrible events 70 years ago, are very gratified that this important fact of history has been successfully included in a report that has international significance. I am glad to have the opportunity to bring this information to the attention of my colleagues in the House.

THE 95TH ANNIVERSARY OF ROMAN CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOL

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to recognize the 95th anniversary of the founding of Roman Catholic High School in Philadelphia, PA, on September 6, 1985. Roman Catholic High was the first free Catholic high school in the country and has become a model for Catholic education in the United States. When Roman was founded in 1890, it gave the children of immigrants and first and second generation Americans the educational opportunities they needed. Today, in ever increasing numbers, Roman is also providing the same opportunity for blacks, Asians, and Hispanics.

Dr. Robert Moffit, class of 1965, and now Assistant Director for Congressional Relations at the Office of Personnel Management, was the keynote speaker at the official celebration at Philadelphia's Plaza Hotel on April 21, 1985. I am happy to include his remarks on that occasion in the RECORD today.

As Bob Moffit points out, many illustrious men have attended Roman. Among them are the Honorable James McGranery, former Attorney General of the United States under President Truman championship fighter Tommy Loughran, and most recently, the Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright, Charles Fuller.

I urge my colleagues to read Bob's inspired and thoughtful remarks. Roman Catholic High School is a very special place and has provided over the past 95 years the surroundings where young men could learn from books and, even more importantly, learn the essential spiritual and moral values that make life deeply meaningful.

Bob put it perfectly in his statement when he said that the occasion stirred something more than memories.

It is a realization that we shared in the life of an institution that stands for something; an institution that has a meaning and a purpose even beyond the high quality of its education. It is a realization clarified, for most of us, with the passage of time.

When we say that an institution stands for something, we mean that it embodies standards. We mean, to put it more directly, that it affirms that certain things are true; that we are to measure up to those standards. Or at the very least, we are to try to measure up to those standards.

Bob Moffit is an accomplished man whose experience at Roman helped to shape his character and ambition and lead him on a path of goodness in this world. We are fortunate in political circles to have his wisdom and leadership aiding our efforts. I commend Bob, congratulate the faculty and alumni of Roman, and commend Bob's remarks to my colleagues' attention on this very important occasion.

The remarks of Mr. Moffit follow:

FIDES ET SCIENTIA

(By Robert Emmet Moffit, Ph.D.)

Father Cartin, Father McLoughlin, Father Murphy, Mr. Oniskey, Dr. Palestini, Reverend Fathers, Fellow Alumni, Ladies and Gentlemen:[1]

Thomas Cahill's bold dream has come true! Ninety five years ago his personal fortune was transformed into a unique institution. It has since become a Philadelphia landmark.

As Dr. Palestini remarked just a few moments ago, Roman is a lot more than an impressive edifice of stone and masonry. She breathes a special spirit. It is that spirit that animates her graduates. It is that spirit that is responsible for the outstanding contributions Roman graduates have made to this great City, to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and to the Republic.

Consider the diverse and illustrious roster of Roman graduates: the late John Facenda, the Voice of Philadelphia and the National Football League, the great Championship Fighter Tommy Loughran, the late Judge Vincent Carroll, an outstanding jurist, the Honorable James McGranery, former Attorney General of the United States under President Truman, and most recently, the Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright, Charles Fuller, whose play, "The Soldier's Story", has been made into a major motion picture. Mr. Fuller's work was, as you know, nominated for an Oscar.

Looking back on our years at Roman, I am sure that we can all recall outstanding academic and athletic records made by our classmates.

Well, I have a record. I have a record that may never have been surpassed in the history of the school. Not only that, my record may indeed withstand the challenge of Roman Catholic High School's next hundred years.

Though I was born in Fairmount and baptized at St. Francis Xavier parish, I was raised in the farthest reaches of Mayor Goode's domain in the Northeasternmost part of Northeast Philadelphia. It was then a sparsely populated little place called Somerton. Now, Somerton is literally a stone's throw from the Buck's County line. And each and every day, I traveled 40 miles by bus and El and Subway, round trip, to and from Roman, making afternoon detours during the track season to Cahill field at 29th and Clearfield. By conservative estimate, that is 40 miles per day, for 180 days per year, for a total of 28,800 miles over a period of four years. Ladies and Gentlemen, I circumnavigated the Globe—and more—just to go to high school. Or, to put it another way, I went around the world in four years on the Frankford El. I bypassed, I might add, modern, progressive, new-fangled places, much closer to home, like Father Judge.

Twenty-eight thousand and eight-hundred miles! That's the record I amassed in my four years at Roman.

I went to school with normal, well-adjusted youngsters from great old Philadelphia neighborhoods like North Philly, Fishtown, Chinatown, Manayunk, East Falls, Roxborough, and Fairmount. And I can tell you that they thought all of this traveling a bit odd. While they were polite and well-bred enough not to broach the subject, I am quite sure that they sincerely felt that I must have been a bit odd to undertake such a daily journey to Broad and Vine Street. Their curiosity was shared by the faculty of Roman, a curiosity colored by some fatherly concern over the state of my mind. In fact, one day, Father Charles Gallen, then Athletic Director for the Philadelphia Archdiocese, invited me to his office and boldly asked me the obvious question: Why are you here and not somewhere else?

I will tell you now what I told Father then. I am here because my father, Edward Patrick Moffit, Class of 39, was here; my uncle James Aloysius Moffit was here; and my youngest uncle, Francis Xavier Moffit was here. It was traditional for Moffits to attend Roman. I might add that my grandfather, James A. Moffit Sr., did not attend Roman. He attended a little country school in the town of Ballymahon, County Longford, in Ireland. From our studies in English at Roman, you may recall the beautiful works of Oliver Goldsmith. Bellymahon was also his home town. Unlike Goldsmith, James A. Moffit Sr. enjoyed a very cordial but very distant relationship with education, particularly after he slugged the local schoolmaster. That may have ended James Moffit's short formal education, but he and Nancy came to America and taught us all the lasting value of good humor and hard work.

[1] The Rev. John A. Cartin, '16, is a former Rector of Roman Catholic High School. He served in that position from 1938 until 1952. The Rev. Richard J. McLoughlin is current Rector of Roman Catholic High School. The Rev. Joseph T. Murphy serves as Moderator of the Roman Catholic High School Alumni Association and is currently a member of the faculty of Roman. Father Murphy is a specialist in Latin and European civilization. Dr. Robert Palestini is the Assistant Vicar of Catholic Education of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. Mr. Leonard Oniskey, '50, served as Toastmaster on the occasion of the Ninety Fifth Anniversary of Roman Catholic High School. Mr. Oniskey is a graduate of Cornell University and a businessman, who previously enjoyed a distinguished career with the New York Giants and the Washington Redskins. Other gentlemen participating in the program included: Mr. Joseph T. Wolpert, '50 Chairman of the 95th Anniversary Luncheon; Mr. James Carroll, '37, President of the Roman Catholic High School Alumni Association; Mr. John P. Carney, '52, of the Knights of Columbus; Mr. Albert Kreider, '64, who reported on the progress of Roman's Development Fund; and Mr. Hugh Mooney, '48, who served as Pianist.

So, while my classmates were possessed by other, more normal passions, I was captivated by an intense, almost uncontrollable passion for Tradition. And for this passion, I was willing to sacrifice an academic career at Father Judge, the glamor and glitter of the Great Northeast, winning football seasons, and the girls at St. Hubert's High. I forswore all of this to come to Roman and serve Tradition—and meet the girls at Hallahan.

In speaking of Tradition, there is one Tradition I should like to see revived: the Thanksgiving Day Game between Roman and St. Joseph's Prep. The Feast of Thanksgiving is a great American holiday, an opportunity to give thanks to the Lord for the health, welfare and prosperity of our families and our Country. But for Roman students, Thanksgiving had an extra special meaning. It was a time to thank the Good Lord for the precious opportunity to teach the "Preppers" a lesson in the virtue of humility.

What is it about Roman that stirs these deep feelings in us? It is a number of things. Surely it is the memory of the great friends we made during our four short years. Surely, it is the memory of what seemed to us then great events in our lives—the athletic contests, the successful plays or band concerts, events in which we played a role, perhaps even a decisive role. Surely, again, it is the memory of the fine men who taught us, the lay teachers and the priests, most especially the priests. In my case, it was my first close encounter with the Roman Catholic priesthood. Never before or since, have I met a finer group of men. Strong, sometimes stern, always able, they were utterly, one might even say ruthlessly, dedicated.

Looking back, we conjure up the images of these fine men: Fr. Kline, Fr. Walsh, Fr. Murphy, Fr. Morrison, Fr. MacDonough, Fr. York, Fr. Scherer, and the great Father Fitzpatrick. All of them are forever etched in my memory as great teachers and kind counselors, but most of all as priests. Every one of us had an inkling, no matter our level of achievement or even lack of it, no matter who we were, or where we came from, whether we were black or white, that we were the objects of a strong and paternal love and concern. From them I apprehended, only dimly at the time, and more clearly as the years passed, what the vocation to the priesthood really means. I literally thank God that I had the good fortune to make their acquaintance in my formative years.

So, I think fond memories have something to do with our sentiments on this occasion. But I think that what stirs us is something deeper even than our best memories. I think it is a realization that we shared in the life of an institution that stands for something; an institution that has a meaning and a purpose even beyond the high quality of its education. It is a realization clarified, for most of us, with the passage of time.

When we say that institution stands for something, we mean that it embodies standards. We mean, to put it more directly, that it affirms that certain things are true; that we are to measure up to those standards. Or, at the very least, we are to try to measure up to those standards.

In my experience at Roman, I can honestly say that we were not the objects of endless preaching or moralizing. No. Standards were not so much preached to us, as much as they were merely expected. They permeated Roman's atmosphere, the very air we breathed. They were the unspoken but always assumed rules of our daily conduct.

The point was brought home to me very graphically one day at track practice at Cahill Field. I was a very second-rate track star. I was neither fast enough to run the short sprints nor strong enough for the great long distances. I fell somewhere in the middle. So I was drafted to run the 440 yard dash, the quarter mile. It was, I can well assure you, a thoroughly miserable experience. After completing a series of practice runs, sweat was streaming down my face, my lungs were burning, and my legs felt like lead. I was exhausted. And one of the good priests who had been watching my perfcrmance, quietly said to me, "Moffit, that is not good enough." At the time, I was in no mood for anything other than a good pat on the back. But I didn't get that. I got the brutal truth. It was not a worldly expectation. But what should I have expected from a Catholic priest?

The truth that Roman teaches is embodied in her motto, appropriately in the Latin tongue, Fides et Scientia. Faith and Knowledge.

Please consider the fact that in that simple motto—Fides et Scientia—is found the whole idea of Catholic education. It is an education of the whole Man. Man has a twofold destiny, an eternal life and a temporal life. Man's true interests are both natural and supernatural. Logically, then, the object of education is not only the life of the mind, for the completion of temporal tasks, but also the life of the spirit for the completion of final tasks. It is not only the development of human reason, but also the development of human character. A system of education that neglects one or the other is a bad system. A bad education is positively worse than no education at all. It does us no good to concentrate on the training of a man's intellect, and neglect or positively ignore the cultivation of his soul. This is especially true in an age of high technology, when our capacity to exercise great power, not only over our natural environment, but also each other, is potentially without limit. A great genius with the heart of a criminal is a danger, not only to himself, but also to the rest of us. Unfortunately, the recent history of the human race bears this out in gory detail. In every generation, it seems, we are condemned to relearn this terrible lesson. But the Church, with a profound understanding of humanity and two thousand years of experience, has always understood. She has understood because she knows that there is, and can be, no progress in the world, including moral or social progress, unless one knows the fundamentals.

I think that the real reason that we are so strongly stirred by our memories of Roman is that we understand now, far better than we did then, that our lives were shaped by that insistence on the fundamentals; by an insistence on Fides as well as Scientia.

Fides. In the Gospel of Mark, Chapter 12, Verse 17, it is written: "And Jesus said unto them: Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. And they marvelled greatly at Him."

In the ancient Roman world, there was no necessary connection between religion and ethics. Ethics were not religious; and religions were not ethical. The pagan gods lived on the same moral plane as pagan men, equally capable of good or evil. There was, however, a necessary connection between religion and the state. Religion was seen as an instrument of the state. It was part of the civil life of the state. It was, in fact, subordinate to the state. There was neither a separation nor a distinction between what belonged to Caesar and what belonged to God; for Caesar fancied himself a god. The state's authority was the highest authority. It was also the fountain of justice and morality. The state was, in a word, absolute.

There were no rights independent of the absolute state. All rights were gifts of the state. What the state gave the state could take away. What the state declared to be right and true was not only legally right and true, but also morally right and true. The pagan state was not only an instrument of law and order, but also assumed the higher role of a supreme teacher of morality and religion.

The Church was persecuted because she taught that there was a higher law than Caesar's law. The Law of God. Indeed, the entire history of the Western world during the past two thousand years can be interpreted as a continuing struggle between the temporal order and the spiritual order, between the higher law of God and the downward pull of our human inclinations, what Augustine called the struggle of two cities in mortal combat, the City of God and the City of Man.

The pagan Roman Empire was based on the principle of absolutism. Tyrannical abuse of authority was standard operating procedure. Now, the Founders of the American Republic, who met here in Philadelphia, were deeply read in the historical experiences of Greece and Rome. They knew that a man who was a law unto himself was a lawless man. They knew, likewise, that a state bound by no higher law was a lawless state.

You and I see this in the Declaration of Independence, the very charter of the American Republic; that there is a law prior to, and higher than, the civil law of the state. Thomas Jefferson called it the law of nature or Nature's God. The Founders recognized, then, the divine law. It was the law that embodied the moral rights of every person, the sacred rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. They recognized that these rights were not grants of the state, but gifts of God inherent in natural creation. They further recognized that the whole purpose of the state was to protect and defend these rights. This was the highest obligation of the state.

In the American conception of government then, the state is not divine. Rather, it is subordinate to divinity. The state is neither a source nor a teacher of morality and religion, but a respecter of morality and religion. Just as the Declaration of Independence affirms the higher law to which the state must be subordinate, the Federal Constitution leaves the teaching of that law to religious institutions. In fact, the First Amendment to the Constitution denies to the government any competence in matters of religion. Instead, the Constitution holds the federal government subordinate to the freedom of religious conscience and mandates protection of the exercise of religious conscience.

These are the fundamentals. I think they bear repeating, especially today. There is much confusion on the issue.

When you and I were at Roman, we were taught that the Church has a duty to perform. She is charged with teaching morality and religion. Christ commanded Peter to teach—all nations, all peoples, of every class and condition, no exceptions. The Church has a sacred duty to inform conscience. She has no choice in the matter, in any meaningful sense of the term. She cannot disobey her order and remain what She is. Again, Christ commanded Peter to teach. The command is not to teach except when it is popular, when it is chic, when it is fashionable, when it is convenient, or when the political authorities or the opinion makers of society are in accord with it. So, the Church has a duty. If that duty brings her into conflict with Caesar, or the government, or the courts, or even, Heaven forbid, with a popular television talk show host, so be it.

But what is our duty? In one word, it is loyalty. Loyalty to the Church is something we normally do not, and should not, carry like a chip on our shoulders, waiting for it to be knocked off. It is a matter of quiet faith, resting securely in the inner recesses of our souls.

Unfortunately, however, we live in a time when open, disloyalty to the Church is celebrated and even rewarded as a mark of respectability. The world loves nothing more than a disloyal Catholic. And respectability in the eyes of the world is indeed a fitting "reward". As G.K. Chesterton said, the Church was never respectable and never will be respectable. Her Founder was not respectable.

Loyalty is bound to be tested. Tests come not only in the quiet privacy of our own personal lives, but also in the open forum of public life.

Nowadays, that loyalty is rarely tested on religious doctrine. Frankly, very few people really care whether you, as a Catholic, believe in the Immaculate Conception or the Virgin Birth. For whether these religious ideas are true or not, people think that these notions will have no impact on them. No, loyalty is to be tested on human behavior, matters of private or public morality. Very many people do indeed care whether or not you happen to think, in your heart of hearts, that what is currently fashionable or popular, or whatever it is that they happen to be doing, is right or wrong. People do care what we think or what the Church teaches on these matters. They care, not necessarily because they want to hear the truth, but because they want approval. They want desperately to be told that their behavior, whatever it is, is somehow perfectly all right.

Although this relativist dogma—that morality is merely a matter of personal opinion—is recurrently fashionable, very few of its proponents have the guts to drive it to its logical conclusions. In any case, rest assured that we pass laws in Congress and in our legislatures each and every day against somebody's "personal opinions". And the state so acts. When we exercise a personal judgment that the 55 m.p.h. speed limit is a silly inconvenience, or when we take a joyride in a car under the influence of one-too-many, we are apprehended by the authorities. We are not apprehended because we are violating some mere social convention that the state is whimsically promoting. We are apprehended because we are endangering human life. And, whether we happen to agree with the proposition or not, human life, at least in the narrow context of auto safety, is deemed sacred and worthy of the utmost protection.

The truth is that all law is directed toward the promotion and enhancement of human life. That is the very purpose of law. Please recall that the right to life is the first right enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. It is the first right the state is duty bound to protect. If human life is not sacred, then the law of necessity loses its majesty.

When Roman Catholic High School opened its doors ninety five years ago, the world was very different from what it is today. Intolerance toward the Catholic religion was not uncommon. Today, hostility toward the Catholic religion is far more subtle and infinitely more sophisticated. It is clothed in the garb of freedom of thought and tolerance, but it breathes a spirit of mental conformity and intolerance.

Allow me to illustrate.

The Civil Law is an agent of order. It embodies a notion of what is good for society. A pornographer or an abortionist, whether conscious of it or not, does have a belief system, a world view, a perhaps vague idea of a good society, just like everyone else. He may view the good society as one in which he, at least, may reap enormous profits while plying his loathesome trades. A local pornographer or an abortionist may lobby energetically for changes in the laws governing pornography and abortion, through the courts and in the legislatures. When he is doing so, he is widely perceived as exercising freedom of conscience, and his rights and liberties guaranteed under the Constitution. He may even be applauded in the media for successfully using the democratic process to alter or abolish outmoded restrictions on personal freedom. Nevertheless, when the abortionist or the pornographer is successful, he is, in point of fact, imposing his view of society when a law is altered to reflect his world view. But rarely is he ever called to account for imposing his values on the rest of us.

On the other hand, if a conscientious Catholic, loyal to the teaching of the Church, criticizes laws enacted through the lobbying of abortionists and pornographers, he is accused of trying to impose his values on everyone else. He is accused of undermining the democratic process, breaching the wall of separation between Church and State, polarizing our politics, and even threatening the Constitution. The Catholic must be told to keep his place, especially in public life. If he is outraged by easily available abortion or pornography, if he actually believes the wild and exotic idea that such things are socially destructive, he should have the good taste to keep his opinions to himself; to remain personally opposed; to be quiet.

This is a novel line of argument. It has been recently fashionable. It is also absolute nonsense. There is nothing in our democratic tradition that excludes the forceful expression of one's conscience in public life. There is likewise nothing in our democratic tradition that forbids the forceful presentation of the moral law by the Church, whose function is to teach. It is the suspension of conscience that presents the greatest danger, not only to morality but to liberty as well. The very purpose of democratic politics is to legitimize the expression of conscientiously held values or convictions, whether they are rooted in religious belief or not. Our values, forged at Roman, those truths concerning the moral life, do not proceed from the state. Christ did not commission Caesar to teach either faith or morality. Caesar is to be taught.

We are living in one of the most exciting periods of human history. We are witnesses to a great age of transition. This is true in virtually every phase of life.

When Roman Catholic High opened its doors in 1890, there were 9 million communicants of the Roman Catholic faith in the United States. The overwhelming majority were American Catholics of European extraction. Indeed Catholicism, even in America, was perceived to be a European phenomenon. In my own lifetime, that has all changed. The Church is becoming truly Catholic, and before many more years elapse, it will be a global institution comprised primarily of peoples in what we now call the Third World.

The Pope in Rome is no longer a prisoner of the Vatican. He is a dynamic personality, who unites tremendous energy, intellectual genius and profound faith in an unbeatable combination. We live in a time when the Papacy itself is exerting greater influence over the course of world history than at any time since the Renaissance. If anyone should doubt this, perhaps they should ponder the fears of the Kremlin.

Make no mistake. The Holy Father is still a young man. He is throwing down terrible challenges, not only to you and me in the interest of our salvation, but also to the powers and dominations of this world, including the dark princes of this world. Theologians and politicians may be confused. The Pope is not. And here too, on matters of faith and morals, our lines of loyalty are clear. Ubi Petrus, Ibi Ecclesia. Where there is Peter, there is the Church.

St. Augustine once wrote that history is like a great poem. One does not know its full meaning until the last line is written. What is true of the history of the world is true of institutions, particularly institutions like Roman. More to the point, perhaps, it is true of the life of each and every one of us. The meaning of our lives will be clear to us at the very end. We, and we alone, are the authors of the poem. Our friendships, our loves, our loyalties will constitute the epic that is the experience of each and every one of us. For those of us who had the good fortune to attend Roman, the material is there for a poem rich in eloquence.

Thomas Cahill, Roman's founder, invited us to share in his own dream ninety five years ago. His world has disappeared. But he rightly imagined the immense value of Catholic education for the future. What Roman has given us, all of us, is not only the opportunity to achieve success, but also the ability to cope with adversity. Times of trial may actually constitute our best and most poignant memories at Roman.

I remember one dismal day. Roman was an underdog in a tough football game with a first class team of the Catholic League. It was cold, wet and raining. I was playing the Glockenspiel, or "bells", in the band. Our uniforms were soaked, our fingers were freezing, and it was hard for us to play properly. It was even harder for my friends and classmates, slugging it out on a muddy Cahill field in the fourth quarter against a superior team and a lopsided score. In the near empty stands, I remember hearing a chant that was popular in my time. "Hurrah for Roman, hurrah for Roman, someone in the crowd hollered hurrah for Roman."

If you think about it, it was an odd cheer. Someone in the Crowd. Singular, at the end of that tough game, said, "Well done".

When the final line is written for each and every one of us, I hope that the poem will sing of our loyalty and love in this world. And on our arrival in the next, especially if we are a bit muddy, battered and beaten, and not too respectable, Someone in that crowd will holler "hurrah for Roman".

Thank you.

SUPERFUND—UNDERSTANDING THE PROBLEM

HON. FRED J. ECKERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. ECKERT of New York. Mr. Speaker, in the current raging debate over the Superfund reauthorization, it is clear that sensible perspective and understanding are important to making the appropriate decisions on the program. Neither benign neglect nor hysterical overreaction is the proper course. Our action must be to authorize a program that is reasonable, responsible, and effective.

Robert J. Samuelson has written instructively about this dilemma in today's Washington Post. I ask unanimous consent to place it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and ask my colleagues to consider its thoughtful examination of this difficult issue:

SUPERFUND AS METAPHOR

Remember Superfund? Back in 1980, Congress created the $1.6 billion program to clean up hazardous-chemical dumps. Five years later, here's where we are: We don't know how many dumps need to be cleaned, how much it will cost, how long it will take, or—indeed—whether it can be done. And, if it is done, we don't know what health and safety benefits will result. They could be quite modest.

Superfund—Congress is debating its renewal—is an apt metaphor for our environmental frustration. We want technology's benefits without adverse side effects. But the two are inseparable, and our efforts to achieve a socially and economically sensible balance constantly run afoul of unrealistic public expectations and scientific ignorance. As Superfund shows, it's not simply measuring risks against costs, because we're rarely sure what the ultimate risks are.

Almost any new technology is an adventure with an unknown ending. Since World War II, chemical production has expanded more than twelvefold. It has given us thousands of new products: From plastics to antibiotics, from pesticides to deodorants. But just as no one foresaw this chemical extravaganza, neither did anyone accurately predict its long-term dangers. Chemical wastes are but one of the unwanted surprises.

Even describing the Superfund problem is difficult. In theory, chemical wastes today are regulated under the 1976 Resource Conservation and Recovery Act; wastes are supposed to go into approved dumps. Superfund was created to control earlier abandoned dumps or dumps that fail today's regulatory standards. What we know now—but did not know in 1980—is that this problem was underestimated. Consider the statistics:

More than 21,500 chemical dumps have been reported to the Environmental Protection Agency. Of these, 14,329 have been reviewed, with 4,747 deemed serious enough to warrant an on-site inspection. So far, 851 have been proposed for, or put on, the National Priorities List (NPL), signifying serious danger of groundwater or atmospheric contamination.

Emergency cleanups have occurred at about 600 sites, including many not on the NPL, where immediate fire or public-health hazards existed. Drums of chemicals have been removed or disposal sites have been fenced off from the public.

Permanent cleanups at NPL sites have been slow; work has begun at 132, but only six have been finished. Once chemicals seep into the ground, remedies are expensive, time-consuming and often imperfect.

Excavations, the pumping and treatment of groundwater, or construction of new underground dikes may be required. EPA estimates the total number of NPL sites at 2,200; the congressional Office of Technology Assessment thinks the number could exceed 10,000.

Our real confusion, though, transcends statistics. We make chemical dumps the problem, but they're not. The problem lies in their consequences to public health, which are unclear. Superfund has been legislation by horror story. It was inspired by the Love Canal scandal—the chemical landfill in New York that became a housing development. It was easy to sympathize with Love Canal's residents. A country of Love Canals is not a pretty vision. Neither, however, is it the reality.

All dumps are not Love Canals. Different chemicals have varying effects. Even if dangerous, the chemical shave to seep into ground water or the air, and health problems usually result only from prolonged exposure. Even Love Canal's effects are hazy. There's some evidence of reduced birth weights and, in children around Love Canal, higher rates of abnormalities: rashes, eye irritations, seizures. But here's no evidence of increased cancer.

From what we now know, hazardous chemical dumps are at worst an isolated peril to small groups; at best, their dangers are exaggerated. For example, the National Cancer Institute attributes about 35 percent of cancer to dietary habits, another 30 percent to smoking, 5 percent to cancer viruses, and 3 percent each to excessive drinking and sunshine. All environmental causes (on-the-job exposure, general pollution, food additives) are linked to about 6 percent ; dumps belong in this category.

But, politically, we're uncomfortable with such distinctions. The same individualism that demands the freedom to run huge personal-health risks—smoking, for example—also insists that much smaller risks not be imposed on us against our will or knowledge. We have boundless sympathy for innocent victims. Superfund reflets this bias, as well as another: We often fear the unknown more than the known.

Like nuclear power, chemical dumps inspire fears that defy hard evidence—and with some cause. We don't know all the long-term effects. Even the National Cancer Institute's list of cancer sources is a simplification; it minimizes the interaction of personal habits, the environment and genetics. More important, the ultimate danger of chemical dumps is the slow contamination of the groundwater that supplies more than half our drinking water. But dumps aren't the only pollutant, and the extent of groundwater pollution is unclear.

How much should we spend on Superfund? The administration has proposed a five-year, $5.3 billion program, arguing that there isn't scientific staff to handle more. The Senate is considering a $7.5 billion total; and the House, a $10.1 billion program. It's easy to say, "Spend enough to assure safety." But how safe is safe? Enormous sums spent to cure vastly exaggerated problems or to produce modest results are worse than wasted: They may divert attention—and funds—from more pressing problems.

The messiness of environmental regulation reflects this massive uncertainty and inevitable imperfection. The risks of modern technologies are both unavoidable and imprecise. Our ignorance poses opposite evils: Of not spending enough and suffering environmental revenge, or of wasting huge amounts to cater to uninformed public hysteria. We want clear answers when few exist and utopian solutions when none is possible.

CONGRESS SHOULD ECHO THE UNITED NATIONS ON THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, last month a committee of the United Nations published a report making explicit reference to the massacre of over a million Armenians by the Ottoman Empire in 1915. Listed with other atrocities as an act of genocide, the report clearly recognizes what we in the Congress have yet to state: that the Armenian genocide was a fact, and one deserving of our strongest condemnation.

On April 24, 1915, Armenian members of the Ottoman Parliament, leaders of the community, and other prominent Armenians were taken from their homes and murdered. What followed was the systematic murder of well over a million other Armenians; the few who were able to escape the country were the only survivors. Some of those people managed to escape to the United States.

The Turkish Government has consistently denied that a genocide occurred in 1915. Their refusal to acknowledge the atrocities against the Armenian community continues to cause suffering, both for the sympathetic people of Turkey and for the Armenian community around the world. Surely the United States should not be party to perpetuating such horrendous myth.

In 1984 the House of Representatives called for the designation of April 24, 1985, as "A National Day of Remembrance of Man's Inhumanity to Man." This year again, we have tried to achieve such recognition from the Congress. To date, the effort has failed. Why should we continue to postpone recognition of this horror? Why won't the Congress stand as forthrightly as the U.N. committee in accepting a horrible truth and committing ourselves never to let it happen again?

Mr. Speaker, the United Nations has spoken as it should. The facts continue to speak for themselves. It is time for Congress to lend its voice to this collective judgment and pass the resolution condemning the Armenian genocide.

MIRED IN THE SUPERFUND SWAMP

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, House Members will shortly be considering Superfund legislation, H.R. 2817, reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Just as soon as action is completed by the other committees of jurisdiction, over the course of the next several weeks, we will be prepared to seek a rule and bring the measure to the House floor.

The bill reported by the committee will serve well to do the absolutely essential job of cleaning up our Nation's hazardous waste dumps and protecting public health. The bill expands the program, increases the authority of the EPA as well as of the States, and provides $10 billion over the next 5 years for the purpose.

I am confident that the majority of the Members of the House will agree with the 31 of 42 Members on the Commerce Committee who voted 31 to 10 in favor of our Superfund bill. That does, of course, constitute a majority of three to one, and it consists of a majority of both parties.

The Members should also be aware of editorial support for H.R. 2817, shown by both the New York Times (August 5) and the Washington Post (August 11). I commend their respective editorials to the attention of my colleagues:

[From the New York Times, Aug. 5, 1985]

MIRED IN THE SUPERFUND SWAMP

After five years, Superfund is still a daunting swamp of disappointment and discord. The Federal program to clean up abandoned toxic-waste dumps is due to expire, but Congress and the Administration cannot agree on how to renew it. James Florio, one of Superfund's authors, says a new House bill "isn't worth passing." Senator Dole has refused to bring a Senate committee's bill to floor vote. E.P.A. Administrator Lee Thomas fears the program's disruption if Congress cannot agree.

Why has progress been so slow? So many hazardous-waste sites pock the land that just cataloguing them is a major task. The Environmental Protection Agency has found 19,000 so far, and is still counting. Of the 800 designated for priority attention, only 10 have been completely cleaned up. When Superfund I expires in September, after $1.6 billion and five years' work, it'll have done a pygmy's job on a Superman's labor.

To make Superfund II do better, the Senate Environment Committee would increase its five-year budget to $7.5 billion, the House Energy and Commerce Committee to $10 billion. More money is surely needed, but some of the provisions environmentalists are pressing on Congress militate against efficiency.

Letting citizens sue polluters or the E.P.A. would only inspissate the logjam of litigation. Writing strict deadlines of the sort that stimulated action by E.P.A. on other issues might mire it only further in the wastes of Superfund. The House should follow its committee in voting down these complexifying provisions.

There are problems enough in deciding the basic issues of Superfund II, like where the money's coming from. Superfund I was funded by a tax on oil and raw chemicals, with the argument that these were the source of most toxic chemicals in the dumps. The oil and chemical industries assert, probably with reason, that they cannot afford an increase in this tax. Since a broad range of manufacturers and municipalities are among the dumpers, a general excise tax on manufactures might be a fairer source of revenue.

Fine, but the Administration has threatened to veto any Superfund bill based on such a new tax. That leaves a waste-end tax, which has the theoretical advantage of discouraging toxic-waste generation. But the more it succeeds in that goal, the less money this tax will raise. Also, it penalizes those who now go to the expense of disposing of waste properly, to pay for the sins of those who recklessly created the abandoned dumps.

Another problem is posed by the standards of cleanup. Leaving a site pristinely clean of toxics would be ideal, but that costs a lot more than just reducing the immediate health hazard. Which raises another question: Just what is the health hazard? Dumps that ooze carcinogenic chemicals into the air and ground water pose a clear risk to the millions of people who live around them. But no one yet knows how great a risk.

All these unknown suggest that breakneck speed and maximum budgets should not be the only criteria in restructuring Superfund. Efficiency and consistency also matter. Reducing the seepage of funds into lawyers' pockets would help: At present E.P.A. spends as much on litigation as in cleaning up a site. It would also help to stop transferring waste from one site to another with no ultimate benefit.

Dumping too much money and complexity into Superfund II before the basic issues are resolved may only set fiscal waste in pursuit of toxic waste.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 11, 1985]

NEXT STEP ON SUPERFUND

Congress is finally being driven by the calendar to take some action on the expiring Superfund program to clean up buried toxic wastes. The deadline is Sept. 30; that is when the existing five-year-old authority expires. The House Energy and Commerce Committee produced its usual entertaining swordplay and great showers of sparks just before Congress went on its summer vacation. It reported out a Superfund bill 31 to 10. The losing 10, all Democrats, denounced the bill as a cowardly retreat; the winning 31 hailed it as a statesmanlike advance. The subject is techical, the rhetoric was overblown, and it is hard to know whom to believe.

The Superfund was created in 1980. It was Congress' response to Love Canal. It is one of a number of broad regulatory efforts that Congress has ordered up in recent years to combat chemical poisoning. Most were enacted with a much greater sense of urgency than an appreciation of the technical difficulties involved. In the case of the Superfund, there is still not agreement even on where and how many are the dumps that need to be dealt with. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates 2,000 dumps across the country will be found so dangerous they will need to be cleaned up. The General Accounting Office estimates 4,000; Congress' Office of Technology Assessment, 10,000. There is no agreement, either, on how to approach them. Should the agency do a little work on a lot of sites or a lot or work on a few? How much should it seek to clean up any one site; how clean is clean? Can wastes be chemically neutralized? Burned? It is not always known what is in a dump. Can leaking dumps be walled off? Or should wastes be removed, and then where? Is this not just a transfer of risk? What guarantees can there be that new dumps won't someday leak like old?

Well-disposed experts disagree on all these issues. They are beyond Congress' attention span and competence. There are equally sharp disputes over the equity issues involved: who should be liable, who should pay? There is also a heavy overlay of political distrust that clouds these problems. The Superfund program was at the center of the fight over politicization of EPA in the first Reagan term.

The fight last month in Energy and Commerce was basically over how much to trust and how much to instruct EPA. Environmental groups and the losing Democrats favored a bill like one the House passed last year (it died in the Senate). They would force EPA to start work on a certain number of sites each year (serious work has started on only about 300 so far), and spell out cleanliness standards. The majority gave the agency more room to maneuver.

The bill must now go to three other House committees. The Senate also has yet to act; a bill has been awaiting debate there since mid-June. There is talk of a simple extension of current law if Congress cannot act by the expiration date. Some would make it a year's extension, so that the issue would come up in an election year. That kind of deferral of decision has become almost a way of life in Congress in recent years. It is a weak way to govern. The bills in both houses would greatly expand the Superfund, from the $1.6 billion of the last five years to either $7.5 billion (Senate) or $10 billion (House) the next five. That expansion should not be postponed. And the bill that came out of Energy and Commerce seems to us good enough. There is a limit to how much Congress can usefully force EPA's hand in this complex field.

LATIN AMERICAN DEMOCRACIES SUPPORT CONTADORA

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, as the situation deteriorates in Central America, several of our neighbors to the south have decided to join together to support and provide a new impetus to the efforts of the Contadora nations. The Presidents from Argentina, Brazil, Peru, and Uruguay decided to create a support group in order to provide new blood to the Contadora process. This initiative on the part of the new democracies in Latin America resulted from their concern that a political solution is losing ground in the region and their apprehension that other powerful forces in the hemisphere are actively undermining the Contadora process.

I am submitting for the RECORD a copy of the press release issued by the Ministers of Foreign Relations of the Contadora Group and those of the support group after their meeting in Cartagena, Colombia, on August 24-25, 1985.

PRESS RELEASE ISSUED BY THE MINISTERS OF FOREIGN RELATIONS OF THE CONTADORA GROUP AND THOSE OF THE SUPPORT GROUP, INTEGRATED BY ARGENTINA, BRAZIL, PERU AND URUGUAY

[Unofficial translation]

The Ministers of Foreign Relations of Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela met in Cartagena de Indias, August 24 and 25, 1985, with their colleagues of Argentina, Brazil, Peru and Uruguay, on invitation from the President of the Republic of Colombia, Belisario Betancur, with the firm resolution to consider the forms of support that the latter countries' governments will give to the peace endeavors in Central America being made by the Contadora Group. This decision stems from their determination to strengthen by actions the support they have granted Contadora to this date. The creation by these countries of a mechanism of support to Contadora constituties, in this sense, a new expression of the political will and of the cooperating potential of Latin America to tend to regional problems according to its own perspective.

The meeting confirmed the serious concern existing among the Latin American countries regarding the crisis in Central Amerca, and also confirmed the decision to strengthen by specific actions and by a strong regional unity the effort of diplomatic negotiation being made by the Contadora Group. Fundamental questions are being debated today in Central America affecting that region's free and independent democratic development. This conflict will have a bearing on the political and social stability of all Latin America if a peaceful and negotiated solution is not found.

For this reason, the Ministers underlined that it is not a question of looking for temporary solutions or allowing incidental excuses to divert attention from the crucial problems of the Central American crises. The question is to find basic and permanent solutions to the essential conflicts of the region. The Secretaries stated that any actions towards peace should be undertaken with a view to the future and in accordance with the objectives of solidarity, independence and justice, which have been the permanent goals of the Latin American peoples. The time factor is essential in the search for these solutions.

Argentina, Brazil, Peru, and Uruguay began within this context of their operation as a mechanism of support to the Contadora Group, which will carry out the following tasks:

Systematic exchange of information, in order to enrich the evaluation of the Central American problems and to identify measures that will contribute to their solution.

Consultation, in order to facilitate the coordination of diplomatic actions that encourage Contadora's negotiation process.

Diplomatic endeavors to seek support for the Contadora Group from:

The Central American governments

The governments of countries with ties and interests in the region

Other governments committed to the peaceful solution of the regional conflict

International organizations, especially the UNO and the OAS

To promote the prompt conclusion and signing of the Contadora Act for peace and cooperation in Central America as the legal instrument that establishes the political commitments of understanding in the region.

To foster the effective observance of this Act of Contadora.

The Ministers:

(A) Agreed on their observation that the worsening of regional conditions makes it necessary for the agreements contained in the Contadora Act for peace and cooperation in Central America to be signed. They also thought it indispensable to encourage the other actions defined by the Contadora Group in its meeting of July 21st and 22nd, 1985, in order to avoid a generalized conflict which would seriously affect the states in the region and would have repercussions in the entire hemisphere.

(B) Stated their conviction that the solution to the Central American problems cannot be attained through violence but through dialogue and political and diplomatic negotiation, as has been permanently proposed by the Contadora Group. It is not a question of substituting the prerogative of any country to do its will but, on the contrary, of presenting feasible alternatives which would offer reasonable security and allow fair, effective and longlasting agreements.

(C) Coincided in that it is indispensable to deactivate the most dangerous real and potential conflicts which are now seen, recognizing that these conflicts are rooted in economic and social inequality and in structures restricting the freedom of popular expression and participation in the political processes that gather the essential aspirations of every society.

(D) Underlined the fact that the endeavors of the Contadora Group are in their entirety aimed at promoting commitments, both in political issues and in questions of security and cooperation towards development, and at avoiding the insertion of the regional conflict in the East-West confrontation.

(E) Coincided in the importance and the need for the countries with ties and interests in the region to make a real contribution to overcome the problems existing in this troubled zone of our continent.

(F) Examined the dramatic deterioration suffered by the Central American economies in the last years, because of factors resulting from international conditions which have been particularly damaging for these countries, and which have been dramatically exacerbated by the political and social unrest which the region is experiencing.

(G) Agreed that the economic crisis and the political crisis are interrelated, for which reason it is necessary to make simultaneous progress towards peace and the reduction of political tension, on the one hand, and towards economic reactivation on the other.

The Ministers of Argentina, Brazil, Peru and Uruguay reiterated their conviction that the negotiating endeavor of the Contadora Group is the only feasible road in attaining peace and reestablishing harmony and cooperation among the Central American states.

On the other hand, the Ministers of Colombia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela emphasized the importance of this new expression of Latin American solidarity which is the establishment of the group support to Contadora by the governments of four countries vigorously committed to the region's democratic life. They also expressed their special appreciation for this contribution.

The Ministers of Foreign Relations of Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, and Venezuela thanked the President of the Republic of Colombia, Dr. Belisario Betancur, for the guidelines in his opening address and his personal contribution in inaugurating the meeting. They also thanked the Government of Colombia for the hospitality they were granted during their stay in the historic city of Cartagena, which contributed to the successful development of the meeting.

TRADE IMBALANCE IS KEY ISSUE

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, appropriately, on Labor Day, the Fall River Herald News published an extremely well-reasoned editorial about the threat to American working men and women represented by our growing trade imbalance.

As in the past, the Herald News has expressed a very thoughtful point of view, with which I am in substantial agreement, in an extremely cogent way. I think the excellent argument the Herald News makes for changes in our trade policies is an important one and ought to be widely read:

CONGRESS REFLECTS PUBLIC WILL

After a month's vacation Congress returns to Washington and its woes tomorrow.

The month has not been wasted.

The senators and representatives have had a chance to find out what the folks back home are thinking and feeling.

They will return to the Senate or the House with a surer sense of public opinion, and this will doubtless guide them during the months ahead.

Those months will see some major decisions, especially in terms of federal expenses.

The government is in financial trouble, and Congress will have to do its share to straighten out the government's affairs.

Nevertheless, it has doubtless discovered that the public, by and large, is less worried about the federal deficit than it is about the damage imports on a large scale are doing to domestic industries.

New England has more than its quota of these damaged industries: textiles, apparel, shoes, even fish.

The region's senators and representatives have learned during the past few weeks that people are really worried about the future of these traditional industries.

What is more, they expect the government to help to salvage them.

This is not the same thing as conventional protectionism.

The public is aware that over all, free trade is more beneficial than protectionism.

But it feels, more or less obscurely, that something has gone seriously wrong with the processes of free trade, and that many American industries are the victims because of what has gone wrong.

They are beginning to realize that in many instances, the foreign industries that are exporting goods here at less than our firms can charge are being subsidized by their governments.

The Japanese government subsidizes its industries; so does the Canadian government, and these are only two.

The government of the United States does not.

Part at least of the unfair advantage foreign industries have here is the result of the subsidies they receive.

The current disastrous imbalance of trade is agitating the public to a degree that may well have surprised the senators and representatives.

They have been so concerned with budgetary problems and conflicts that they have underestimated the real distress of a great many persons whose jobs are threatened by the invasion of foreign goods.

It is this very real threat that is preoccupying the public rather than the budget or the national debt.

Because the senators and representatives have now been exposed to what the public is thinking and feeling, it seems likely that in the immediate future they will be pressing for revisions of our foreign trade policies.

They will be less concerned with deficits than quotas, and less concerned with revision of the tax laws than revision of the regulations governing the importation of foreign goods.

The vacation month will have been well spent if Congress comes back from it determined to do something to enable embattled American industries to survive.

The next few weeks will demonstrate whether Congress has paid attention to what it heard back home.

We must all hope it has.

HINGHAM, MA: 350 YEARS

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, in 1942, Eleanor Roosevelt authored "This Is America," a photographic study of the diverse elements that make up a typical American town. Of the thousands of small communities across our Nation, Mrs. Roosevelt selected the town of Hingham, MA—which this year celebrates its 350th anniversary—to depict as representative of America.

Enriching the town is an historical legacy that was Mrs. Roosevelt's principal reason for considering Hingham an exemplary American town. To describe Hingham's history is, in many important ways, to recount the story of America. The annals of American history contain numerous Hingham names and events. The economic, cultural and social forces that caused this country to progress from a colony, to an independent nation, to a highly industrialized society are mirrored in Hingham's past.

While American history textbooks may not contain his name, Peter Hobart was part of the remarkable migration of Puritans seeking freedom from religious persecution. In establishing what was then called Bare Cove, Hobart and his followers jointed other Boston area settlements in forming the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Two key revolutionary era figures, John Hancock and James Otis, had family roots in Hingham, and the town clerk, Benjamin Lincoln, a leading military associate of George Washington, received Cornwallis' sword at Yorktown. In the 1800's, the Hingham Anti-Slavery Society was part of the movement which led to a divided nation; in the ensuing Civil War, 80 townsmen died to preserve the Union. Twentieth century Hingham reaffirmed its commitment to the security of the Nation, its shipyard turning out vessel after vessel in the 1940's and its residents contributing to all major war efforts.

While Hingham's economy was similar to that of area communities, with a strong reliance on farming, fishing and related industries, commercial enterprises developed which were unique to the town. Its woodenware industry produced the famous Hingham bucket, among other household products and, some claim, the first toys made in this country. In addition, hammers and hatchets made by Joseph Jacobs at his metal works in South Hingham were sold all over the United States, South America, and Australia.

From a small village of farmers, fishermen, and craftsmen, Hingham has grown and prospered. To the credit of its residents, the town has done so without sacrificing the charm which Eleanor Roosevelt found so pleasing. We are reminded of its proud history every time we turn a corner. The Old Ship Church, Derby Academy, the many 17th, 18th, and 19th century homes which line Glad Tadings Plain and other streets, the Old Ordinary and other local landmarks made this town a community in which its residents understandably take great pride. It is with the same pride that I am privileged to represent the town of Hingham in the U.S. Congress. I am pleased to join the people of Hingham in commemorating 350 years and offer my best wishes for a successful celebration.

VOCATIONAL AGRICULTURE, EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION

HON. LARRY E. CRAIG

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, at a time when our society is questioning the ability of our educational system to train competent and progressive leaders for the future, it is refreshing to look at the success of the vocational agriculture programs. Offered in 8,300 schools, the program involves over 816,000 students training for careers in production agriculture and agribusiness.

Although the present rural economy might cause some to question the need for agricultural education, people are now recognizing that agriculture is much more than farming. It is our Nation's largest industry with assets over $1,030 billion. This is equal to 70 percent of the capital assets of all manufacturing corporations in the United States. Even though less than 3 percent of the population is involved in production agriculture, the industry has a profound impact on the economic health of our country. Agriculture and agribusiness employ 22.5 million people, which represents 22 percent of America's labor force. One farmer creates jobs for 5.2 nonfarm people in processing, transportation, marketing, retailing, and numerous other employment fields. Our country's food and fiber system accounts for over 20 percent of the total gross national product and historically has improved our balance of payments. The progress and stability of this important industry is dependent on educated and skilled individuals to meet the everchanging needs of the future.

Vocational agriculture is a nationwide instructional program operated at the secondary, postsecondary, and adult levels for students preparing for or already engaged in agriculture and/or agribusiness careers. Students participate in three major program components: Classroom and laboratory instruction, supervised occupational experience, and leadership development. Combined, these components provide students with the skills, technical information, confidence, and attitudes necessary for success in their career choice.

The strength of the program is centered around the teaching concept of "learning by doing." Students are instructed in the newest technologies and then can put these skills to work in practical problem-solving situations. Computer operations, genetic engineering, biotechnology as well as production agriculture, agribusiness training, mechanics, horticulture, conservation, and many other instruction areas are part of the typical vocational agriculture classroom. All are designed with each student's interest and career goals in mind. This promotes better understanding and attitudes toward school work and gives a clearer understanding of how this training will be of value in their career choice.

The Supervised Occupational Experience [SOE] Program involves cooperation with the private sector of the agricultural industry to provide students with on-the-job training and entrepreneurships. These experiences are related to, and strengthen the classroom and laboratory instruction. The responsibility, work habits, and financial training are all valuable learning tools of each personalized SOE Program. Classroom instruction is more meaningful if techniques learned can be implemented in the student's own moneymaking experience.

Leadership, citizenship, and personal development activities are also an important part of vocational agriculture instruction. Development of confidence, public speaking ability, and cooperation are all goals of the student organizations that play an active role in the entire program. Students participate in contests, awards, and recognitions which can develop outstanding leadership skills. At the high school level, students participate in the Future Farmers of America [FFA]; postsecondary students participate in the Postsecondary Agricultural Student Organization [PAS]; and adults participate in the Young Farmer Educational Association [YFA]. The success of all of these organizations lies in the strength of the high school vocational agriculture program. Students need this early exposure to the career opportunities in agriculture to begin planning for their future. Interest and enrollment in postsecondary and young farmer education, as well as the student organizations, generally begin with students previously exposed to vocational agriculture and the FFA in high school.

These organizations also enjoy active and enthusiastic support from agricultural business and industry. In 1984, over $1.9 million were voluntarily contributed to the Future Farmers of America foundation by individuals and businesses that were convinced of the value of vocational agriculture and the FFA. These students are also very active in building their local communities, working with civic leaders and local resources. FFA, PAS, and YFA chapters have originated and implemented active programs for community betterment and rejuvenation. Their attitude toward the building of our American communities can best be summed up in the FFA motto, "Learning to Do; Doing to Learn; Earning to Live; and Living to Serve."

This combination of classroom and laboratory instruction, supervised occupational experience, and leadership development has proved to be a very effective teaching method for thousands of young men and women looking for success in a career as well as life. The practical application of knowledge through the student's personalized ownership or Work Experience Program [SOE] allows the classroom to expand beyond the walls of the school building. Education is not an 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. operation, but a continuing process that should reach the students whereever they may be. The student organizations enhance this process, building the confidence and leadership qualities that our country is in need of today.

On next Tuesday, September 17, the FFA will honor the 50 State winners of the "Building Our American Communities" [BOAC] Program. The BOAC conference, sponsored by R.J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., will honor the national winner and State winners at a congressional luncheon. Just prior to the luncheon, the FFA State winners will participate in a brief congressional internship with their respective congressional representatives. This is only one of many examples of programs offered by vocational agriculture education.

Vocational agriculture is an important part of the entire educational process. It's success and strength comes from the fact that our Nation cannot do without agriculture and agribusiness. We need educated young men and women with the knowledge, leadership, and confidence provided through vocational agriculture. The futuristic approach to this quality education will benefit our youth and this great country for many years to come.

SAVING THE THIRD WORLD'S CHILDREN

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. YATRON Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss the critical problem of child health care in developing nations. Every day, approximately 40,000 children die in these countries. Fortunately, important progress in immunization and public-health techniques provide us with the means to significantly reduce this tragic figure. The U.N. World Health Organization and UNICEF have made tremendous contributions in this area and deserve our highest commendation and support.

I want to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article which appeared in the October 1984 Reader's Digest, which details the massive difficulties as well as the recent strides in addressing the child health care issue. As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I have been actively involved in efforts to improve child health care in developing countries and this subject will remain one of the highest priorities of the subcommittee.

The article follows:

SAVING THE THIRD WORLD'S CHILDREN

(By Stanley L. Englebardt)

From the window of a jet sweeping in over the Atlantic, the city of Dakar in Senegal looks like a tropical jewel. Highrise office buildings and luxury hotels frame a bustling port and sandy beaches. But there is ugliness behind the facade. For this is the gateway to an area of West Africa that the World Health Organization (WHO) describes as "among the poorest and most disease ravaged in the world"—where life is assaulted by tuberculosis, tetanus and ever-recurring epidemics of polio, yellow fever, diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough) and measles.

These are all preventable diseases, long since conquered in the West. Why are they still endemic in so many poor countries? "Primarily because of problems in delivering the needed vaccines," says Dr. Jonas Salk, developer of the first polio vaccine. Inoculating youngsters with the triple vaccine to combat diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus (DPT), for instance, usually requires three injections a month apart, plus a booster shot a year later. When you add in hostile climate and terrain, a scarcity of doctors, tribal superstitions, and malnutrition that lowers resistance to disease, you get some idea of the difficulties.

Now this is changing. Recent advances in vaccinology make it possible to piggyback four inoculations at a time. Pilot programs with local vaccination teams in Upper Volta (now known as Burkina Faso), Senegal and Mali have shown, says Dr. Salk, that "the science and technology exist to save the lives of five million children a year by 1990."

BEDROCK PROBLEMS

Before coming to West Africa I'd heard that the high infant-mortality rate—about 150 deaths in every 1000 births—was taken for granted by the people. But statistics don't prepare you for the sight of a young mother tenderly holding her enervated child and the anguish on her face as the child dies. "When we have the means of preventing it, to allow forty thousand children to die like this every day is unconscionable," says James P. Grant, executive director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

Between 1950 and 1970, WHO, UNICEF and other aid agencies have helped to reduce infant- and childhood-death rates in poor countries by a third. Since then, however, the figures have improved little, even deteriorating in some areas.

Why? Many earlier efforts concentrated on cities, where logistics are easier and results come quickly. But about 80 percent of West Africans live in rural bush country, and these people remained relatively untouched by Western health efforts.

Then, in the mid-1970s, the worst drought of the century gripped the Sahel area; the famine continues, driving death rates still higher. Even in areas where foreign-aid programs have been active, there remain many basic health problems. Open sewers run through the streets of Dakar. In Mali only 6½ percent of the population has access to potable running water. Upper Volta has only 127 doctors and two general and three local rural hospitals for its seven million people, and while I was in its capital, Ouagadougou, a yellow-fever epidemic claimed 286 victims in the south. "The epidemic will just have to burn itself out," a government health official told me. "We haven't the means to do anything about it." Add to these bedrock health and sanitation problems a more than 80-percent illiteracy rate, chronic food shortages, per-capita incomes among the world's lowest, and it's hard to see how headway can be made.

However, recent social and scientific breakthroughs offer some hope. "Simple techniques already exist to save half of the forty thousand children who die each day," says UNICEF's Grant. The pilot programs in Senegal, Mali and Upper Volta, which involve thousands of children, are one example of how immunization can bring a decrease in mortality rates.

"We're not unaware that health in developing countries is part of a chain of social and economic problems," says Dr. Philippe Stoeckel, director of the French-based Association pour la Promotion de la Médecine Préventive (APMP). "Nevertheless, breaking just one link of this chain can have dramatic impact."

FIGHTING A WITCHES' BREW

The seeds of this effort were first sown in 1955 when Dr. Salk introduced his killed-virus vaccine against polio. Then in 1957 virologist. Dr. Albert Sabin introduced a live-virus vaccine administered on a sugar cube.

The Sabin vaccine found a ready market around the world, and in many developing countries it minimized the need for trained medics. But, despite its efficacy, polio epidemics were still occurring several years later in the Third World.

One reason was various problems in delivering the vaccine to so many children. Another reason had to do with temperature. With uncertain refrigeration, many vaccines and drugs lose their potency. In addition, it is thought that the intestinal tract of most Third World people contains a witches' brew of viruses that may, in some cases, work against the attenuated viruses of vaccines.

One possible alternative was to give a mixture of both live- and killed-virus vaccine. But there was a Catch-22. Producing the killed Salk vaccine involved culturing the virus in monkey-kidney tissue. Supplying vaccine for millions of children a year would require sacrificing virtually an entire species of monkey—unacceptable environmentally and financially expensive.

The need was to increase vaccine production and lower costs. Traditionally, vaccine viruses have been "an expanded vaccination program protecting all children in the developing would against infectious diseases." By 1979, however, it was apparent that money and good intentions weren't enough. "We'd set up shop in a centrally located town," recalls Dr. Stoeckel, "and spread the word." Mothers and children would show up for the first session, and most would come back a month later for the second; but for the third and fourth inoculations there'd be few returnees. So the program never immunized enough people to prevent epidemics.

With a two-shot schedule and the ability to combine vaccines, though, this stumbling block has been removed, says Dr. Stoeckel. He is not in charge of a pilot program in the Kolda district of Senegal, which was set up by the APMP with international support. The vaccine-delivery system for the program had to be handled by Senegalese who could carry on after the foreigners had left.

ON THE ROAD

Kolda is a microcosm of the Sahel, where less than half a million people are spread thinly over thousands of square miles. During a two-to-three-month farming season, the villages are abandoned for isolated thatched-roof huts on the edge of fields where an entire family tends the crops.

"We couldn't travel at this time as it was also the rainy season," says Dr. Stoeckel. "So we concentrated on two vaccination sessions, one before and one after the four wet summer months."

Earlier efforts had operated out of fixed health centers. But this rarely reached rural children, so mobile teams were recruited by the APMP. With most shots administered by needlleless jet guns, careful sterilization procedures weren't needed.

Typically, a team has four members: a leader with paramedical experience who administers the one intradermal shot by BCG for tuberculosis and monitors any reactions; a midwife or nurse who explains to the mothers why it's important for the children to return, as well as how to improve family health and nutrition; a driver-mechanic; and a scout who rides ahead to get the village chieftain to assemble the families. Each of these people is also trained to give jet-gun injections.

The first team branched out in Kolda in the February-June period of 1980; a second in 1981; a third in 1982. Each team vaccinated as many as 300 to 500 children a day. Follow-up studies showed that 90 percent of the targeted population had been reached at least once. Blood samples confirmed that the children had developed antibodies against the illnesses.

"It is now imperative to take the next step," Dr. Salk said after seeing the results. "And that's immunization of all children in the developing world." Slowly the realization of that ambitious goal is beginning to take place.

SHOOT-OUT IN KOLDA

The morning after my arrival in Dakar, I met with Dr. Martin Schlumberger. A French tropical-medicine specialist now in charge of the APMP program in West Africa, he covers vast distances in a single-engine airplane. "Pack lightly," he told me. "We'll take off early tomorrow for a look at how it's going."

After a stop in Sedhiou, we flew on to the town of Kolda, whose dirt streets and one-room buildings are under a perpetual haze of smoke caused by cooking meals over wood fires. There was also the unsettling sight of rats scavenging at the hills of millet heaped up as a hedge against famine. "They'll get a quarter of it," our driver said, "and we'll have the rest."

But years of attention by various aid groups have left their mark on Kolda. The town has an elementary school, a rehabilitation hospital for malnutrition victims and a well-stocked clinic where a nun, trained as a nurse, does everything short of major surgery.

Word of the vaccination session brought a big response. At 8 a.m., when we arrived at the site, about 150 women, each carrying an infant in a cloth sling and holding one or two others by the hand, were already queued up. Many had walked miles to get there and would wait two or more hours in a shrinking patch of shade for their turn.

Their first stop was a table where a nurse issued vaccination cards for children getting their first inoculations and checked the cards of those back for the second round. Many cards had been so gnawed by rats they were no longer decipherable, so the nurse simply checked the baby's arm for a needle mark.

The next stop was the vaccination tables. At the first one, the team leader gave BCG-tuberculosis shots to first-timers between 3 months and 8 months of age; at the second, another team member used a jet gun to deliver DPT-polio vaccine into the children's buttocks.

Second-session children, between 9 months and 14 months old, received two jet-gun injections concurrently. With a nozzle pressed against each buttock, a team member released DPT-polio booster into one side and combined measles and yellow-fever vaccines into the other.

Pregnant women also received tetanus injections. "When a child is born in West Africa," explained Dr. Schlumberger, "the medicine man rubs dirt on the umbilicus"—an open invitation to tetanus.

At 2 p.m., more than 400 children had been processed, and exhausted team members dismantled the jet guns, packed away the syringes and loaded the trucks.

FIRST STEP

During the next five days we touched down at a half-dozen towns across West Africa where similar operations are getting under way. Thanks to the new technology, the cost of these campaigns has been cut drastically in the past two years. The new measles vaccine, for example, is now less than ten cents a dose, and the combined DPT-polio killed-virus vaccine about 50 cents per dose. It all works out to between $5 and $15 per patient contact.

Perhaps the most unexpected result is the effect on population growth. Studies in areas where various programs have reduced infant mortality reveal that population-growth rates have fallen to among the lowest in the developing world. Parents can now confidently produce the number of children they want, rather than compensating for those who die.

What I saw in West Africa was only a beginning. About 103 million children are born in the developing countries every year, and few of them get any health care. Reaching all these youngsters wil be a massive and frustrating job.

Yet, clearly, the new vaccination strategy is taking hold. "There are no longer any scientific or technological limits to mass immunization," says Dr. Salk. "All that remains to be done is to put all this on a larger scale and apply it."

CONSUMER SAVINGS PROTECTION ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Consumer Savings Protection Act of 1985 to require banks, savings banks, and savings and loans to obtain Federal deposit insurance.

Recent events in Ohio and Maryland make it clear that depositor confidence is based on the perception that a strong insurance fund stands ready, no matter what, to protect the safety of their deposits. In both States, consumers lost confidence in the adequacy of a private insurance fund to safeguard their deposits when the failure of a single institution completely drained the fund of its reserves. I believe unequivocally, that Federal deposit insurance must be required in order to protect consumers' savings and maintain consumer confidence in depository institutions generally.

Clearly, depository institutions are fundamentally different from other businesses and therefore, they must be treated differently. For one thing, they are vested with a high degree of public trust in addition to being instrumental to our national economy and to the conduct of monetary policy. Moreover, banks have an important public purpose. In addition to being intimately connected with the public interest, depository institutions are responsible for meeting the credit and deposit needs of the community in which they are chartered to serve. The operating condition of the institution and the ability of an insurance fund to protect consumers' savings cannot be the subject of doubt or suspicion.

The experience in Ohio and Maryland demonstrated that once an institution suffers heavy losses a chain reaction can begin in which doubt among consumers about the ability of the insurance fund to cover the losses can quickly erode the public's confidence in the safety of their money at other similarly insured institutions and soon a panic begins. Such erosion in confidence can have a profound effect not only on the local community, but also on the region and even on the international money markets.

If all the depository institutions in Ohio and Maryland had been federally insured, the outcome would have been different and consumers would not have gone through the trauma of thinking they were wiped out. Federally insured institutions that fail are generally merged or bought by another institution, oftentimes without an interruption in service. Moreover, Federal insurance funds are backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government.

Unless Federal deposit insurance is required, it is possible the terrible experience in Ohio and Maryland will be repeated elsewhere.

The Consumer Savings Protection Act would provide consumers the best deposit insurance possible.

The Consumer Savings Protection Act is relatively straightforward. It requires banks, savings banks, and savings and loans to apply for Federal deposit insurance within 90 days and to obtain Federal deposit insurance within 2 years. An institution chartered after the enactment of this bill must be federally insured. Additionally, the bill will facilitate a Federal-State partnership to protect deposits at nonfederally insured institutions while these institutions await Federal deposit insurance coverage.

Although Ohio and Maryland have enacted laws that require their State chartered depository institutions to be federally insured, there still are 589 institutions in 8 States with $23.2 billion in deposits that are not federally insured. Enactment of the Consumer Savings Protection Act would bring these institutions and, more importantly their customers' deposits, under the protective cover of Federal deposit insurance backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government.

Mr. Speaker, the disruption caused by the failure of confidence in two private deposit insurance funds, I believe, makes it abundantly clear that in order to provide the maximum protection to depositors and to maintain order and trust in our depository institutions, banks, savings banks, and savings and loans must be required to have Federal deposit insurance. For that reason, I introduced the Consumer Savings Protection Act of 1985. I commend the legislation to my colleagues' attention and ask that they give it their support.

BALANCE THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE FED

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, it has become obvious over the past several years just how key a role the Federal Reserve Board plays in shaping this Nation's economy.

Every word uttered by Fed Chairman Volcker is turned inside and out for nuances and hidden meanings. His words and actions can cause the value of the dollar to soar or to drop, affect the performance of the stock market, and influence the general direction of the economy.

The monetary policies of the Federal Reserve, perhaps more than any other single factor, are responsible for determining interest rates and the availability of credit. These policies can virtually make or break any sector of the economy; we have seen in recent years just how Fed policies have helped determine the fate of countless small business owners and farmers.

Section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act provides that: "In selecting the members of the Board of Governors . . . the President shall have due regard to fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial and commercial interests, and the geographical divisions of the country."

Unfortunately, recent Presidents have ignored the requirements of the law. Almost without exception, the last 25 appointees to the Board of Governors have been from the financial community or worked in the public sector. None have been from agriculture, and precious few have had significant private sector business experience.

In the coming months, the President will have the opportunity to appoint two new Governors. I believe he should look outside the financial community in filling those vacancies.

Today I am introducing a resolution expressing the sense of the House that the President should consider the appointment of individuals with demonstrable experience in the small business and agricultural sectors when filling the forthcoming vacancies on the Board of Governors.

Why single out these two sectors? No other sectors of the economy are as dramatically affected by Federal Reserve policies as these.

Agriculture is a unique industry and has been treated as such throughout our history. Its markets operate in a fundamentally different manner from other producing industries. American agriculture is responsible for several million jobs and is a $20-billion element on the postive side in our balance of trade.

Small business is not a monolithic entity, but rather it represents housing, services high technology and manufacturing. It creates about 60 percent of all new jobs in this country, represents about half our Nation's total employment, and is responsible for a great deal of technical innovation. All but about 2 percent of our Nation's businesses are classified as small business.

Agriculture and small business have one thing in common. Both are acutely sensitive to changes in monetary policy. Both small business and agriculture are heavily reliant on debt financing. Unlike large corporations, few, if any, small business or agricultural concerns have internal sources of funds. They are unable to weather periods of recession and high interest rates the way larger firms can.

The many thousands of small business bankruptcies several years ago and the severe farm credit and income problems faced by agriculture today are proof that these sectors of the economy live on the very margins of profitability. They are extremely sensitive to interest rates and dependent upon credit for their day-to-day operations.

The legislation I am introducing does not require agriculture and small business participation on the Federal Reserve Board of Governors. Section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act already makes it clear that the membership of the Board should contain a balance of interests. This resolution simply reinforces the original intent of Congress at a time when new appointments to the Board of Governors are imminent.

Congress would not be a representative institution if all its Members were lawyers from New York. The Federal Reserve Board cannot be fully effective or responsive to our diverse economic interests as long as virtually all its members represent the same professional background and, in many respects, outlook. The addition of small business and agricultural members to the Board of Governors would provide those vital sectors of our economy with representation on a body that is in large measure responsible for their success or failure.

I urge my colleagues to join me in sponsoring this legislation.

BERWYN PRINCIPAL GIVES INSPIRING TALK TO STUDENTS

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, this time of year when our students are returning to school is a perfect time to reflect upon the importance of education to the future of our country. I am sure my colleagues will agree with me that education is vital to the well-being of our Nation and that we can only successfully achieve a good educational system by the work of dedicated and inspired educational leaders at the local level.

Recently in my Congressional District, the Komensky School of Berwyn, IL, had a graduation for its fifth grade students since these students will be moving to another building. At an assembly of these students and parents, the principal of Komensky School, Mrs. Diane D. Pikcunas, gave a very inspiring talk on the importance of learning and the significance of education.

She reviewed the progress of the students and highlighted memorable learning experiences. Focus was on nine of the students receiving the Presidents' Academic Fitness Award, a program started by President Reagan to recognize outstanding academic achievement, and students who received the President's Physical Fitness Award. The tone was positive for participation in science and spelling contests.

It is the type of speech we need to encourage other educational leaders to give to students and parents to encourage a continuing interest and commitment to education for all. Her closing remarks, quoting from the words of Napoleon Hill, one of the founders of a philosophy of success and personal achievement, was uplifting as it urged students to set goals and plan actively to achieve these goals. The words in this speech can serve and should serve as a guide for these students at Komensky School as they enter onto another phase of their educational experience and for students in school systems in other areas of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of my colleagues to these words of Mrs. Pikcunas, principal of Komensky School in Berwyn, IL, and would like to enter this inspiring talk into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

ADDRESS TO KOMENSKY PTA AND 5TH GRADE GRADUATES

(By Mrs. Diane Pikcunas)

Good evening and welcome to the final PTA meeting of the year. This meeting is especially significant to me. It signals the close of my first year as an elementary principal. This meeting also means that I must say good-by to students that I have learned to love and understand. For many of these students Komensky is the only school that they have ever known. During their years here the teachers and staff of Komensky have always given their utmost to meet the academic, social, and emotional needs of the students. The students have reciprocated by achieving the best they can and by becoming Learners for Life.

For the next few minutes we will be taking a trip down memory lane to reflect on some of the highlights of the year 1984-85 and there have been some memorable moments. In September we published the first edition of the Lion's Tales, a name which was submitted by one of the Fifth Grade Class members. In the fall the Fifth Grade participated in a fund raiser to defray the cost of the George Williams Outdoor Education Program. Who can ever forget the three days spent in Lake Geneva on the George Williams College Campus? The 5 below zero temperatures, the tobaggan rides and tubing, being lost on a night hike, and Mrs. Pikcunas breaking a stack of dishes!! On this trip our students learned cooperation, independence, and responsibility. It was also a time for the students to meet their soon-to-be new friends from Hiawatha's Fifth Grade. It was a time for teachers and principals to interact with their students on a level that was not possible in the usual school environnment.

The Fifth Grade has been involved in many civic activities such as student guides for American Education Week, library aides and fluoride rinse assistants. Our Fifth graders are always ready to lend a helping hand.

The year was not all devoted to developing character and the Social Skills, the Fifth Grade also competed in the District-wide Spelling Bee and come in a very close second. Our Fifth Grade will also have 9 students receiving the President's Academic Fitness award. The academic fitness award recognizes students who have maintained a B+ or higher average for the past three years and who have scored in the 80th percentile or higher on a standardized test such as the Iowa Test of Basic Skills. Many of our Fifth graders participated in the First Annual Science Fair sponsored by the Komensky Science Club.

Komensky's curriculum does not neglect any aspect of the child's education. Our Cultural Arts departments develop appreciation of music and the fine arts as well as enhance the musical and artistic talents of the students. Many of our Fifth graders participated in the Festival of Arts through the District-wide chorus, District Junior Band or Art displays. Several of our students will also be receiving the President's Physical Fitness award from the Physical Education Department.

We hear that our Nation and our educational system are at risk. We hear that students are not prepared to survive in the future much less be successful. We hear that the student of today is exposed to a watered-down curriculum, and mediocrity is the standard. We need to look carefully and rationally at the threats to the public educational system before we assume the worst is true. From our walk down memory lane you can see that Komensky and District 100 are 100% committed to providing a quality education for the children of Berwyn.

We know that education has experienced a crisis, reform movement or national report every 10 years since 1890. Some of the past reform movements have had little if any important significance. The latest reform movement can impact and change education for the better if we analyze the system to see what works and what doesn't. We cannot continue to add more and more of the same to the curriculum, we must start with the basic question of "What do we want our schools to accomplish?" When I speak of "we", I mean not just educators but you as parents must have input and ownership in the goals of education. Commitment to education is needed from all members of the team. I suggest these general goals that Komensky has established as the direction for our educational system: 1) teaching the basic skills of reading and writing 2) teaching the computational skills necessary to arrive at reasonable mathematical answers 3) the development of citizenship through an understanding of our country and its values and finally 4) the development of motivated life long learners who know where they are going and will accept no less than excellence.

Educational reform, community involvement and parental support alone cannot alter the end product of education—we need you, as the learner, to be fully engaged in your educational process.

To the Class of 1988—as you leave Komensky, I want you all to take this final lesson with you:

You can achieve any goal you set for yourself if you have a direction and if you believe in yourself as we your teachers believe in you.

Let me close with this poem which contains the secret to success from Napoleon Hill, the author of Think and Grow Rich:

If you think you are beaten, you are
If you think you dare not, you don't
If you'd like to win, but you think you can't
It's almost certain that you won't win
If you think you'll lose, you're lost
For out in the world we find Success begins with your will
It's all a state of mind.
If you think you are out classed, you are You've got to think high to rise
You've got to be sure of yourself before
You can ever win the prize
Battles don't always go to the stronger or faster man
Battles are usually won by the Man Who Thinks He can.

SALUTE TO BARNEY E. HILBURN

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, on September 13, 1985, citizens and public officials in the city of Oakland, CA., will pause to pay tribute to one of its outstanding public servants, the Honorable Barney Hilburn. Mr. Hilburn has been an active leader in the civic and political life of this community since 1948. He served on the Oakland Board of Education from 1959 to 1985, having served three terms as its president. In this capacity, he led the Oakland schools through many difficult and fruitful periods, at all times being known for his wise and throughtful leadership, his calm demeanor, and his openminded consideration and assessment of opposing points of view. For this highly extraordinary contribution, the children of the city of Oakland, as well as its citizenry, owe him a profound and heartfelt debt of gratitude.

An attorney by profession and training, Barney Hilburn practiced law in this Capital during the early stages of his career, and later became an outstanding health and housing administrator in the county of Alameda and the city of Oakland. His leadership has been an inspiration to the entire community; I wish to extend to Barney Hilburn my personal expression of thanks; to express the shared sense of appreciation of the community for his efforts, and our very best wishes for a long and salubrious retirement.

H.R. 3253, NATIONAL COUNCIL ON ACCESS TO HEALTH CARE ACT

HON. W. HENSON MOORE

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I joined my colleague from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] in introducing H.R. 3253, a bill forming the National Council on Access to Health Care. This bill is another step towards insuring that all Americans benefit from the finest health care system in the world.

For a long time, I have focused on making health care more economically efficient, to bring down the exorbitant health care costs facing the American public. As the ranking minority Member of the Health Subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee in the 98th Congress, I led the push for the DRG system and the prospective payment system of reimbursement under Medicare and Medicaid. These were fundamental changes in the system that were effective means of containing the costs of health care.

We have been successful in our efforts to limit these costs. However, doctors, hospitals, clinics and other health care providers, in their drive to reduce costs, must be careful not to contribute to a growing problem—the problem of denial of access to a full range of health care services and treatment for America's poor. We must avoid falling into the trap of a two-tiered system of health care in this country—one level of care for those who can afford to pay, and a lower level of quality of care for those who can't. It doesn't do any good at all to limit medical service costs if the services are not made available to those who would benefit most from cost containment.

Every American has a right to access to the best quality health care available. I'm concerned whether the poor actually have access to the proper health treatment, and out of this concern we are presenting this proposal today. This National Council on Access to Health Care should help provide a comprehensive view of the long range effects of changes in today's health care system. It will also insure no one is forgotten when the time comes to make those necessary changes.

THE UAW CELEBRATES ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to salute the 50th anniversary of the United Automobile, Aerospace, and Agricultural Implement Workers of America [UAW], the most effective organization ever to dedicate itself to the rights of working people, to economic justice, to racial equality, and to the strengthening of our democratic form of government.

Over the last 50 years, the UAW has been an enormous force for political and economic progress. In its role as collective bargaining agent, the UAW has directly benefited millions of its members and retirees. Many millions of other workers, both union and nonunion, have benefited indirectly from the UAW's pioneering settlements with the auto industry, which raised wage levels, created pension plans, developed a strong seniority system, and set standards for health insurance which influence every other employer.

Together with its brother and sister unions, the UAW helped transform the standard of living for most of America's industrial workers from the poverty and hardship of the 1930's to middle-class levels today. Since the UAW first organized the employees of General Motors and Chrysler in the late thirties, the wages of auto workers have increased from less than $6 a day to more than $13 an hour, a 150-percent increase in real wages. In terms of paid vacation, pensions, insurance and other benefits, the gains have been even greater, since none of these benefits existed before the union demanded and won them. And those gains were not easy. They were won through visionary thinking, hard work, and sacrifice: Sacrifice like the 104-day strike that won the first pension at Chrysler in 1950.

The UAW's economic success for its members has been enormous, but its contributions to the dignity and noneconomic rights of working people have been equally great. When the UAW first began to organize in 1935, the automobile companies refused to recognize the union's existence or even its right to exist. Employees had no rights beyond what the foreman gave them. They could be fired for any reason or no reason at all, and had no right to appeal. If a foreman didn't like an employee's looks, his religion, his politics, the fact that he didn't bribe him, or the fact that a female employee refused him sexual favors, the foreman could fire him or her on the spot. Long before the civil rights laws or the recent changes in the employment-at-will doctrine, the UAW put an end to that kind of tyranny in the auto plants. The union's negotiated grievance procedures and the power of the strike assure that employment decisions are based on seniority and performance, not on the prejudice, corruption, or personality problems of supervisors.

The best measure of the change the UAW has wrought in the treatment of its members may be its recent Saturn agreement with the UAW. Fifty years ago, the UAW's founders were beaten, imprisoned, and killed for daring to challenge management's absolute power over its employees. Government troops and company guards manned machinegun nests that encircled the factories. Local police and hired thugs threatened, beat, and jailed UAW strikers who picketed for union recognition. Today, General Motors has agreed to give the UAW veto power over any management decision concerning the Saturn project. Employees who would have been wage slaves in the 1930's are comanagers today.

Ever since it was chartered in 1935, the UAW has been blessed with leaders who combined integrity and dedication to the union's members with intelligence, statesmanship, vision, and a willingness to fight for what they believed in. Every Member of Congress knows and respects the reputation of Walter Reuther, Leonard Woodcock, and Doug Fraser. And no one who knows him doubts that Owen Bieber will carry on their tradition.

The excellence of the union's leadership is a tribute to the UAW's democratic ideals and its practice of those ideals. The UAW's leaders are elected by its members; the union's contracts are ratified by its members; the union's strike votes are put to its members; and constitutional changes are made only with the consent of the members. From the shop floor up, the union's leaders do an effective job of representing the interests of their brothers and sisters or they are removed from office. The UAW's members have governed themselves and governed themselves well for 50 years.

Another of the UAW's great strengths is its broad view of its members' interests. The union's members and leaders realized long ago that what the Government does in Washington, DC, in State capitals, and in county and municipal offices throughout the Nation has a profound impact on the members' economic security, health, safety, and freedom. As a result, the UAW has been a political powerhouse, helping to elect officials at every level of government who understand and care about the needs and aspirations of working class Americans. The union's legislative department makes sure that every legislator knows the UAW position on every issue of importance to the membership, from labor law and Social Security to import quotas and job training programs.

The UAW's 1 million active members are white and black, Hispanic and Asian-American, men and women, young and old. They share a collective bond and collective ideals, among which the most important is the equality of all Americans under the law. The UAW's commitment to that ideal has kept the union in the forefront of the civil rights movement, fighting for the Voting Rights Act, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and the equal rights amendment.

Today, when unemployment is at recession levels, fierce international competition and the increasing export of American jobs to other countries make the UAW's strength, skill, and dedication more necessary than ever. The hundreds of thousands of auto workers, insurance company workers, agricultural implement workers, university workers, aerospace workers, government employees, and legal workers the UAW represents can be proud of their union and its role in protecting their jobs and their rights. Fifty years of struggle and success have proven the UAW to be a winner.

DEAN PHILLIPS: WAR HERO AND VETERAN'S ADVOCATE

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, cancer has taken the life of one of a much decorated Vietnam war hero and tireless veteran's advocate Dean Phillips.

During the early 1970's Dean was a well-known figure in Colorado. He was perhaps the No. 1, most vocal advocate of veterans' rights, especially those of the Vietnam veteran.

Dean knew of what he advocated. He served with the 101st Airborne Division in Vietnam and was awarded two Silver Stars, two Bronze Stars, the Purple Heart, and nine other decorations.

Dean advised and lobbied me on veterans' issues and I am forever grateful. He was a hero in war and a hero in peace.

[From the Stars and Stripes, Aug. 29, 1985]

VETERANS' ADVOCATE DEAN PHILLIPS DIES AUGUST 22

Dean K. Phillips, a highly decorated Vietnam veteran and an erstwhile advocate of veterans' rights, died of cancer at his home in Alexandria, Virginia on August 22.

Over the past decade Dean Phillips was a regular contributor to The Stars and Stripes on many critical issues affecting veterans. His articles on veterans' employment, veterans' preference, and judicial review of veterans were among the most informative and enlightening submitted to The Stars and Stripes.

From 1977 to 1984 Dean worked as an attorney with the Veterans Administration, with duties including liaison between the VA and veterans organizations and review of VA policy regarding veterans' benefits, veterans' preference and discharge. At the time of his death he was a lawyer with the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

His work for our nation's veterans took him to Capitol Hill where he often testified before congressional committees in support of Vietnam veterans' legislation; Dean was among the first supporters of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, a project he saw through to completion.

A native of Youngstown, Ohio, Dean joined the Army after his graduation from Ohio University. Before going to Vietnam in 1967, he completed parachute, Ranger and air assault schools. While in Vietnam, Dean served with the 101st Airborne Division as a paratrooper on long-range reconnaissance patrols.

As a testament to his bravery, Dean was awarded two Silver Stars, two Bronze Stars and the Purple Heart, given for war wounds.

Dean left Vietnam in 1968, determined to fight for the rights of those men, at the bottom of the nation's socio-economic ladder, who served in Vietnam.

He received his master's degree from Ohio University and his law degree from the University of Denver.

He began his work in behalf of veterans while still in Colorado. Active in the Colorado Board of Veterans Affairs and the National Association of Concerned Veterans, Dean participated in several lawsuits aimed at protecting veterans' rights.

Dean came to Washington in 1977 to work for the VA where he served as special assistant to the general counsel, special assistant to VA Administrator Max Cleland, and advisor to the Board of Veterans Appeals.

It was in the ensuing years before his illness that The Stars and Stripes came to know Dean Phillips, and the extent of his commitment to Vietnam veterans.

Twelve years after he left Vietnam, Dean applied for service as a Captain in the Army Reserves where he served as company commander of a Special Forces unit in Fort Meade, MD. In the past several years, Dean made four or five parachute jumps a month and trained with his unit for a month each year.

He is survived by his wife, Carla, and two children, Sharra and Frank, all of Alexandria; his parents, Frank and Helen Phillips, and a sister, Penelope Phillips, all of Youngstown; and a brother, Terry Phillips of Jamestown, Colo.

NEW CONCEPTS IN DEVELOPING ECONOMIC POLICY

HON. ELDON RUDD

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, we will soon be debating a continuing appropriations bill and possibly a comprehensive overhaul of our Tax Code. Every sector of the economy will be affected by our actions.

If we are to succeed in cutting Government spending, simplifying the Tax Code and making it more equitable, and setting the stage for long-term economic growth, we will have to begin rethinking the way we address economic issues to take into account the profound changes that have occurred in our economy in recent years.

In a recent speech before the Executives' Club of Chicago, the former chairman of Citibank, Walter B. Wriston, touched upon some of the new concepts we ought to consider in developing economic policy. Mr. Writson's insightful remarks, reprinted from the September edition of Harper's, are included below for the consideration of my colleagues.

OBSOLETE ECONOMICS

(From "Gnomons, Words and Policies," a speech given by Walter B. Wriston to the Executives' Club of Chicago on May 8. Wriston recently retired as chairman of Citibank.)

It's no secret that in the last few years some of our best economists have badly missed in predicting the direction of the American economy. The puzzle is why. Perhaps their mistakes are a result of using words and concepts that were developed decades ago to describe a very different kind of economy. In many cases, these are no longer applicable today.

One familiar word that needs to be reconsidered is "capital." A software program that will make its author millions of dollars may require a tirvial sum of money to create compared with the amount needed to start, say, a heavy manufacturing business. The knowledge capital stored in that software writer's head, however, is very substantial and very real. A strong argument can be made that this new kind of capital is more critical to the growth of the American economy than is money capital. But knowledge capital does not show up in the numbers economists customarily look at (or quote) when evaluating capital formation.

I am not claiming that money capital will cease to be important; I am, however, suggesting that the accumulation of knowledge capital in the last twenty years is every bit as important. We have little or no control over the natural resources within our borders, but we do have control over the educational and cultural environment that produces the men and women who will lead the world. If we want better economic forecasting and better policies, we must find a way to factor the growth of knowledge into our equations.

Another word much in the news is "productivity." How does America stack up in the global marketplace? Is America's productivity growing faster or slower than that of Japan or some other nation? Granted, these are important questions; but what does the word mean? Productivity, in the crudest sense, means output per man-hour. That's a useful enough concept in manufacturing, but what does it tell us in an information intensive age when the vast majority of our workers are employed in the service sector? Take the financial service industry. Once you get past counting the number of checks cleared per hour or the number of insurance claims paid, you move into the realm of the subjective. How do you measure a loan officer's productivity? By the number of loans he makes? By the size of the loans? By the number of his loans that are repaid on time? By the quantity of bad debt he creates?

Finally, let's consider "overall productive capacity," a concept which plays an important role in the formulation of monetary policy. Some economists argue that if industrial production is at, say, 85 percent of capacity, we are approaching the physical limits of output and thus are in danger of accelerating inflation. But industrial production currently employs only about 20 percent of American labor; there is an almost infinite capacity to expand in the nonindustrial sectors of our society. And while the proportion of workers employed in industry has sharply declined in recent years, there has been no corresponding drop in the volume of production. In 1960, the output of goods accounted for about 45 percent of our gross national product; it still remains in that range.

This relatively steady output in the face of a massive exodus of workers from industry raises the question of whether the government's figures on percentage of industrial capacity utilized have the same implications for inflation as they once had. It's not an accident that the capacity utilization index played a key role in leading some forecasters to overestimate inflation in the current economic expansion. Moreover, this index deals only with manufacturing, mining, and utilities—businesses which account for a shrinking share of U.S. industrial output. So the key question may be: Can we construct a more reliable measure for the kind of economy we now have?

Like the lines on Form 1040, every number used to measure our economy has its constituency. Many labor contracts are tied to one inflation index or another; each shift in the contents of the government's market basket affects millions of people. But in rethinking the way we describe the shifting elements that make up our economy, we should take a leaf from the political book of the world. While the globe itself has not changed, the lines on the map of the world have been redrawn and dozens of countries have been created. It would be folly to conduct our foreign policy on the basis of the geopolitical map of 1930. It may well be that to conduct our economic policy on the basis of words and concepts that were valid in the 1930s carries similar hazards for us today.

NEW RULES BY THE HEALTH CARE FINANCE ADMINISTRATION

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, during the August recess I held a hearing on Long Island in order to address a glaring injustice in our society's obligation to care for those with mental and physical impairments.

The hearing was the culmination of a chair of events that began in June on my mobile office. A constituent, John Czerniewicz, came aboard to relate a classic case of Government intervention gone awry. It seemed that a new set of Federal rules handed down by the Health Care Finance Administration [HCFA] to protect the safety of retarded individuals living in intermediate care facilities [ICF's] had instead threatened many of these individuals with reinstitutionalization.

Mr. Speaker, the core issue here is a concept known as self-preservation. The new HCFA rules state that ICF residents must be able to respond to fire emergencies in a totally independent manner, without any prompting whatsoever from the ubiquitous staff members at the ICF. If the residents could not react in the prescribed manner, they faced banishment from the family atmosphere at the ICF to the cold, heartless sterility of a State institution, while the ICF itself could be closed down.

First, it should be understood that these retarded residents must have shown some capacity to react to emergency warnings in order to have received admittance to the ICF. Second, State law in New York requires fire-safe construction methods far superior to those found in the average family dwelling. And third, as Mr. Czerniewicz himself told me:

It would be just as reasonable to remove the crossing guard at one of our primary schools and then deny admission to that school to any kindergartner who did not, without prompting respond correctly to the traffic signal as it changed.

In response to this overzealous rulemaking on the part of undoubtedly well intentioned Federal bureaucrats, I called together State and Federal officials, parents of ICF residents and local ICF staffers for a public hearing in my district on August 8. Prior to the meeting, I authored a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler, asking her to use her authority to allow New York State to implement more reasonable rules for ICF safety, as prescribed in the National Fire Prevention Association Life Safety Code. The letter was cosigned by virtually the entire New York congressional delegation.

At the hearing, I received poignant testimony from Mrs. Lita Cohen and Mr. Czerniewicz, both parents of ICF residents. For the illumination of my colleagues, I submit their testimony. I also submit a Newsday column by Ed Lowe, who effectively points out the result when good intentions run wild, and the innocent victims who can be caught in the crossfire.

Although my office has received no reply from Mrs. Heckler on this issue, it is clear from the commitment of people like Mrs. Cohen, Mr. Czerniewicz, and Mr. Lowe that this issue will not fade away:

STATEMENT BY LITA COHEN, PRESIDENT OF SOCIETY FOR GOOD WILL TO RETARDED CHILDREN, INC.

I am sorry that I could not be here today. However, since my son, Russell, was affected by the fire safety code regulations, I am aware of the difficulty other clients and their parents may face.

The present interpretation of the safety code regulation suggests some discrimination. We do not expect public school children to exit their classrooms during a fire drill without frequent verbal and/or physical prompts to those lag behind. Parents would be appalled if their children ran to exits without proper supervision. However, our retarded children are expected to exit during an emergency without any verbal or physical prompts. Why is so much more expected of our retarded children?

An intermediate care facility has staff on active duty 24 hours a day. Each house has several exits and a fire alarm box on the premises. This degree of safety seems sufficient. Therefore, the responsibility, in an emergency, should be with the staff to evacuate the clients as quickly as possible.

Every person should be allowed the dignity of some risk in their lives. No one of us is born with a guarantee in their hand, and a less than perfect human being should not spend their life in an overprotected environment. Our retarded children are human beings who deserve the dignity of risk in their lives.

STATEMENT BY JOHN ZERNIEWICZ

Congressman Mrazek, Ladies and Gentlemen: Having read the statement by Lita Cohen (appended), I must confess that I reread that last paragraph several times before the wisdom of her observation became clear to me—"the dignity of risk." It may begin the day your five year old goes off to school alone and crosses Jericho Turnpike for the first time holding no one's hand. Of course the Crossing Guard and traffic light reduce the risk to almost zero. From that time on, we know that for him there can be no freedom, no opportunity and no development without some risk. Knowing this, we help him develop the foresight to minimize the dangers, avoid the hazards and anticipate the problems.

With community placement, our mentally retarded children discover a new independence and freedom of movement and many opportunities for learning and development. They live like a family in a house like other houses, made of wood and filled with comfortable furniture and carpets and drapes. But they are at risk because all these things can burn, and when a house burns it can result in injury and death to the occupants. Is this an acceptable risk?

The State of New York believes that it is and has provided houses which have been built or modified to meet the strict requirements of the N.F.P.A. Life Safety Code. When my son spends the week-end at home with us, he is at greater risk because our walls and stairways are not of fire-resistant materials and finishes, we do not have a sophisticated alarm system or multiple exits, nor is anyone alert and on guard each night as we sleep, as is the case at Greenlawn and other State ICFs.

Parents believe it an acceptable risk because they have seen the great improvement in the mental and physical health of their children and would resent and resist any attempt to return them to the comparatively risk-free but sterile life in the concrete buildings of the institution.

That is why we parents are so distressed by a regulation which can determine the acceptability of the risk on a single, fallible criterion—the self-preserving response of a severely retarded person to a drill fire alarm, without any prompting or coaching by the staff. They did it this year, all ten residents, as a result of the hard work and persistence of the staff who trained them for weeks. But had any one of them failed, the penalty would have been banishment to the institution; and some may fail at subsequent tests because they are severely retarded and unpredictable. This is patently unfair for many reasons.

First of all, these residents all understand simple commands and are very cooperative. Anyone slow to respond to the bell will move with alacrity when a familiar voice booms, "let's go, Tommy!", and he'll go with as much self-preserving zeal as anyone answering to the bell.

Secondly, the requirement is unrealistic because the staff are with the residents all the time and would almost instinctively usher them all to immediate safety in the event of a fire, especially one occurring at night when the residents are sleeping.

But this observation leads to some disquieting questions about training and practice in life-saving procedures provided for the staff. Do they know what to do in case of fire? in smoke filled rooms? with panic stricken people? The Safety & Security Services have a pamphlet written to assist employees with information about fire prevention, reporting and evacuation but no notice of compulsory or voluntary training courses in these techniques.

Examination of the Life Safety Code Section on Means of Escape Requirements revealed a ruling which states that where buildings are protected by an automatic sprinkler system such as NFPA 13D, a second means of escape shall not be required. Since all our approved dwellings have such a second means of escape, addition of a sprinkler system would obviously improve the over all safety of the building.

The NFPA 13D sprinkler system is designed for one and two family dwellings and is quite inexpensive. Installation of this system in every community residence would undoubtedly make them safer by prolonging the escape time by at least ten minutes and provide other safety features such as controlling flashover, which is the sudden ignition of accumulated gasses in a room. A brief description of this system is appended.

Let us reduce the risks by every available means to a level that does not burden these severely retarded with more than their share of responsibility for their own safety and let them continue their lives in the community with dignity and self respect.

BEARING THE BRUNT OF LANGUAGE

(By Ed Lowe)

Nobody feels the power of language so much as its victims.

Russell Cohen, 23, lived for 14 years in a large and relatively impersonal institution where, as a profoundly retarded, non-verbal, male child, he learned next to nothing.

About a year and a half ago, and through a set of circumstances that his parents would later consider practically miraculous, the state moved him to a much smaller, infinitely more intimate, state-run, Intermediate Care Facility in Farmingdale, one he shared with only nine other retarded residents, and one where the staff was on duty 24 hours a day.

According to his mother, Lita, it took Russell about eight months to become adjusted to the smaller facility, to overcome his palpable fear of change, to begin to respond to the doting attention of his patient staff. "But then," said Lita Cohen, president of the Society For Good Will to Retarded Children, "Russell made more progress in that Farmingdale house than he had made in 14 years at the center. Since he's in the house, he's able to dress himself completely. He goes out to a program for six hours a day where he learns self-help skills, lessons he never had and tasks he never did before in his life.

"He's with this staff of people who are so loving and caring, so patient and wonderful, he's become a totally changed person," Lita Cohen said. "I see so many little changes, it's incalculable. When he got upset, he used to become self-destructive, self-abusive. He doesn't do that any more. When we visit him, he doesn't try to follow us out when we're leaving. He'll go back to the other residents. I get eye contact, a lot of eye contact, which I never got before. He seems much more aware of his surroundings. In this lovely Farmingdale house, he shares a room with another young man. Last time we visited, Russell escorted me into his room and sat down on the bed with me. I got the distinct feeling that he knew it was his room. That may not sound like much, but for Russell, it's practically a miracle in itself."

In February, some people who work in bureaus of the government held a meeting during which they discussed and ultimately sharpened some of the language that made certain health care facilities continue to be eligible for certain federal funds that eventually lent some certainly to lives such as Russell Cohen's.

After the meeting, one of the people, Annemarie Schmidt—who labors under the burden of the title, Director of the Survey and Certification Operations Branch of the Survey and Certification Operations Branch of the Division of Health Standards and Quality of the Health Care Financing Administration of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services—wrote a letter to William B. Carmello, Director of the Bureau of Health Facility Coordination of the Office of Health Systems Management of the New York State Department of Health.

The letter restated and reconfirmed decisions made at the meeting, whose participants had invented more exquisitely specific definitions than had existed previously of the terms, "ambulatory" and "self-preserving." In order for Russell Cohen's Farmingdale to continue to be eligible for the federal contributions that sustained it, the people who lived there and in similar facilities would have to be re-adjudged as among other things, "ambulatory" and "self-preserving," in the event of an emergency situation such as a fire.

"Self-preserving," the letter read, "means capable of taking independent action and following directions. There can be no physical directions or prompts [italics Schmidt's] including the initiation of action (i.e. assisting rising from bed or the physical hands on guidance during escape Verbal directions may not initiate the action nor may they be used constantly throughout the escape procedure. Verbal directions or prompts may only be infrequent and of 'instantaneous duration' as might be expected with a non disabled clientele, i.e. Stop! Hurry! and so on."

Following receipt of the letter, if investigative agents of the government's health blah-blah bureaus were not to re-survey the Farmingdale facility, for example, and suspect any of the inhabitants as potentially in need of coaxing to wake in the middle of the night and escape a potential disaster, the government might pull the funding and eliminate the center. Therefore, center officials knew, they had best rid themselves of the marginally eligible.

Like a line drawn in the water, the new definition seems to have lapped over Russell Cohen's feet. And officials are preparing to send Russell, who learned more about self-preservation in one year at the Farmingdale house than in all the nightmarish years of his childhood, back to the institution.

NAVAL AIR REWORK FACILITY ALAMEDA: DOING AN EFFECTIVE JOB

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, the Naval Air Rework Facility [NARF] Alameda is an industrial component of the Naval Air Systems Command and is one of six Naval Air Rework facilities nationwide. It is also one of the largest employers in the San Francisco-Oakland Bay area, with over 4,800 civilians and 30 military personnel on board.

Because the cost of labor is so high in the Bay area, the cost of doing business is higher for NARF Alameda than any of the other rework facilities in the United States. As a result, NARF Alameda has been placed at a competitive disadvantage and, in the past, has caused the Alameda facility to be ranked last in the quarterly assessments of the Naval Aviation Logistics Command.

But the last 2 years has seen a steady and dramatic turnaround.

In the last quarterly ranking, NARF Alameda moved to a solid second place in the rankings. The extraordinary capabilities of the command staff and employees speaks for itself. I want to join with those in the Naval Aviation chain of command that applauded this fine effort.

I would also like to commend the NARF commander and his team for the significant progress they have made in equal employment opportunities and affirmative action at the Naval Air Rework Facility.

THE MAINE LEGIONNAIRE WINS NATIONAL AWARD

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MCKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share with my colleagues an honor which was recently awarded by the National American Legion Press Association to the Maine Legionnaire, the American Legion's publication in the State of Maine. In a national competition, the Maine Legionnaire was declared "Best Publication."

In receiving this award, the Maine Legionnaire has demonstrated its continued dedication to serving as a strong advocate in promoting veterans' rights, and to providing Maine veterans with noteworthy information that affects their lives. I wish to commend your attention to the following excerpt from an official announcement of the award:

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—The Maine Legionnaire, the official publication of the Department of Maine, The American Legion, has been declared the top publication in veterans circles, according to the announcement made by Robert B. Craig, National President of the National American Legion Press Association.

The award announcement came at the conclusion of the judging of all newpapers and editorials.

The Maine Legionnaire is edited under the direction of State Adjutant Daniel E. Lambert, and published by Verdi Tripp d/b/a Publishing Services and printed at the Times Record in Brunswick. The Maine Legion publication is considered to be the strong advocate of veterans rights and benefits and a positive image of America.

Maine American Legion State Commander George Gagnon, Millinocket, noted that the Legion and Auxiliary of Maine were pleased that the Maine paper had emerged as "Number 1" in the Nation. He praised Editor Dan Lambert for his tireless efforts to promote the image of the veterans of Maine and the nation.

A BILL TO REQUIRE AN ANNUAL FEDERAL GOVERNMENT COMPUTER USERS' GROUP MEETING

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will provide, by establishing an annual meeting of Federal Government Computer Users, a forum where Federal agencies will share information and experiences concerning computer technology.

This bill is actually a slight modification of a recommendation found in the Grace Commission report. Specifically, the Grace Commission report entitled "Information Gap 3-3" calls for the General Services Administration [GSA] to—Establish a software clearinghouse and a technical resource center to promote the development of compatible information systems.

The GSA has already established several technical support centers such as the software development center and the computer store. However, very little has been done by either the GSA or the Office of Management and Budget to promote the establishment of compatible or coordinated information systems throughout the Federal Government.

The Grace Commission has shown that the adoption of common systems will not only improve overall management information but will also produce savings that "could reach about $1 billion per year." To illustrate this point further the Grace Commission made a detailed analysis of the savings that could be realized if just a common payroll system were adopted governmentwide. The estimated 3-year cost of establishing such a system would be approximately $11 million but—

* * * After full implementation, the Government would have achieved a cumulative net savings of $724.9 million with a decrease of approximately 2,000 staff-years of payroll clerical effort.

This bill, by bringing together the information resources managers [IRM's] of every agency on a regular basis, will provide an opportunity for the Government to identify systems—such as payroll—that can be standardized Government wide. But this bill will also enable agencies to: Identify what systems work and what systems don't; discuss the quality of services provided by various vendors; discover common problems encountered by the agencies; and exchange ideas generated by one agency that could save millions for many other agencies—the adoption of MUMPS software by the VA comes to mond.

The purpose of holding an annual meeting of Federal Government Computer Users is similar to the rationale for annual meetings held by professionals in the private sector. Scholarly papers are exchanged, experiences are shared, and the entire profession—in this case agency IRM's—is advanced.

This bill will enable the Government's left hand to keep track of what its right hand is doing. The potential for cost savings is considerable, for, as the Grace Commission states, although specific savings are difficult to estimate, improving computer systems "has the potential for savings far in excess of these annual budgets (that is, for the implementation of new systems)." However, I hope the commonsense proposals of this bill will strike the GSA Administrator as eminently practical. By unilaterally adopting these proposals, the Administrator will not only avoid facing Congress but also contribute to the efficient management of the Federal Government and the taxpayers' money.

The text of the bill follows:

A bill to require the General Services Administration to hold an annual meeting of the Information Resources Managers of the various Federal Agencies

Whereas an annual meeting of Information Resource Managers from the various Federal Agencies would promote the sharing of automated data processing technology government-wide;

Whereas the fragmented development of automated administrative systems has led to a proliferation of different systems performing similar functions in many Federal Agencies;

Whereas the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control recommends the establishment of a software clearinghouse to promote the development of compatible information systems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Director of the General Services Administration (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the Administrator) hold an annual meeting (or on a more frequent basis if deemed so necessary by the Administrator) of Federal Government Computer Users (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the Users' Group), to be attended by the Information Resources Manager, or a designated alternate, from each of the various Federal Agencies. The first Users' Group meeting is to occur within a year following passage of this Act.

SEC. 2. The purpose of these Users' Group meetings shall be, but not limited to,

(a) for the presentation by each of the various Federal Agencies of a report highlighting automated data processing operations of the previous year;

(b) for the sharing of knowledge among the various Federal Agencies concerning problems with automated data processing vendors, internal automated data processing problems, and innovations in software and hardware technology;

(c) for providing a forum where the various Federal Agencies shall present their future plans concerning automated data processing operations; and

(d) for the various Federal Agencies to share information and make recommendations to other Federal Agencies on procedures that have resulted in significant cost savings within a particular Federal Agency.

SEC. 3. The Administrator shall make an annual report by letter to the House Committee on Appropriations that shall include, but not be limited to,

(a) a summary of the Users' Group meeting;

(b) an estimate of obtainable savings if recommendations made pursuant to subsection (1)(d) above were to be adopted, where feasible, by the various Federal Agencies;

(c) an estimate of the effectiveness of the Users' Group in making the various Federal Agencies' automated data processing experiences and concerns known to one another.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this Act the term "Federal Agencies" means any department, independent agency, board, commission, Government corporation, foundation, or independent establishment under the direction of the President of the United States.

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act and the project authorized by the first section of this Act.

DIAMOND JUBILEE OF ST. MICHAEL THE ARCHANGEL PARISH OF MUSKEGON, MI

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, on September 28, 1985, St. Michael the Archangel Parish in Muskegon, MI, is closing a historical milestone. From September 1984 the parish of St. Michael's has been celebrating the church's diamond jubilee. I am honored to have this opportunity to pay tribute to Rev. Eugene S. Golas and his entire congregation on this very significant anniversary.

St. Michael's parish was organized in 1909 and its first building started in 1911. The first and oldest organization within the parish is the Rosary Society, which was started immediately after the parish was founded and which has contributed significantly to the spiritual and material welfare of the parish. Within the next 5 years after 1911, the rectory was built. In the following 5 years a convent was erected to house the teaching Sisters of Mercy. St. Michael's Church was dedicated on May 31, 1944, by Bishop Francis J. Hass. It was the first Catholic Church in Muskegon to be consecrated.

The parish was originally begun by the Polish settlers in the Muskegon area. Rev. Msgr. Casimir Skory was the founder of the parish, Rev. Andrew Narlick was the first pastor, followed by Rev. Andrew Sikorski, 1938 to 1972, Rev. Edward J. Bielskas, 1972 to 1982 and presently Rev. Eugene S. Golas.

The church's diamond jubilee is a significant event in the lives of its congregation and clergy. The occasion provides them an opportunity to reflect on its history, its past achievements, and its future goals. This anniversary marks not only an important milestone, but the continuation of a dream, that began back in 1909. As this parish approaches the future, it does so with a renewed commitment and dedication to the well-being of its neighbors and community. All who are privileged to know of the good works done by the church are inspired by their leadership in working to solve the community's problems and to enrich the lives of its citizens. I am certain that this congregation will go on to higher levels of achievement. I know my colleagues will join me in paying tribute to St. Michael the Archangel Parish.

RELIEF FOR JACK WALSH, OWNER OF "SHEARWATER"

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to provide relief from certain laws governing the merchant marine, on behalf of Mr. Jack Walsh.

Mr. Walsh, a U.S. citizen, wishes to document the vessel Shearwater with the U.S. Coast Guard for employment in the coastwise and fisheries trade. However, certain provisions of the Jones Act pertaining to the ownership of a vessel registered as a U.S.-flag ship, prevent Mr. Walsh from registering the Shearwater with the Coast Guard. Specifically, the ownership of the Shearwater by a non-U.S. citizen, prior to Mr. Walsh's ownership of the vessel, prevents the Coast Guard from registering the Shearwater for the coastwise and fisheries trade. This legislation will allow Mr. Walsh to register the Shearwater despite the break in the chain of ownership. I believe that a brief history of the Shearwater will make clear the need for private legislation to grant an exception to certain provisions of the Jones Act for Mr. Walsh.

The Shearwater, formerly the U.S.S. Jewell, is listed in the Dictionary of American Fighting Ships. The U.S.S. Jewell was constructed by the Shain Manufacturing Co. of Seattle, WA. The vessel was launched in November 1942 and was put into service by the Navy in the 13th Naval District at Kodiak, AK. In 1946, the 13th Naval District commissioned the vessel out of service to reserve status. Between 1950 and 1977, the vessel served as a commercial harbor cruise ship in the San Pedro/Long Beach area of California. During this period the vessel was documented by the Coast Guard.

The current owner of the vessel, Mr. Walsh, has invested the excess of one-half million dollars in the Shearwater to ensure the vessel's safe operation in the coastwise and fisheries trade. Moreover, Mr. Walsh has retained a former Coast Guard inspector to ensure that all restoration and reconstruction of the vessel is in accord with current Coast Guard requirements.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that, in this case, the Jones Act imposes an unreasonable hardship on the owner of the Shearwater. While I do not advocate any tampering with the intent or the substance of the Jones Act, I do not believe that the act intended to raise a barrier against a U.S. citizen operating a former ship of the American Navy. I respectfully request my colleagues to support this private bill to provide relief for Mr. Jack Walsh, owner of the Shearwater. Favorable consideration of this legislation will ensure that future generations will be able to sail aboard this former fighting ship.

LEGISLATION TO REPEAL EARNINGS LIMITATION

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to repeal the outside earnings limitation which is currently imposed on Social Security recipients.

Under present law, eligible recipients between the ages of 65 and 70 are threatened with a reduction in Social Security benefits if their outside income exceeds a certain level—now $7,320 per year. For those under 65, the level is $5,400. For every $2 earned in excess of these limits, Social Security benefits are reduced by $1.

It certainly makes very little sense, at a time when many of our senior citizens are struggling to make ends meet, to penalize Social Security recipients in this fashion. Social Security is a retirement program, not a welfare program. To deny full benefits to those who have paid into the system throughout their working careers, with the expectation that they would begin to reap the benefits at age 65, is literally a breach of the contract between the Federal Government and the individual worker.

In fact, it is often those who find it most difficult to survive on fixed incomes, particularly during periods of high inflation, who must rely on outside income. It is not wealthy individuals, who often have income-producing investments, who suffer under the earnings limitation—it is those who can least afford it.

Further, the earnings limitation acts as a disincentive to work in a productive capacity. The attitude toward retirement in recent years has made clear that the 56-year limit is somewhat arbitriary; many are choosing and, in fact, are encouraged to continue working beyond this age. Not only is this good for the economy, it is good for the individuals involved. Yet, because of this outdated provision, we are formally penalizing such activity.

Mr. Speaker, legislation similar to mine has been introduced in the past. Many Members share my concerns. Senior citizens throughout the country support this measure. I therefore hope that the full House will join in support of repealing the outdated earnings limitation and quickly pass this legislation.

SUPPORT OUR BEST AND BRIGHTEST STUDENTS: LEGISLATION TO ASSIST THE GIFTED AND TALENTED

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to support programs to assist gifted and talented children and youth. I am joined in this bipartisan effort by 19 of my colleagues that believe, as I do, that the Federal Government has a responsibility to provide leadership to assure that the best of our students are adequately served by our educational systems.

This bill, the "Gifted and Talented Children and Youth Education Act of 1985", would provide funds to State and local educational agencies, as well as institutions of higher education, and public and private agencies. The bill authorizes $10 million in fiscal year 1986, and "such sums" in subsequent years, to support programs for students, as well as inservice training and professional development opportunities for teachers. In addition, the act encourages the development of early intervention programs to identify gifted and talented students.

We can best serve the estimated 2 million gifted and talented children in this country if we stimulate high-quality research that will assist in identifying and serving gifted students in innovative ways. To that end, the act establishes a National Cancer for Gifted and Talented Education that will provide national leadership and support to encourage such efforts.

The Federal Government, until 1981, provided for such programs since 1978, under the Gifted and Talented Children's Education Act, authored by my distinguished former colleague from New York, Senator Jacob Javits. Until its demise, this program annually provided $6 million for similar educational efforts. Today, programs for the gifted and talented can be operated by States through the education block grant. However, there remains no national program to specifically serve these particular students in need.

This act is also consistent with the recommendations set forth in the current Department of Education's report, "A Nation at Risk," which highlighted the need for Federal leadership to upgrade and improve our educational system in this area. We know that gifted and talented children are those identified to have outstanding abilities and who require different kinds of services to meet their intellectual, academic, artistic and physical abilities. If we are to graduate—in the coming decades—a "nation of achievers"—then we need to provide the kinds of support to these high-achievers, especially in the classroom where these talents and abilities can be nurtured.

This bill enjoys a wide level of support, including 14 national associations involved with the education of gifted children and youth. Such support underscores the commitment that must be made to avert an increased crisis in our schools which would result in our most promising students would be underserved—or incorrectly served by educational programs. Special education must not only serve the handicapped—but should be equally responsive to the 2 million students who need encouragement, support and special opportunities that will encourage—not discourage—our best and brightest students.

If there is to be a reasonable response to promote quality in the classroom—then we should adopt this legislation which provides a modest approach to addressing a national concern. For the benefit of my colleagues, I am inserting the text of the bill in the RECORD at this point and invite their support:

H.R. 3263

A bill to establish a Federal program to strengthen and improve the capability of State and local educational agencies and private nonprofit schools to identify gifted and talented children and youth and to provide those children and youth with appropriate educational opportunities, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Gifted and Talented Children and Youth Education Act of 1985".

SECTION 1. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) gifted and talented children and youth are a national resource vital to the future of the Nation and its security and well-being;

(2) unless the special abilities of gifted and talented children and youth are recognized and developed during their elementary and secondary school years, much of their special potential for contributing to the national interest is likely to be lost;

(3) gifted and talented children and youth from economically disadvantaged families and areas are at greatest risk of being unrecognized and of not being provided adequate or appropriate educational services;

(4) State and local educational agencies and private nonprofit schools often lack the necessary specialized resources to plan and implement effective programs for the early identification of gifted and talented children and youth for the provision of educational services and programs appropriate to their special needs; and

(5) the Federal Government can best carry out the limited but essential role of stimulating research and development and personnel training, and providing a national focal point of information and technical assistance, that is necessary to ensure that our Nation's schools are able to meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented children and youth, and thereby serve a profound national interest.

(b) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to provide financial assistance to State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations, to initiate a coordinated program of research, demonstration projects, personnel training, and similar activities designed to build a nationwide capability in our elementary and secondary schools to identify and meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented children and youth. It is also the purpose of this Act to supplement and make more effective the expenditure of State and local funds, and of Federal funds expended under chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 and the Education for Economic Security Act of 1984, for the education of gifted and talented childen and youth.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this Act the following terms have the following meanings:

(1) The term "gifted and talented children and youth" means children and youth who give evidence of high performance capability in areas such as intellectual, creative, artistic, or leadership capacity, or in specific academic fields, and who require services or activities not ordinarily provided by the school in order to fully develop such capabilities.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

(3) The term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given such term in section 435(b) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

(b) DEFINITION BY REFERENCE.—Any term used in this Act and not defined subsection (a) shall have the same meaning as that term is given under chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZED PROGRAMS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—From the sums appropriated under section 9 in any fiscal year the Secretary (after consultation with the advisory committee established pursuant to section 7) shall make grants to or contracts with State educational agencies, local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, or other public and private agencies and organizations to assist them in carrying out programs or projects authorized by this section that are designed to meet the educational needs of gifted and talented children and youth, including the training of personnel in the education of gifted and talented children and youth or in supervising such personnel.

(b) USES OF FUNDS.—Programs and projects funded under this section may include—

(1) preservice and inservice training (including fellowships) for personnel (including leadership personnel) involved in the education of gifted and talented children and youth;

(2) establishment and operation of model projects and exemplary programs for the identification and education of gifted and talented children and youth, including summer programs and cooperative programs involving business, industry, and education;

(3) strengthening the capability of State educational agencies and institutions of higher education to provide leadership and assistance to local educational agencies and nonprofit private schools in the planning, operation, and improvement of programs for the identification and education of gifted and talented children and youth;

(4) programs of technical assistance and information dissemination; and

(5) carrying out (through the National Center for Research and Development in the Education of Gifted and Talented Children and Youth established pursuant to subsection (c))—

(A) research on methods and techniques for identifying and teaching gifted and talented children and youth, and

(B) program evaluations, surveys, and the collection, analysis, and development of information needed to accomplish the purposes of this Act.

(c) ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL CENTER.—The Secretary shall establish a National Center for Research and Development in the Education of Gifted and Talented Children and Youth through grants to or contracts with one or more institutions of higher education or State education agencies, or a combination or consortium of such institutions and agencies, for the purpose of carrying out clause (5) of subsection (b). Such National Center shall have a Director. The Director shall consult with the advisory committee appointed by the Secretary pursuant to section 7 with respect to the agenda of the National Center. The Secretary may authorize the Director to carry out such functions of the National Center as may be agreed upon through arrangements with other institutions of higher education, State or local educational agencies, or other public or private agencies and organizations.

(d) LIMITATION.—Not more than 30 percent of the funds available in any fiscal year to carry out the programs and projects authorized by this section may be used for the conduct of activities pursuant to subsections (b)(5) or (c).

SEC. 5. PROGRAM PRIORITIES.

In the administration of this Act the Secretary (and the advisory committee established pursuant to section 7) shall give highest priority—

(1) to the identification of gifted and talented children and youth who may not be identified through traditional assessment methods (such as the limited-English speaking, economically disadvantaged, handicapped, and women) and to education programs designed to include gifted and talented children and youth from such groups; and

(2) to programs and projects designed to develop or improve the capability of schools in an entire State or region of the Nation through cooperative efforts and participation of State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations (including business, industry, and labor), to plan, conduct, and improve programs for the identification and education of gifted and talented children and youth.

SEC. 6. PARTICIPATION OF PRIVATE SCHOOL CHILDREN AND TEACHERS.

In making grants and contracts under this Act, the Secretary shall ensure, where appropriate, that provision is made for the equitable participation of children and teachers in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools, including the participation of teachers and other personnel serving such children in perservice and inservice training programs.

SEC. 7. SECRETARY'S ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) APPOINTMENT AND MEMBERSHIP.—The Secretary shall appoint a committee composed of at least five persons who are not Federal employees to advise on the administration of this Act, including the content of regulations governing the administration of the Act. The committee shall have as members at least one person who is a director of programs for gifted and talented children and youth in a State educational agency, one person who has substantial responsibility in an institution of higher education for preparing teachers of such children and youth, one person who is nationally recognized as an authority on research in the field of special education of such children and youth, one person who is currently engaged as a teacher in a special program for such children and youth, and one person who is a parent of a child currently enrolled in an elementary or secondary school program for such children and youth.

(b) DUTIES.—The Secretary shall meet with the advisory committee at least twice during each fiscal year for which appropriations are made to carry out this Act, and shall seek the advice and counsel of the committee with respect to—

(1) identification of the most urgent needs for strengthening the capability of elementary and secondary schools nationwide to plan and operate effective programs for the identification and education of gifted and talented children and youth, and for addressing the program priorities set forth in section 5;

(2) the kinds of programs and projects authorized by this Act that are best calculated to help meet the needs identified by the Secretary and the committee pursuant to clause (1);

(3) the assessment of the effectiveness of programs and projects funded under this Act, and of progress under the Act in expanding and improving educational opportunities and programs for gifted and talented children and youth; and

(4) such other matters relating to the administration of this Act as the Secretary may find useful.

SEC. 8. ADMINISTRATION.

The Secretary shall establish or designate an administrative unit within the Department of Education to administer unit within the Department of Education to administer the programs authorized by this Act, to coordinate all programs for gifted and talented children and youth administered by the Department, and to serve as a focal point of national leadership and information on the educational needs of gifted and talented children and youth and the availability of educational services and programs designed to meet those needs. The administrative unit established or designated pursuant to this section shall be headed by a person of recognized professional qualifications and experience in the field of the education of gifted and talented children and youth.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the four succeeding fiscal years, for the purpose of carrying out this Act.

A CONGRESSIONAL TRIBUTE TO BETTE MURPHY AMMANN

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Bette Murphy Ammann, who was recently chosen for the "Outstanding Women's Solidarity Award" from United Auto Workers' Region 6.

Bette was among the first women to take up jobs in the defense industry during World War II. In 1942, she joined the Douglas Aircraft Co. as a riverter for 60 cents per hour. Betty soon became a union organizer and collected dues.

After the war, Bette continued her union activity. In 1947, she was elected shop steward. Bette's talents were obvious to those she worked with, and she soon rose to higher union posts. She was elected chief steward, secretary of the Steward Council, and then secretary of the union's Welfare Committee.

The list of contributions Bette has made to the union and to the quality of work at Douglas Aircraft over the years is virtually endless. She has been active in women's issues and in bargaining committees. Bette has been elected trustee on the UAW Local 148 executive board. She has also represented the union at both national and international conventions.

When Bette retired from Douglas Aircraft in 1978, she left a legacy of "Douglas firsts:" She was the first female employee to earn $1 per hour, the first female "leadman in shop," the first female assistant foreman in shop, the first female administrator over "war boards," and the first female manufacturing engineer.

Retirement from her job did not mean retirement from union and political activity for Bette Murphy Ammann. She was elected recording secretary of her local's retiree chapter. She has attended numerous conventions on issues concerning senior citizens. Bette was also appointed to the California Central Democratic Committee.

In short, Bette has been an exemplary citizen in our community. She has worked tirelessly to improve working conditions, educate herself and others on important issues, and show that concerted and persistent political activity pays off in the long run.

My wife, Lee, joins me in wishing Bette Murphy Ammann and her daughter, Mary Beth Johnson, all the best in their future endeavors.

YOUNG ISRAEL CONGREGATION HERALDS NEW ERA WITH DEDICATION OF SANCTUARY BUILDING

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commemorate the dedication of Young Israel of Hollywood-Fort Lauderdale's new sanctuary. This event marks a turning point for Broward's first orthodox Jewish congregation and I am proud to pay tribute to their accomplishment on this joyous occasion.

More than a decade ago, the need for an orthodox house of worship was realized amongst a small group of south Broward's growing Jewish community. With a strong commitment toward strictly upholding the laws of Judaism, an orthodox minyan for Shabbat services was established in the city of Hollywood.

They started in the living rooms of their founding members and it was at that point that the minyan took root. The seed which they had planted grew steadily and flourished amidst the needs of the rapidly expanding Jewish population. The congregation, however, still did not have a permanent home. Over the years they moved from a small storefront to a condominium social hall until they acquired their own property on the border of Hollywood and Fort Lauderdale. The congregation, now known as Young Israel of Hollywood-Fort Lauderdale remodeled this property into a sanctuary in 1977.

The orthodox community continued to grow. Young Israel faced many new challenges, but dedication and a strong belief in preserving tradition, allowed them to prevail. Today hundreds of congregants now flock to Young Israel for the purpose of prayer.

It became apparent to the membership that the construction of a new facility would be an important milestone in the effort to achieve a stable and thriving orthodox community in south Florida. Today, that dream has finally been realized as they joyously dedicate the new Young Israel sanctuary, their permanent house of worship. It heralds in a new era for not only the congregation of Young Israel, but for south Florida's entire othodox Jewish community as well.

No tribute to Young Israel's remarkable accomplishments would be complete without mentioning Rabbi Edward Davis, Synagogue President Robert Asheim, the Young Israel board of directors, and the entire congregation, many of whom are my close personal friends and neighbors.

I wish my friends at Young Israel a heartfelt mazel tov in their new sanctuary and continued success in expanding traditional Judaism in Broward County.

COMMEMORATING THE 175TH ANNIVERSARY OF MEXICAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, September 16, our neighboring Republic of Mexico celebrates its independence.

On September 16, 1810, just 34 years after our own Declaration of Independence, a parish priest named Father Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla pulled the rope that rang the bell in the village church of Dolores until the oppressed countrymen from the nearby farms filled the courtyard to overflowing. Then he called upon them to free their native land from the tyrannies of the Spanish Crown.

Not quite 3 months later, Father Hidalgo and his followers proclaimed the abolition of slavery from Mexican soil and wrote the Western Hemisphere's first land reform statute. In the New World the name Hidalgo will rank forever alongside those of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln in the annals of human freedom.

In recognition of this important date, and in celebration of Hispanic heritage week, I am proud to pay tribute to the Hispanic community of our Nation.

Today, Hispanics are providing a new spirit and force in America which will help shape the future course of this Nation. Hispanic activism and political activity has already left its mark on the national political landscape.

Hispanics have provided the margin of victory in many political races throughout this country. As well as providing the margin of victory in many races, many Hispanics have been elected to various political offices in this great Nation.

Hispanics in the Seventh Congressional District, Michigan, have made many contributions to the development and enrichment of our community, State, and Nation.

In 1981, a Hispanic was first elected to public office in Genesee County and still serves on the Burton City Council. A year later, a Hispanic was first elected to public office in the city of Flint and remains an effective member of the city council. His election, by a mere 35-vote margin, would not have been possible without the massive increase in voter registration and voter turnout among Hispanics in Flint. Last year marked the first time ever a Hispanic represented the city of Flint at the Democratic National Convention. Again this year, another Hispanic has contributed to the development and enrichment of our community. She was the first Hispanic ever to be elected to the Flint Board of Education. Other Hispanics of the Seventh Congressional District have been appointed by the Governor of Michigan to various commissions and councils. Many more in the Hispanic community have contributed greatly to our community's well-being.

September 16 is not just a date of importance to Mexican-Americans alone. Indeed, it is of great significance to all those sharing in the proud heritage of the Hispanic culture, and indeed, all Americans. Today, all Hispanics must recognize, and seek to strengthen, their common heritage. Together, through a united and active Hispanic people, bound by common interests and pride, Hispanics will at last attain the political and economic equality for which they have already begun to attain.

THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF JOB CORPS

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the Job Corps in its 20th year of impressive and dedicated service to the socially and economically disadvantaged youth of our Nation.

The unique combination of training and support services provided by the Job Corps has steered impoverished youth in the direction of realizing their full potential: adequate preparation to obtain and hold employment in either the public or private sector.

The Job Corps Program has provided a basic and important employment outlet for Detroit, MI, which I represent and which has been devastated by 25.9 percent structural unemployment among Detroit youth. Since its founding in 1972, the Job Corps Center in Detroit has been virtually the only source of hope and restoration of self worth for 6,000 young adults. Over 85 percent of these young people have gotten jobs and have paid back more in income taxes than the cost of participation in the program. For every $1 spent, $1.46 is returned to society in terms of increased employment, less criminal activity and reduced welfare payments.

It is absolutely essential, Mr. Speaker, that we continue our commitment to the Job Corps in order to assure the young and hopeless an opportunity to become functional and productive tax paying citizens.

LEGISLATION COMBATING AIDS

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would accelerate efforts to combat one of the most critical public health emergencies ever faced by this Nation—the spiraling incidence of acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS]. Approximately 20 new cases are reported to the Centers for Disease Control every day. The total number of cases doubles about every 10 months. Government experts see no slowdown in the incidence of AIDS and by the end of next year, over 35,000 cases likely will have been reported.

AIDS is: A sexually transmitted disease; a disease transmited via contaminated blood and blood products; a disease transmitted across the placental barrier. It most assuredly is not just a disease of male homosexuals. In many other countries it is a heterosexual disease—affecting heterosexual men and women equally.

The nearly 13,000 men, women, and children currently afflicted with AIDS face almost certain death. The future remains very, very bleak for newly diagnosed patients. The promised development of a vaccine also remains uncertain. In the face of such a bleak picture, the only prospect to slow this epidemic is to inform and educate the American public about both AIDS and exposure to human T-cell lymphotrophic virus type III [HTLV-III], the etiologic agent of AIDS.

Under my legislation, the Secretary of Health and Human Services would make grants to State and local governments to support education and information dissemination projects concerning AIDS. The legislation would authorize $40 million for fiscal year 1986. Additionally, the bill would authorize $25 million for establishment, maintenance, and operation of programs to test blood to detect the presence of antibodies to HTLV-III at sites other than those utilized for medical transfusions. The legislation insures confidentiality for all individuals who participate in the education programs or request the blood test at the alternative sites.

The alarming and urgent nature of this situation cannot be understated. I urge my collegues to support these programs.

LEGISLATION TO AMEND SECTION 607 OF THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT OF 1936

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to ensure that the Government's interest is protected when a change in control occurs in a U.S. corporation that has established a capital construction fund [CCF] under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. The chairman of the merchant marine and Fisheries Committee, WALTER JONES, and the ranking members of the committee, NORMAN LENT, join me in introducing this legislation.

The capital construction fund was established in 1970 to promote the replacement and acquisition of U.S.-built vessels for the U.S. Merchant Marine. A company that contracts with the Government to set up a CCF deposits earnings into a tax-deferred CCF account. The money accumulated in the account must then be used to purchase U.S.-built vessels that are registered under the laws of the United States.

The legislation introduced today protects the Government's interest in seeing that the purposes of the CCF Program are not undermined when a corporate takeover occurs. As a tax-deferral program, the Government has a strong interest in ensuring that a CCF is used for the promotional purpose of replacing U.S. vessels and is not used as a source of readily available cash for a new managment group.

This legislation requires the Secretary of Transportation to hold a hearing if the Secretary believes that the change in control of a corporation owning a CCF is contrary to the public interest. If, as a result of the hearing, the Secretary determines that the change in control is contrary to the public interest and will be used to loot the CCF, the Secretary may terminate the agreement. Moreover, even if the Secretary does not terminate the agreement, if a nonqualified withdrawal—a withdrawal for purposes other than those qualified for tax deferral—occurs within 3 years after the takeover, another hearing shall be held to determine if the withdrawal is contrary to the public interest. If so, the CCF agreement must be terminated. When a CCF agreement is terminated by the Secretary, a penalty is imposed on the corporation. The penalty is a maximum of 50 percent of the withdrawal, net of taxes and interest imposed by other provisions of the CCF program.

I believe this legislation is necessary to deter targeting a corporation because it owns a valuable CCF account. At the present time a takeover of one of the U.S. largest and most profitable shipping companies is in progress. There is reason to suspect that a significant factor in this takeover attempt is the target corporation's CCF. A Government-sponsored and regulated promotional program should not act as an incentive to raid a corporation in order to drain its CCF account. Under this legislation, a full and fair hearing is required to protect the Government's interest in ensuring that the CCF Program is used for the proper purposes.

I believe that timely action on this legislation is necessary, and I urge my colleagues to join me and the cosponsors in supporting this legislation.

The text of the bill follows:

That section 607(i) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1177(i)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately before "Under";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively; and

(3) by adding at the end of the subsection the following:

"(2)(A) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'control' means the power, directly or indirectly, to direct the management or policies of a corporation.

"(B) The existence of control of a corporation and of a change in control of a corporation that is contrary to the public interest is determined by the Secretary. The Secretary is not required to consider minimum stock ownership in making that determination. Any director of the corporation in office before a change in control may request that the Secretary implement the provisions of subparagraph (C) of this paragraph. The Secretary has sole discretion to implement subparagraph (C). Trusts or other similar arrangements established or used to circumvent the purposes of this section are part of a change in control that is contrary to the public interest.

"(C) Notwithstanding another law, if a change in control contrary to the public interest occurs after July 31, 1985 in a corporation that has entered into an agreement under this section, the Secretary shall hold a hearing on the record to determine if the change in control is consistent with the purpose of that agreement (as provided in subsection (a) of this section) or with the purposes of this Act. The provisions of title 5, United States Code apply to the hearing.

"(D) If the Secretary determines, as a result of the hearing, that the change in control is not consistent with the purpose of the agreement or with purposes of this Act, the Secretary may terminate the agreement.

"(E) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (D) of this paragraph, if a nonqualified withdrawal under subsection (h) of this section is made or requested within three years after the date on which the change in control occurs, the Secretary shall hold a hearing under the provisions of subparagraph (C) of this paragraph.

"(F) If the Secretary determines, as a result of the hearing, that the nonqualified withdrawal is not consistent with the purpose of the agreement or with the purposes of this Act, the Secretary shall terminate the agreement.

"(G) If the Secretary terminates an agreement under subparagraphs (D) or (F) of this paragraph, a penalty of not more than 50 percent of the amount of the net nonqualified withdrawal after calculation of taxes and interest shall be imposed. This penalty is in addition to any taxes and interest that may otherwise be applicable under this section.".

THE SCHOOL LUNCH AND CHILD NUTRITION AMENDMENTS OF 1985

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, child nutrition programs have been an important component of the Federal Government's commitment to ensuring the well being of poorer children in this Nation. At a time when congressional studies have indicated that children are more likely to be in poverty today than they were a decade ago, it would be a major error for us to consider the elimination or reduction of this essential program. That is why I urge my colleagues to support the reauthorization of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985.

Studies have shown the importance of a national nutrition program. The national infant mortality rate has decreased. There has been a decrease in premature births and studies have indicated that health costs in treating malnutrition-related illnesses have decreased.

Given the chronic illiteracy problem that our Nation faces and the countless studies that have suggested that a child that is hungry can not learn, we, the Members of the House of Representatives would be abandoning our obligation to the most essential resource that this great Nation has by not moving to improve the nutritional health of our children. There have been very few programs that have done so much for so little. Child nutrition programs have proved their worth. By extending and improving the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 we would reaffirm our commitment to America's children and the future of this country.

TAX REFORM PROPOSALS UNFAIR TO THOROUGHBRED HORSE INDUSTRY

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, during the recent congressional recess and for the past several months, I have been hearing from hundreds of my constituents in western Kentucky and others throughout the entire Commonwealth of Kentucky about their views concerning the President's tax simplification proposal.

Kentuckians are opposed to having their taxes raised individually, while many corporations in America pay little or even no taxes at all.

I would like to share with my colleagues the letter I received from my friend and fellow Kentuckian, Buckner Hinkle of Hidaway Farm at Paris, KY, who has contacted me about the tax proposal's impact upon the thoroughbred horse raising industry—an industry which is very important to Kentucky.

Buck Hinkle's comments are worthy of consideration. His letter follows:

JULY 12, 1985.

Hon. CARROLL HUBBARD,
Rayburn House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CARROLL: It appears that I am always writing either protesting some proposed action by our government or addressing you and other members of the Kentucky Congressional Delegation from a defensive posture. I do not like to be negative or at cross purposes with our government, but in this instance, which relates to President Reagan's tax reform proposals, my son, Tom, has brought to my attention the inequities dealing with the thoroughbred horse industry in these tax reforms.

According to information he has received from The American Horse Council, the proposal states that cost associated with raising plants or livestock (other than animals held for slaughter) may not be deducted until the asset in question either becomes productive or is sold, unless this preproductive period is less than two years. In the case of horses, the preproductive period would begin at the time of breeding or embryo implantation (or at the time the animal is acquired) and would end when the animal become productive—ready to perform its intended function—or was sold.

Because most horses do not become productive within two years of conception, the effect of this proposal is to deny a current deduction for all costs (including stud fees) of producting most foals. Only if you were sure you would sell a foal within 24 months of conception could you take these current deductions. The effects of this proposal would be to create a serious, perhaps devastating cash flow problem for many breeders and owners whose deductions would be delayed by a number of years; a bookkeeping nightmare in which all costs (including prebirth expenses) associated with horse production would have to be allocated on a per foal basis throughout this preproductive period.

The proposal also eliminates capital gain treatment on the sale of all business property, including horses held for breeding, racing, showing or draft purposes. All business income would be taxed as ordinary income.

In view of the high risk nature of the horse business and the fact that under present law horses are eligible for capital gain treatment only if the animal is held for at least 24 months (as compared to 6 months for most other assets), it appears that the horse industry and horse owners and breeders have been singled out as ineligible for capital gains consideration while other investment type assets, such as stocks and bonds would remain eligible for capital gain treatment.

I am sure you realize that I am approaching this tax treatment from a vested interest standpoint, and it may be that I have misinterpreted the results which will be to the detriment of an industry which brings in a great deal of wealth and trade to Kentucky. However, I do believe if this tax reform proposal is passed with this provision to the horse industry, it will deliver a crippling blow to an industry which right now is feeling the effects of a downslide in that industry.

I hope you will be able to exert your considerable influence in the Congress in helping an industry which is, I believe, worthy of your support.

With the kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

BUCKNER HINKLE,
Paris, KY.

THE RECENT HISTORY OF THE DAIRY PRICE SUPPORT SYSTEM: THE NEED FOR A NEW DAIRY DIVERSION PROGRAM

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, very shortly, the House will consider the 1985 farm bill. As reported from committee, the dairy title contains authority for a new 2-year dairy diversion program similar to the one which successfully reduced surplus milk production from January 1, 1984, to March 31, 1985.

Because of the importance of this program to the dairy title of the farm bill, I will be including several articles in the RECORD during the next week explaining its purpose and function. I hope my colleagues will find this information useful.

Since 1980, the American dairy industry has been faced with an imbalance in supply and demand which has led to significant Government purchases of dairy products through the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The initial response of the President and Congress to this surplus was to send a signal to producers through price. Quite frankly, if we operated in a world based on theoretical economics, such a signal might have worked. However, these are not normal economic times.

The dairy price support level was frozen in 1981, effectively decreased in 1982 and 1983 through assessments and price cuts, and again reduced through price cuts following April 1, 1985. The result—production increases, not decreases.

The reason for this failure is simple—and it's a reason I have consistently noted on the floor since 1981—there are not other reasonable economic alternatives for the dairy farmer faced with a declining price. By freezing or cutting the support price for milk, you reduce a producer's net income. In today's farm economy, there is only one way for him to recover that lost income—increase production so that the diminished marginal profit is recovered over a greater amount of milk.

The facts are that the only thing that cuts in the support price for milk have done for the American taxpayer is cost them money as the total expense of the support program escalated to $2.6 billion in fiscal year 1983—the high water mark of the push for reductions in the support level for milk. At that point in 1983, the dairy industry and Congress got together and created a farmer-financed program—the dairy diversion—to enhance the income of those dairy producers who voluntarily reduced production.

While the dairy diversion program operated during only 9 months of fiscal year 1984, the cost of the program went down by $1 billion—the first such decrease in years. Its expenses were almost totally paid for through assessments on milk production.

Regrettably, the final version of the 1983 dairy legislation only provided for a 15-month diversion program—rather than the 24-month program sought originally—which ended on March 31, 1985. Since then, two price cuts have occurred. And, true to form, milk production is on the increase again.

During the consideration of the dairy title in the upcoming weeks, we will again be faced with the choice between price cuts and a diversion program very similar to the one in effect during 1984 and the first part of 1985. It seems to me that, if we continue to be serious about limiting surplus dairy production and keeping the cost of price support program down, history tells us to support the diversion program rather than price cuts.

And I hope my colleagues will join me in doing just that when the farm bill comes to the floor.

POCOMOKE CITY, MD: ALL AMERICA-CITIES FINALIST

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the people of Pocomoke City for being selected as one of 17 finalists in the 1985 All-America Cities competition. Sponsored by the National Municipal League and USA Today, this highly competitive program awards outstanding community achievement. It is with great pride, then, that we in Maryland's First Congressional District commend the fine efforts of the many dedicated organizations, businesses, and citizens that made this distinction possible.

A center of shipping and agriculture from its early settlement days, Pocomoke City is Worcester Country's largest community. Founded in the waning year of the 17th century, Pocomoke City was first known as Meeting House Landing and later as New Town. As the Civil War drew to a close in 1865, this prosperous center of commerce and agriculture became incorporated, and several years later, in 1878, changed its official name to Pocomoke City.

At a time when our Nation's cities are assuming ever-increasing responsibilities for meeting the day-to-day needs of their citizenry, I believe it is especially fitting that we applaud exemplary accomplishment. So as Pocomoke City is held out as a national paradigm for its citizen-action projects—downtown revitalization, the Sunshine Village Apartments and the Pocomoke Area Medical Center—we honor all those whose spirit of community contributed to this award. So Mr. Speaker, I salute Pokomoke City, the "Friendliest Town on the Eastern Shore."

THE JEWISH GUILD

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a unique program operating in my home district of the Bronx. The Jewish Home and Hospital for Aged, in conjunction with the Jewish Guild for the Blind, is now offering JHHA-GuildCare, a geriatric day care center for the blind and visually impaired. This very special program provides comprehensive medical, therapeutic, and social services to these people in order that they may remain independent in the community.

Until now, the blind and visually impaired elderly have remained an often overlooked segment of our population. JHHA-GuildCare helps these forgotten people adapt through special therapy. Vision rehabilitation is provided, including low vision evaluation, mobility and orientation training, and help with communication skills. In addition, the elderly learn how to use adaptive equipment for cooking, how to count money, and how to maintain personal hygiene. Round trip transportation and a balanced hot meal are provided daily. JHHA-GuildCare also monitors their health and offers social service counseling, medical specialties such as dentistry and podiatry, and physical, occupational, and speech therapy. But even more importantly, this unique program assists these people in making new friends, developing new skills, and participating in many new activities such as sewing, woodworking, dance therapy, and adult education.

The Jewish Guild, established in 1914, is a nonprofit, nonsectarian agency serving more than 5,000 visually impaired New Yorkers each year. The guild has long been a pioneer in developing programs in social and mental health and responding to community needs.

The Jewish Home and Hospital for Aged, established in 1870, is one of the oldest, largest, and most progressive nonprofit geriatric centers in the country. This center has served more than 2,000 elderly people through comprehensive inpatient and community outreach programs. For over 10 years, they have assisted the aged in the Bronx in leading healthier, more enriched lives while remaining in their homes in the community.

Approximately 5 million older people, or 20 percent of those over 65, report difficulty seeing. The House Select Committee on Aging is focusing much effort on ensuring that our elderly population, especially the blind and visually impaired, is offered an alternative lifestyle to institutionalization. The committee has long believed it is imperative that the aged are not forced to abandon their friends, their family, and their community. I would like to commend JHHA-GuildCare for serving as a model for other effective and economic alternatives to institutionalization. It is my hope that many other such organizations will be established in the near future. We must work to assist this forgotten segment of our population.

NEW BRITAIN NATIONAL BANK CELEBRATES ON ITS 125TH YEAR

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, today it is my pleasure to congratulate the New Britain National Bank on 125 years of dedicated service to the community of New Britain, CT. On April 13, 1865, its founders embarked on a pledge to serve the New Britain community both financially and as a good neighbor—one who could be trusted—and for the past 125 years the New Britain National has made this intention a reality.

Both the city of New Britain and I would like to thank the New Britain National Bank for its many community services, from its annual blood drive, to its longstanding dedication to the youth of the city. This year marks the 13th annual Hughes Memorial Golf Classic, sponsored by the bank for area children between the ages of 11 and 17 years of age in addition to the 9th annual Girl Scout community Christmas tree benefiting the community's needy.

I would also like to commend New Britain National Bank on being a forerunner in the community on utilizing the capabilities of very competent women. In 1976 Dr. Marie Gustin was elected the first woman director on the board of directors, and in 1979 Katherine Purrington, a former financial planning officer of the bank, was elected as the first woman to chair the New Britain chapter of the American Red Cross. New Britain National currently employs five women officers.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the selfless, longstanding dedication of the New Britain National Bank to the city of New Britain. I am proud to represent New Britain and its businesses.

CONCERNS OVER THE AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, at this time when we are discussing transportation appropriations, I am disturbed that a large sum of money already collected for the area of air safety is not being spent.

Like others concerned with the issue of air safety, I am distressed to know that in this time when air safety is of paramount importance there is an approximate $3 billion surplus in the airport and airway trust fund. This trust fund was established in 1970 and revised in 1982 as part of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act [TEFRA], for the explicit purpose of promoting airport improvement and development.

The fact that an extremely large surplus in this trust fund exists causes me to question whether the tax dollars collected for the purpose of airport improvement and development are being used to promote air safety. If these moneys are collected, then they should certainly be spent to improve our national air safety.

175TH ANNIVERSARY OF EAST FORK BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. WAYNE DOWDY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to call my colleagues' attention to this weekend's celebration of the 175th anniversary of the founding of East Fork Baptist Church in the Chandler Hill community of southwest Mississippi.

East Fork Baptist Church was founded by the Reverend Thomas Mercer, Rev. Ezra Courtney, Bro. Jacob Cobb, and Bro. P. Thomas in 1810. It was originally known as the New Constitution Church and included 12 charter members: Mr. James Chandler, Sr., Mr. John Wilson, Mr. Ephraim Puckett, Mr. James Keith, Mr. John Presteridge, Mr. Lazarus Reeves, Ms. Elizabeth Simmons, Mrs. Martha Wilson, Ms. Frances Spurlock, Mrs. Sarah Keith, Ms. Elizabeth Presteridge, Ms. Alley Presteridge, Ms. Hannah Denman, and Ms. Ann Adams; 39 pastors have served the church over the 175 years including the two long and notable tenures of Rev. Charles Felder (1919 to 1943) and Rev. Zachariah Reeves (1843 to 1871). The church is currently served by Rev. Maurice Wicker who joined East Fork Baptist Church in 1979.

Rural churches have long been an important part of our Nation's heritage. They have served not only as places of worship, but also as the center and heart of a community. Certainly this has been the case with East Fork Baptist Church which has grown from its original membership of 14 to approximately 350 members today. Its baptismal records and Sunday School attendance sheets chronicle not only the church's history, but also the history of the comings, and goings, births, and deaths, and baptismals, and marriages of the entire community. The history of East Fork Baptist Church is, in fact, the history of the community it serves.

This weekend members and friends of the East Fork Baptist Church will gather to celebrate the 175th year of one of Mississippi's oldest churches. I know my colleagues will join me in saluting this fine church and its dedicated members.

IN A WORLD OF SENSELESS VIOLENCE

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, in a world of senseless violence, it is often the case that innocent victims pay the dearest price for the zealot's rage.

Consider the case of Robert Seifried, Jr. of Bay Shore, Long Island. A drummer in a local rock band, Mr. Seifried was leaving a convenience store in Brentwood during the early morning hours of September 6, when he saw a nearby house in flames. When he tried to lead the elderly couple inside to safety, a bomb which had been planted near the fire went off, maiming Seifried's right leg to the point where the amputation of his right foot was required. Now, his dream of being a professional drummer may be over.

The facts surrounding the incident are bizarre, to say the least. It seems that the owner of the house, Elmars Sprogis, was recently cleared of charges that he was a Nazi war criminal. After the bombing, the Long Island newspaper Newsday received a taped phone message which linked responsibility for the bombing to the Jewish Defense League. Later, the JDL denied a role in the incident, and the FBI is now investigating.

Whoever is responsible, it can be safely assumed that Robert Seifried, Jr. was not the intended victim. Yet, he is now permanently disabled, his musical career in jeopardy, and he is forced to assume the cost of his own recovery because of his lack of health insurance coverage. A radio station in the New York metropolitan area has begun a fundraising drive to help defray medical expenses, but even this can never give back to Robert that which he has lost.

Many people would emerge from this kind of incident terribly bitter about life. But, in a followup story printed in Newsday, Robert showed the same spirit which led him to help the couple in the burning house. "I just want to get out of here and get back to normal," he said from his hospital bed.

He also resisted any tone of vengeance when asked his opinion of his attackers. "I think they're stupid," he said, a sentiment with which all can certainly agree. There's a lot of stupid people in the world.

Indeed. Stupid people blow up houses and allow innocent people with humanitarian instincts to suffer. Stupid people blow up trans-Atlantic jetliners and kill hundreds, just to promote a political cause. Stupid people massacre millions of their countrymen in pursuit of ideological or ethnic purity, or crush to death soccer fans who happen to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. Yes, there are a lot of stupid people in the world.

But for every stupid person, there's also a Robert Seifried, Jr., one who altruistically risks his own health and well-being in an effort to save the lives of others. For every madman with a bomb or a gun, there is someone with compassion and humanity. And we can thank God for that.

Given the determination and spirit he has demonstrated both in his deeds and his reaction to misfortune, it seems safe to say that Robert Seifried, Jr. will bounce back. Already, he has spoken of his desire to get back behind a set of drums and resume his avocation.

If his case is any example, then there is truly little justice in this world. But as long as we have people around like Robert, there is hope, and that is something.

SUPERFUND AS METAPHOR

HON. JAMES T. BROYHILL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, one of the issues of paramount importance for the House to address in the remaining weeks of this session is legislation to extend and expand the "Superfund" Program to clean up our Nation's hazardous waste sites.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce has completed action on H.R. 2817, a 5-year, $10 billion reauthorization. Action is expected soon by the other committees involved—Ways and Means, for the tax portion, Public Works, Judiciary, and Merchant Marine. I sincerely hope that the House will take up and consider H.R. 2817 in the next few weeks.

The issues which we faced in the Commerce Committee—and which will be addressed to some degree by our sister committees and, ultimately, by all of the members—are extremely complex.

Everyone agrees we must make a major commitment to clean up our Nation's hazardous waste sites. Everyone agrees that we must do more.

Beyond these fundamental areas of agreement, there are honest differences of opinion among Members and among concerned organizations and citizens as to precisely what the terms of new legislation should be. Those who have focused on the problem, and who have been involved in close scrutiny of the program's implementation over its first 5 years, are well aware that the issues involved are among the most technically complex of any the Congress faces. Members should not be deluded into thinking that the answers, let alone the questions, are simple. In today's Washington Post, Robert J. Samuelson has written what I believe is a most thoughtful column on the subject, and I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. Samuelson's column, "Superfund as Metaphor," be inserted at this point in the RECORD for the benefit of the Members.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 11, 1985]

SUPERFUND AS METAPHOR

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

Remember Superfund? Back in 1980, Congress created the $1.6 billion program to clean up hazardous-chemical dumps. Five years later, here's where we are: We don't know how many dumps need to be cleaned, how much it will cost, how long it will take, or—indeed—whether it can be done. And, if it is done, we don't know what health and safety benefits will result. They could be quite modest.

Superfund—Congress is debating its renewal—is an apt metaphor for our environmental frustration. We want technology's benefits without adverse side effects. But the two are inseparable, and our efforts to achieve a socially and economically sensible balance constantly run afoul of unrealistic public expectations and scientific ignorance. As Superfund shows, it's not simply measuring risks against costs, because we're rarely sure what the ultimate risks are.

Almost any new technology is an adventure with an unknown ending. Since World War II, chemical production has expanded more than twelvefold. It has given us thousands of new products: From plastics to antibiotics, from pesticides to deodorants. But just as no one foresaw this chemical extravaganza, neither did anyone accurately predict its long-term dangers. Chemical wastes are but one of the unwanted surprises.

Even describing the Superfund problem is difficult. In theory, chemical wastes today are regulated under the 1976 Resource Conservation and Recovery Act; wastes are supposed to go into approved dumps. Superfund was created to control earlier abandoned dumps or dumps that fail today's regulatory standards. What we know now—but did not know in 1980—is that this problem was underestimated. Consider the statistics:

More than 21,500 chemical dumps have been reported to the Environmental Protection Agency. Of these, 14,329 have been reviewed, with 4,747 deemed serious enough to warrant an on-site inspection. So far, 851 have been proposed for, or put on, the National Priorities List (NPL), signifying serious danger of groundwater or atmospheric contamination.

Emergency cleanups have occurred at about 600 sites, including many not on the NPL, where immediate fire or public-health hazards existed. Drums of chemicals have been removed or disposal sites have been fenced off from the public.

Permanent cleanups at NPL sites have been slow; work has begun at 132, but only six have been finished. Once chemicals seep into the ground, remedies are expensive, time-consuming and often imperfect.

Excavations, the pumping and treatment of groundwater, or construction of new underground dikes may be required. EPA estimates the total number of NPL sites at 2,200; the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment thinks the number could exceed 10,000.

Our real confusion, though, transcends statistics. We made chemical dumps the problem, but they're not. The problem lies in their consequences to public health, which are unclear. Superfund has been legislation by horror story. It was inspired by the Love Canal scandal—the chemical landfill in New York that became a housing development. It was easy to sympathize with Love Canal's residents. A country of Love Canals is not a pretty vision. Neither, however, is it the reality.

All dumps are not Love Canals. Different chemicals have varying effects. Even if dangerous, the chemicals have to seep into groundwater or the air, and health problems usually result only from prolonged exposure. Even Love Canal's effects are hazy. There's some evidence of reduced birth weights and, in children around Love Canal, higher rates of abnormalities: rashes, eye irritations, seizures. But there's no evidence of increased cancer.

From what we now know, hazardous chemical dumps are at worst an isolated peril to small groups; at best, their dangers are exaggerated. For example, the National Cancer Institute attributes about 35 percent of cancer to dietary habits, another 30 percent to smoking, 5 percent to cancer viruses, and 3 percent each to excessive drinking and sunshine. All environmental causes (on-the-job exposure, general pollution, food additives) are linked to about 6 percent; dumps belong in this category.

But, politically, we're uncomfortable with such distinctions. The same individualism that demands the freedom to run huge personal-health risks—smoking, for example—also insists that much smaller risks not be imposed on us against our will or knowledge. We have boundless sympathy for innocent victims. Superfund reflects this bias, as well as another: We often fear the unknown more than the known.

Like nuclear power, chemical dumps inspire fears that defy hard evidence—and with some cause. We don't know all the long-term effects. Even the National Cancer Institute's list of cancer sources is a simplification; it minimizes the interaction of personal habits, the environment and genetics. More important, the ultimate danger of chemical dumps is the slow contamination of the groundwater that supplies more than half our drinking water. But dumps aren't the only pollutant, and the extent of groundwater pollution is unclear.

How much should we spend on Superfund? The administration has proposed a five-year, $5.3 billion program, arguing that there isn't scientific staff to handle more. The Senate is considering a $7.5 billion total; and the House, a $10.1 billion program. It's easy to say, "Spend enough to assure safety." But how safe is safe? Enormous sums spent to cure vastly exaggerated problems or to produce modest results are worse than wasted: They may divert attention—and funds—from more pressing problems.

The messiness of environmental regulation reflects this massive uncertainty and inevitable imperfection. The risks of modern technologies are both unavoidable and imprecise. Our ignorance poses opposite evils: Of not spending enough and suffering environmental revenge, or of wasting huge amounts to cater to uninformed public hysteria. We want clear answers when few exist and utopian solutions when none is possible.

NASA SALUTES HONEYWELL OF CLEARWATER FOR A JOB WELL DONE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, it's a real pleasure to learn about Federal projects that have been completed ahead of schedule and under budget.

Such is the case with Honeywell, Inc., of Clearwater, FL, one of the Nation's leading aerospace manufacturers and the largest industrial employer in Pinellas County, which I represent.

Honeywell designed, developed, built, and tested an important component of the space shuttle landing gear in only 3 months, completing the project in half the contracted time and just as importantly, finishing under budget. The system, developed as a special project by Honeywell for NASA, relays information from the space shuttle's front landing gear to the spacecraft's onboard computer, which activates the automatic braking and steering mechanisms. When installed, the Honeywell equipment will enable the space shuttle to more easily land on a shorter runway, such as that at the Kennedy Space Center. The equipment will first be installed on the Challenger for its November mission.

Honeywell's Clearwater division plays an integral role in the space shuttle program. In addition to equipment for the landing gear, the company's engineers and technicans have designed and manufactured important computer systems that direct flight and engine control.

Honeywell has also designed and produced major components of our national defense programs and continues to be involved with critical research and development of new systems.

The 100 members of the special team which developed the new space shuttle landing system, and all of Honeywell's 4,500 employees should be proud of their contribution to our Nation's national defense and space programs. They should also be proud of their efforts to save the American taxpayers money by making a special commitment to this program.

Following my remarks is an article by Charles Jaffe of the St. Petersburg Times about Honeywell's accomplishment. It sets an outstanding example for all Federal contractors and agencies:

[From the St. Petersburg Times, Sept. 6, 1985]

HONEYWELL HOPES TO GET BONUS FOR COMPLETING PROJECT EARLY

(By Charles A. Jaffe)

"Under budget" and "ahead of schedule" are two phrases rarely associated with government contracts.

Yet a Clearwater division of Honeywell Inc. hopes to get a bonus for completing a special project for the space shuttle program three months early and considerably below budget.

Honeywell designed a computer box that calculates the position of the nose wheel on the shuttle's landing gear. The Honeywell system relays information to the main onboard computer, which automatically engages the steering and braking necessary to safely stop the craft, said Dr. Bill Poe, Honeywell's vice president of space systems operations.

The system makes it easier for the shuttle to land on a shorter runway, like the one at Kennedy Space Center. Currently, the orbiters land at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

"Our system is good not only because it makes landing the orbiter more safe, but also because it makes a lot of economic sense by saving NASA the time and money of renting a 747 and flying the orbiter to Florida," Poe said.

"Still, what is most unusual about the project is that it was designed, documented, developed, tested and built by Aug. 27, in only three months," he added. "It wasn't due to be finished until November. And it really is unheard of to finish any device for the space program—no matter how simple—in three months.

Honeywell's device has yet to be installed on any of the four space shuttles. The system has been used during flight simulations "and has tested out perfectly," Poe said.

The system will make its maiden voyage aboard the shuttle Challenger in November. That orbiter will land in California so shuttle engineers have the longer runway on which to test the Honeywell system. However, NASA hopes that orbiters in the future will land at the Kennedy Space Center.

Honeywell estimates the cost of developing the system at $3.7-million, Poe said. That figure is below original estimates, which the government approved before sending Honeywell a letter to start development.

Poe said Honeywell does not have an official contract for the project, but is being paid for expenses. Honeywell hopes to receive a bonus for its on-time, under-budget performance.

A bonus "is our proposal, but we'll have to see if it comes about when the contract is negotiated," Poe said. "The really important thing for us was the way our people came together. There were about 100 who worked on the project, and they took it as a personal challenge to make this happen."

A NASA spokesman confirmed that Honeywell may receive a bonus "for a job well-done, but it hasn't been decided yet."

In addition to designing the nose gear control box, Honeywell's Aerospace and Avionics Division has done several other projects for the space shuttle program, including manufacturing computers involved in flight and engine control, Poe said.

It was one of Honeywell's engine control systems that halted a scheduled takeoff recently, after the computers sensed a malfunction in the engines.

Minneapolis-based Honeywell is the largest industrial employer in Pinellas County, with 4,500 employees at two aerospace manufacturing facilities. The company employs 1,500 people at a Tampa facility that produces electronics testing equipment.

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Howard L. Brown of Norwood, NJ, who is being honored by the U.J.A-Federation for his unswerving commitment to Israel and for his dedication to community service. Howard is a respected member of the business community, being the sole owner of Summit Office Supply and founder of Summit Printing Co. and Peak Computer Productions.

Howard's tireless devotion to Israel, and his many accomplishments, are an inspiration to us all. He has served as a trustee of the U.J.A. of Bergen County and is presently cochairman of its Initial Gifts Campaign. He will act as 1986 chairman of the Bergen County Palisades division, a group that he originated. He assisted in the formation of the Bergen County Chapter of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, and is very active in U.J.A.'s Operation Moses to help Ethiopian Jews in Israel.

Howard also gives tirelessly of his time to the community, an effort that was recognized when he received the American Cancer Society's 1982 Torch Award for distinguished service.

Tomorrow evening, the U.J.A.-Federation Campaign will pay tribute to Howard L. Brown for his many accomplishments and commitments. I join with his wife, Nancy, their children, Michele and Michael, and his many good freinds and colleagues in wishing my good friend, Howard Brown, a lifetime of happiness and success, and an evening to remember.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON JOBS AND SMALL BUSINESS

HON. LYNN MARTIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was pleased to join Congressman PARREN MITCHELL, chairman of the House Small Business Committee, and several of my House and Senate colleagues in convening the National Commission on Jobs and Small Business. Simply put, job creation is the most crucial test of our abilities to provide stability for the American worker.

I am particularly interested in the work of this Commission because the area I represent in northwest Illinois has been hard hit by the exodus of thousands of jobs. We must explore all avenues of job development, and quite frankly this Commission represents the most comprehensive effort I have seen.

In my home State of Illinois, there are over 260,000 small businesses which produce approximately $60 billion in goods and services and have a productivity rate 10 percent higher than the Nation's average; 99.6 percent of all businesses have 500 or fewer employees; this represents 75.3 percent of the State's work force, or 3,251,378 jobs. Furthermore, it is estimated that small firms will generate 50 to 80 percent of all new jobs.

Small business serves as the backbone of our small towns and urban areas. Small businesses are credited with producing 38 percent of our gross national product and 47 percent of our gross domestic product. And we should not forget that small businesses are oftentimes the chief avenue by which women, blacks, Hispanics, and other minorities realize the rich promise of the American dream. Clearly we need no other evidence to illustrate the importance of small business in Illinois or any other State.

We have charged the Commission with the awesome responsibility of providing a framework for new job creation through imaginative and innovative strategies. The specific topics to be addressed include: capital availability, foreign trade, entrepreneurial development, research and development, high technology, manpower and employee training, and national economic policy.

The Commission is nonpartisan, and it will be representative of the many constituencies with a stake in the outcome of the Commission's deliberations. Perhaps most important, the Commission will concentrate on developing feasible policy recommendations, not pie-in-the-sky pronouncements.

One hundred fifty years ago Alexis de Tocqueville wrote of America as:

A land of wonders in which no natural boundary seems to be set to the efforts of man; and in his eyes, what is not yet done is only what he has not yet attempted to do.

I look forward to working with the Commission in unleashing the potential of small business in America and furthering the spirit de Tocqueville saw in America.

"FLAGS OF CONVENIENCE" OR "RUNAWAY FLAGS"

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues to a July 26 Journal of Commerce editorial that raised some insightful questions on the plight of our Nation's merchant marine fleet. The editorial, whose insight was circulated and supported by the American Maritime Officers Service, paints an ominous setting for the future of our merchant marine in times of crisis.

Current figures indicate that the number of U.S.-owned ships registered under a U.S. flag is equal to the number of U.S.-owned ships registered under foreign flags. Of the 1,000-vessel merchant marine fleet, half are registered under foreign flags because it is often cheaper to maintain the vessel by hiring foreign crews that are willing to work for small wages and fewer benefits.

Although the cost of maintaining a foreign-flag vessel is smaller at this point, we must consider the enormous cost to our national security interests in the long run. Can we be assured that we will have effective control over U.S.-owned vessels registered under foreign flags or will our hands be tied when the need for these ships arises. The merchant marine provides the supply line between the industrial base at home and the troops on the front lines overseas. It is vital that this important lifeline be kept free of obstacles and that we be able to call upon this resource when it is necessary.

In recent years, a number of instances have indicated that our entire merchant marine fleet is not effectively under our control. During the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, United States vessels registered under Liberian flags were not permitted to deliver supplies to the Middle East. In recent months, three ships owned by Hong Kong and registered in Liberia have been denied access to Arab ports that are boycotting nations that have diplomatic or trade relations with Israel. Clearly, there is a need to reassess this policy and ensure that our national security interests are upheld. I commend the following editorial to the attention of my colleagues:

OMINOUS SCENARIO

American shipowners who operate their vessels under foreign "flags of convenience" should take note of a situation that is unfolding for some of their counterparts on the other side of the Pacific—as should all other parties to the long-running debate over the practice.

There are roughly as many American-owned ships registered in the foreign countries that have so-called open ship registries as there are American ships registered under the U.S. flag: about 500 each.

Americans and other nationals have used open registries for decades: The fees they pay to fly the flag of a nation like Liberia or Panama provide healthy revenue to those countries. And the attractions for shipowners are undeniable: lower costs—including significant savings in being able to use very low-cost foreign crewmen—and less red tape.

But there is heated opposition to the practice. American merchant seamen and their unions, who worked for years to reach their current salary levels, take bitter issue with American companies crewing American-owned ships with foreigners willing to work for a pittance; they call it the issue of "runaway flags."

There also have been safety considerations. Open-registry nations long have been accused of having low ship safety standards, and mishaps involving open-registry vessels have, in the past, been all too common. Liberia and Panama, however, began making concerted efforts to upgrade standards in recent years. And U.S. flag-of-convenience operators say their standards are far higher than technically required.

But there is yet another issue in the debate, one that is at the heart of much of traditional thinking about American merchant ships; national defense.

American maritime interests, military leaders and presidents from Franklin D. Roosevelt to Ronald W. Reagan have praised the American merchant marine in ringing tones for the vital role it plays in national defense by providing the supply lines between the industrial base at home and the troops on the front line overseas. Often it is called the nation's "fourth arm of defense."

And U.S.-flag shipping proponents ask a pointed question: can the United States, in time of emergency, depend on American-owned but foreign-registered and foreign-crewed merchant ships to support American forces?

U.S. open-registry advocates reply that such ships—many of which are large tankers unsuitable for military use anyway—are under what they call "effective U.S. control." There would be no problem in an emergency, they say. But the situation now developing for Hong Kong shipowners should raise new debate on that point.

Hong Kong has no ship registry of its own, and some 45 of the British crown colony's shipowners have a total of 400-plus vessels registered in Liberia. As reported in these pages a few days ago, however, a problem has arisen. Over the last three months, at least three of those ships have been refused entry at Arab ports that invoked a boycott of nations that have diplomatic or trade relations with Israel.

The sanctions have never really been applied to Liberian-flag vessels, although there was a brief time when a similar ban was called during the 1973 Israeli-Arab war. But Hong Kong shipowners are deeply concerned about more such actions. They've asked the Liberian government for help—and some are speaking of switching flags.

What does all this mean for American owners of Liberian-registered ships? Maybe nothing. Maybe these will turn out to have been isolated instances. But maybe they won't. Maybe they'll be the start of a trend—an ominous scenario that raises questions on just how effective U.S. control of the U.S.-owned, foreign-flag merchant fleet might turn out to be.

It may be too soon to see exactly what happens to the Hong Kong business interests and their Liberian-flag ships. But it may be too soon to take another look at what could happen to American-owned ships that fly the other nations' flags.

TRADE REORGANIZATION: AN IMPORTANT FIRST STEP

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, in seeking to improve America's competitiveness and reduce our intolerable trade deficit, we cannot ignore the gross inadequacies of the trade policy structure within the executive branch. The existing trade organization is outdated, disjointed, and confusing. It fails to provide clear leadership or effective coordination. It stands in the way of a coherent and comprehensive trade policy. It blocks swift and effective responses to unfair trading practices. And it is a complex maze of bureaucracy that frustrates American exporters.

Unlike most other areas of policy, no single individual or institution stands out as the recognized leader within the administration on international trade. There are not even any clearly understood or mutually accepted guidelines for determining how responsibilities over trade are to be divided. The result is an ad hoc system that lacks clear direction, needlessly wastes time and energy, and duplicates effort.

The recent trade negotiations with the Japanese present a perfect example of the current diffusion of authority over trade within the administration. During the course of these discussions, the President has alternately designated representatives of Commerce, the U.S. Trade Representative, Agriculture, State, and Treasury to lead the U.S. negotiating team. This musical-chair approach to a complex and vitally important negotiation is indefensible.

The interagency system is no better. When President Reagan entered office he created the Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade, chaired by the Secretary of Commerce, and the Senior Interagency Group of International Economic Policy, chaired by the Treasury Secretary, both of which shared responsibility for coordination of trade policy with the congressionally mandated Trade Policy Committee, chaired by the U.S. Trade Representative. Several months ago, the Cabinet Council and the Senior Interagency Group were disbanded, in favor of something called the Economic Policy Council, which is chaired by the Secretary of the Treasury. These complicated, transient, and conflicting arrangements generate endless turf battles and paralysis—not sound trade policy. If the administration cannot set their own house in order, then we in Congress must do it for them.

It is impossible, as well as undesirable, to consolidate all the trade-related offices within the executive branch into a single department. But we can end many of the most debilitating inefficiencies that stand in the way of a strong trade policy.

Today I am introducing a bill to establish a new Department of Commerce and Trade. This Department would consolidate most of the trade functions now delegated to the Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of the new Department would be the principal spokesman for the administration on trade and would be the President's top trade negotiator. The Department would administer our import relief and export control laws and would run our export promotion programs.

One important function, however, would not be delegated to the new Secretary: coordination of trade policies. Without the active participation of the White House, the legitimate trade interests of the other agencies would not be adequately considered in the formulation and implementation of trade policy. My proposal would retain and strengthen the White House's existing responsibilities for trade policy coordination.

Finally, my bill seeks to strengthen the role of the Agriculture Department in the trade policy process. Over the years, USDA has proven itself as an effective and responsible advocate for America's farmers. To ensure that the interests of the agricultural community are not overshadowed or ignored, USDA must be given a stronger voice in the development and implementation of U.S. trade policy.

One additional point should be noted: My proposal would in no way affect existing committee jurisdictions on Capitol Hill, nor would it diminish congressional prerogatives regarding international trade policy.

Responsible trade reorganization can strengthen the formulation and implementation of U.S. trade policies, improve coordination among the agencies, and increase the weight given to trade considerations in the broader context of U.S. domestic and foreign policymaking. Reorganizing the executive branch will not solve our trade problems, but it will be an important first step.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate and commend KXTV—Channel 10 as the station celebrates 30 years of broadcasting excellence in the Sacramento Valley on August 22, 1985.

As one of three major network affiliates in the 20th largest media market in the country, KXTV has been at the forefront of efforts to be a part of and serve the community in which it operates a broadcasting business.

Among some of its notable public service activities are "A New Morning," a daily public affairs show that discusses numerous topics of public interest; the "Waiting Child" series, a weekly news insert that features children available for adoption in the Sacramento area; cosponsorship of Eppie's Great Race, the oldest triathlon in the world that attracts hundreds of participants every year; sponsorship of the Big 10 Classic with proceeds benefiting the widows and orphans trust fund of the California Highway Patrol; sponsorship of the Annual Blood Donor Day, which has received the Distinguished Merit Award from the National American Association of Blood Banks and Best of the Class, an annual recognition program that focuses on high achieving students who are graduating from area high schools.

Under the able leadership of Mr. Allan Howard, vice president and general manager, KXTV continues to demonstrate excellent judgment and good sense and taste in its entertainment, information, education and public service programming. On behalf of the community of Sacramento and its citizens, I extend my personal thanks and congratulations on a job well done and my best wishes for many more years of successful and high quality programming.

YEAR OF THE DRAGON

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks the movie, "The Year of the Dragon," has opened at theaters around the country. In addition to the movie being a critical failure, "The Year of the Dragon" fails to accurately portray Americans of Chinese ancestry and their American experience.

Instead, we are presented with a narrow and twisted portrayal that distorts traditional cultural values and presents Americans of Chinese ancestry in a stereotypical role that is no doubt motivated by an attempt at drama but results only in racism. The film leaves the viewer with the suggestion that brutality and violence are an inherent part of Chinese culture.

It is a disturbing film. It should not have been made. "The Year of the Dragon" presents Americans of Chinese ancestry in a barbaric and uncivilized light that is offensive to all Americans.

IN MEMORY OF JO JONES

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness that I rise on behalf of the Congressional Black Caucus to call to my colleagues attention the passing of another legendary jazz musician, Jonathan "Papa Jo" Jones, who died September 3 at the age of 73.

A native of Chicago, Jo Jones studied piano, saxophone, and trumpet as a youth. In his teens, he performed in touring shows and carnivals with bands led by Bennie Moten and Walter Page. During the early 1930's, Jones received his first recording job with Lloyd Hunter's Serenaders in Omaha. He then moved to Kansas City where he first joined a combo led by Tommy Douglas. Then in 1935, he went to work at the Reno Club as the drummer for the Count Basie Band, the group which he performed with around the world over the next 13 years.

Jo Jones was a major innovator in the swing era whose light but precise 4–4 beat formed the backbone of the Basie Band. His style emphasized brushes and sticks and almost lyric accents on the symbols. Basie's band was well known for its great rhythm section, and Jones was its sparkplug.

Jo Jones incredible musicianship enabled him to delicately accent whatever front instrument that was playing. It also enabled him to work individually by using all four limbs to create separate and distinct rhythms on the symbols, snare, bass and tom-tom. His influence is seen in the work of the bebop drummers who emerged during the 1940's, including artists such as Kenny Clarke, Max Roach, and Art Blakey, and in the delicate strokes of a later drummer, Philly Joe Jones. Jo Jones opened up a new world of possibilities for percussionists, leaving behind the right, obtrusive thumping of an earlier era.

In 1948, Jo Jones left the Basie Band to tour with Illinois Jacquet. During the 1950's he freelanced around New York performing with Lester Young, Joe Bushkin, and the Ella Fitzgerald-Oscar Peterson group. He won the Down Beat critics poll in 1956. In the 1960's and 1970's, he worked with pianists Teddy Wilson and Milt Buckner. He also held his own groups during this period.

Jo Jones' death came just 2 weeks after his induction with other members of the original Count Basie Band into the International Jazz Hall of Fame in Kansas City, MO. Later this month, during the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation's 15th Annual Legislative Weekend, I will be participating in a ceremony to formally recognize that event.

It is my hope that the memory of Jo Jones, and his invaluable contributions, will help to preserve the history of jazz and enable all to study and continue to enjoy one of our Nation's uniquely American forms.

NO TO JORDAN ARMS SALE

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, recent press reports indicate that the White House is determined to go ahead with its ill-advised plan to sell advanced weapon systems to Jordan. Included in this package of goodies are F–20 aircraft and Stinger and Hawk antiaircraft missiles.

Administration spokesmen refer to the sale they are pushing as a test of American friendship. Since when is friendship a one-way commitment? Do true allies use the excuse of friendship to veil threats as Jordan appears to be doing in this case, and Saudi Arabia has done in the past? No! Mr. Speaker, our Nation must not be charged with the burden of proof to demonstrate commitment in United States-Jordan relations. It is time for Jordan to step forward and show sincerity in its relations. The time is long past due for King Hussein to recognize Israel and enter into direct negotiations with the Israeli Government.

I would like to remind my colleagues that a provision of the fiscal year 1986 foreign assistance appropriation bill we will soon consider contains language that reinforces congressional opposition to the sale of weapons to Jordan until King Hussein takes the tangible steps which demonstrate his government's willingness to accept the sovereignty of the Jewish State.

Mr. Speaker, let those who would have this country sell weapons to the so-called moderate Arab nations in the Middle East beware: If battle lines are drawn, the congressional fight will be fierce.

FEDERAL INDIAN SCHOOLS

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to introduce H.R. 3273, a measure to clear up a problem relating to eligibility to attend Federal Indian schools. This situation threatens the educational opportunity for over 900 children. Such attendance is currently governed by three separate and somewhat contradictory statutory provisons, provisions which were enacted as parts of funding bills at the beginning of this century. These provisions establish a blood quantum requirement for eligibility. These outdated provisions have been interpreted for over 60 years in a fashion that allowed local school administrators to determine when isolation or special circumstances warranted exceptions. However, now there has been an administrative proposal to remove this local discretion and place an absolute ban on attendance by certain groups who have historically received services. This has led to an outcry from tribal officials, parents, and educators.

Under this new interpretation, children will be prohibited from attending schools within walking distance of their homes, even though the students are fully enrolled members of a Federal recognized tribe. Children of teachers in these isolated Bureau schools will be prohibited from going to the school where their parents teach, instead being forced to spend up to 3 hours a day in schoolbuses traversing hazardous, poorly maintained roads. Students who have gone to community schools for years, some of them seniors in the school, will be suddenly and arbitrarily forced to go to a strange school, often under hardship conditions.

Matters are made worse by the fact that the Bureau of Indian Affairs has refused to state clearly whether or not it intends to go forward with enforcement of its new guidelines this year. While Bureau officials have told local schools to disregard the rules and allow these students to start this year in Bureau-funded programs, everything in writing states that these students will not be allowed to finish out this year. The Bureau has repeatedly told us that they will not make a final decision on the eligibility of these children until November 15, 1985, well into the school year. Frankly, they have also said that their hands are tied, that "things have gone too far." In the absence of remedial legislation, they say they must enforce the new policy, regardless of the impact it will have on the children, their families, teacher morale and stability, and program continuity.

This is a problem of the Bureau's creation. It is obvious that they now wish that they had not taken the first ill-advised steps on this road. However, once begun, they do not feel they can "back out" now. It is equally obvious that the Bureau is hoping that Congress will take the necessary action to extricate it from the mess.

That is precisely what H.R. 3273 does, and precisely why it is being introduced today. It essentially reinstates the policy which has been followed in Bureau schools for the past 40 years. Students who are one-quarter degree Indian blood or who are members of Federal recognized tribes would be eligible to attend schools and receive Federal support. Children of Federal employees, mainly teacher dependents, would also be allowed to attend the schools tuition free. It restates and reinforces the Secretary's authority to make the rules necessary to safeguard scarce Federal resources, by clarifying the Secretary's authority to charge tutition in other hardship cases. Furthermore, it makes these clarifications without adding a penny to the budget.

This is legislation which should be handled quickly, to minimize the damage already done this academic year. This is a bipartisan effort, with a companion bill being introduced on the Senate side today. I anticipate quick action by our colleagues in the Senate and ask for the support of all Members of this House.

A BILL TO EXTEND THE GENERAL REVENUE SHARING PROGRAM

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 1985

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing H.R. 3267 which will extend the General Revenue Sharing Program for an additional 7 years beyond this fiscal year. Since 1972, this vital program has provided financial assistance to thousands of locales throughout this country, helping them to provide essential services to their citizens.

This administration, after initially indicating its unqualified support of the General Revenue Sharing Program, proposed that it be eliminated and in the original fiscal year 1986 budget, deleted funding for the program. In the fiscal year 1986 budget resolution recently passed by the Congress, the program is scheduled to be eliminated after the fiscal year 1986 budget cycle.

The General Revenue Sharing Program is much too valuable to be eliminated. While the administration takes the approach that everything goes when it involves defense spending and foreign aid, it continues to assault many valuable programs such as general revenue which helps America's communities from sea to shining sea.

The rationale currently in vogue for eliminating the General Revenue Sharing Program is that it is unfair for States that have surpluses to be receiving funds from the Federal Government which has a huge deficit. In truth, only a handful of States have large budget surpluses; many have had to raise taxes and reduce services.

State governments themselves have not received revenue sharing funds since 1980, the reduced funds going now to some 39,000 cities, counties, townships, and villages throughout the country who are eligible.

We must also be equally concerned about fairness. We know that the massive reduction in funds to domestic programs has created tremendous hardships, and much of the burden has been shifted to State and local governments.

Eliminating the General Revenue Sharing Program would accentuate this burden as cities and municipalities are forced to reduce essential services or raise property taxes. Either way, the citizens of this country will be adversely affected.

The State of Michigan's treasury is hardly bulging. It is still recovering from the devastating recession caused by the Reagan administration's ill-fated economic policies. Detroit receives approximately $31 million in general revenue sharing funds while Wayne County receives some $13 million. Neither could make up the loss of funds, and none of the 73 counties and 1,718 locales in Michigan could count on the State to provide the $190 million which they currently receive from the General Revenue Sharing Program. Unemployment and suffering in my district still exceeds 25 percent.

The impact of eliminating the Revenue Sharing Program is multiplied when one considers that the administration has also proposed eliminating the Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG), the Small Business Administration (SBA), the Economic Development Administration (EDA), Legal Services, and Job Corps, and has reduced funding in health care including Medicaid, Medicare, and Child Nutrition, as well as Mass Transit, Housing, Food Stamp, and AFDC Programs. Additionally, the President has proposed that the current deductions for State and local taxes be eliminated.

We often speak of the need for national security as related to our military, but national security comes in many forms. To abandon our communities and to neglect the human welfare of our citizens are far greater threats to our national security than any foreign government could ever pose.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 12, 1985, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 12, 1985

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 11, 1985.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM WRIGHT to act as Speaker pro tempore on Thursday, September 12, 1985.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Reverend Robert Ard, director, Harambee House, and pastor, Christ Church, San Diego, CA, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, thank You for blessing America. Stand beside the men and women who serve in our Government; guide them in their deliberations so they may not be so overwhelmed with the complexities of proportions and percentages they neglect the problems and needs of the people. Let us be strong enough to defend ourselves, compassionate enough to assist others, and willing and wise enough to risk peace with those with whom we may disagree. Let justice be tempered with mercy. Let us forever proclaim, provide, and protect equality of access to the inalienable rights of all Americans regardless of gender, geography, economics, or ethnicity.

Dear God, thank You for blessing America and may we from the mountains, through the prairies to the ocean white with foam; responsibly share these blessings with the world.

In the name of Jesus the Christ, I pray for this body, this Nation and the world, to the living God who alone is worthy of praise. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

REV. ROBERT ARD

(Mr. BATES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, we have had the privilege today of having the Reverend Robert Ard provide the opening prayer.

Rev. Robert Ard has had a distinguished career in the 44th Congressional District of San Diego. He has provided a wealth of practical and spiritual guidance to the district and to the entire community.

As founder and pastor of Christ Church of San Diego he began the Come Eat With Us Program, as well as a variety of other help efforts including the community food pantry, and the community blood bank.

As the executive director of Harambee House, a residential-therapeutic program for delinquent juveniles, he has assisted hundreds of young men to become responsible citizens.

Reverend Ard's greatest contribution to the citizens of the district has been his capacity to become involved in the pursuit of justice and equality for all. He is a great man, and we are honored to have him share with the House part of his greatness.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE LAW AND GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT TODAY DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations of the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to sit on today, Thursday, September 12, 1985, while the House is reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBER TO CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Democratic caucus and by direction of the caucus, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 265) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 265

Resolved, That Jim Chapman (Texas) be, and he is hereby, elected to the following standing committees of the House of Representatives:

Committee on Public Works and Transportation (to rank immediately following Representative Long); and

Committee on Small Business (to rank immediately following Representative Long).

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A LETTER TO AMERICA'S PARENTS: START GETTING ANGRY

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, America's children will someday pay a huge price for today's budget deficits. How can we stop this? America's parents and grandparents have to realize what is happening, and get angry about it. Jean Mills of St. Petersburg, FL, a retired person, is angry about it. Here's what she wrote to me recently:

I'm afraid that the politicians have promised so much to the populace over the last 40 years that we are destroying ourselves with greed. Everyone now is "entitled" to something from Uncle Sam. There are many retired people who could live very well without Social Security, but they are the first to scream when mention is made about freezing an increase. They are "entitled," and by damn, they're going to collect every penny.

I feel very sorry for the young people of this country. There will be great resentment when they realize what is happening to their future earnings.

We must somehow win the battle of the deficit and save this country from its own greed. Someone has to tell the people they are bleeding their country to death.

Think about it, Mr. Speaker.

COMPENSATORY TIME AND OVERTIME PAY

(Mr. VALENTINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court has struck a potentially crippling blow against the core of American Government. In the Garcia case, the Court ruled that there are no constitutional limitations on the application of the Fair Labor Standards Act to employees of State and local governments.

The Court prohibited the traditional practice of allowing these employees to take compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay. It even prevented many of them from volunteering their time to local authorities.

This decision will hurt the very group it is apparently designed to assist, for these employees count on "banking" their compensatory time off. The decision will also raise taxpayer burdens. Gov. Jim Martin of my State has said that the decision will cost North Carolina more than $15 million in additional overtime pay alone in the next fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow life and death services to be curtailed. If just one citizen is victimized by a criminal because of reduced police protection, if just one family's home is destroyed by fire because a city could not afford overtime pay for firefighters, if just one person fails to receive emergency medical care because a volunteer ambulance driver cannot continue to work, then the cost of the Garcia decision will prove too high.

Several bills have been introduced which address this problem. I urge my colleagues to join in the effort to help our communities maintain their essential services. The Garcia decision will be implemented on October 15. It is vital that we act now.

There is an old saying in my part of the country: If it ain't broke, don't fix it. The Supreme Court has broken that rule, and now it is up to us to fix it.

OUR HAPLESS HOSTAGES

(Mr. O'BRIEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, in our travels about our area when we see the 7-Eleven stores, I suggest we use the vision of them as a reminder, a particular reminder of our hapless hostages, the seven Americans and the four Frenchmen, none of whom did anything but good things for the people of Beirut, as, for example, Father Jenco, my personal friend, whose charitable heart beats for anyone in need.

I wonder if they eat well? I wonder if they see each other or have a chance to speak? I wonder if their sleep is restless and haunted? I wonder if they wonder about us and what we are doing for them, and if, like the Son of Man, they may in the night time cry out, "Hast thou forsaken me?"

WILDERNESS BILL INTRODUCTION

(Mr. REID asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, a Congressman has a duty, inherent in his job, to create and support legislation that will benefit and protect his State and his Nation.

That is why I am today introducing the Nevada Wilderness Protection Act of 1985, a bill that is the product of diverse input and thousands of hours of study, a bill that designates approximately 723,000 acres of Nevada land as wilderness.

My bill is a well-balanced compromise in the best interests of the State and the Nation. It is not a bill for special interests. It is legislation that could not have been drafted without touring more than 1 million acres of Nevada with the Public Lands Subcommittee and talking to Nevadans throughout the State.

My bill includes 10 areas in Nye, White Pine, Elko, Esmeralda, Clark, and Washoe Counties. Where you'll find high peaks, wild valleys, and trout streams. Where walking, fishing, horseback riding, and hunting can be enjoyed. Where elk, deer, beavers, and bighorn sheep roam freely, and more.

Mine is a bill that will protect and preserve Nevada for diverse groups ranging from miners to environmentalists to ranchers to seniors to schoolchildren, and others. Mine is a bill for all Nevadans, for today and for the future.

COMMUNITY RIGHT TO KNOW LEGISLATION

(Mr. GALLO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I have joined with Congressman ROBERT WISE of West Virginia to sponsor a bill to give police and firemen information on potential hazards in cases of emergencies.

In New Jersey, State officials have said that the recent devastating fire in Passaic would not have been as serious if fire officials had known more about the contents of the buildings involved.

In Institute, WV, which is in Congressman WISE's district, a chemical discharge recently caused great concern about the need to give emergency personnel the right information on a timely basis.

This story is repeated across the country because there is no national procedure to help local officials deal with unique problems in their areas.

The bill we are introducing creates a system of emergency response procedures to get the right information to the right people at the right time.

The procedures in the bill are national in scope, but specific response plans will be developed in communities or counties across the country, based on local needs.

The bill includes $45 million for creation of a national emergency response training program under FEMA.

An additional $7 million would be made available for local planning under the bill.

States will have the opportunity to pass tougher laws or to continue to enforce existing measures.

There is real consensus developing for workable community right-to-know legislation.

Our bill is the result of discussions with many concerned people. I think it represents a real solution for the problems faced by communities across the country.

I feel strongly that our bill provides the needed national framework for emergency response, but leaves the real control of the program in the communities where it belongs.

I urge my colleagues to join the gentleman from West Virginia and me in support of a workable national community-right-to-know program to prevent further loss of lives and property.

INTRODUCTION OF THE EMERGENCY HOME FORECLOSURE RELIEF ACT

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, as sheriff of Mahoning County, OH, I refused to foreclose on people's homes during that term, and it caused quite a stir. We had lost 55,000 jobs, our steel mills were shut down, and good people with strong credit histories were suddenly in trouble and losing their homes.

As a result of this, today I am introducing the Emergency Home Foreclosure Relief Act, which will target areas with both a high home-loan delinquency rate and a high unemployment rate. This proposal will facilitate workout agreements between homeowners and creditors for the purpose of allowing individuals with temporary economic problems due to conditions beyond their control to save their family homes.

The bill will not protect deadbeats. I say that again. It will not protect deadbeats, those people with poor credit histories, but it will preserve the American dream for many—the family home—for those hard workers who deserve a break. And Washington should be paying attention to those Americans now who deserve that break.

I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY GONZALEZ,] for his continuing efforts in this area, and I thank him and his staff for assisting my staff and myself in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will review this and take a look at it. I think it has a lot of merit.

IMPORTS CITED AS REASON FOR CLOSING OF SHOE FACTORY IN MAINE

(Ms. SNOWE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, in Maine, we received a tragic confirmation yesterday of the absolute mistake President Reagan made when he failed to support any trade remedy for the domestic shoe industry.

The Bass Shoe Co. announced that it will close its shoe factory in Bangor, ME, putting more people out of work within 3 short weeks. This factory first opened in 1980, when modest restrictions on imported shoes were in effect, and at one point employed as many as 350 workers.

But, unshielded from the cascade of imported shoes, the Bass shoe factory in Bangor has had to lay off workers and, now, close its doors for good. Company President Richard Bourret said:

> We have continued to operate in Bangor in the hope that domestic production needs would increase. But there has been no change in the domestic market conditions, leaving the company no choice but to reduce operations.

Indeed, the personnel director of the factory stated that the decision to close was made "when it became clear that import relief would not be coming,"

Mr. Speaker, this story of dashed hopes and economic dislocation is being repeated throughout the country, and it will continue to spread unless this House takes swift action to halt the unchecked onslaught of imported shoes.

LEGISLATION TO EXEMPT GOVERNMENTAL UNITS FROM CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

(Mr. RUDD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, this year's Supreme Court ruling in the case of Garcia versus San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority is already posing serious budgetary and administrative problems for State and local governments.

Many flexible employment practices are no longer possible. Volunteers have to be compensated at least at the minimum wage. Accruing compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay—a practice used extensively by police and firefighters—is prohibited.

If allowed to remain in effect, the Supreme Court decision would prove devastating to State and local governments, costing an estimated $1 billion in the coming year or forcing layoffs or reductions in services.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring H.R. 3237 or H.R. 3230, introduced by my two Nebraska colleagues, Representatives VIRGINIA SMITH and HAL DAUB, respectively. These measures will overturn the Garcia ruling by exempting State and local governments from the overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act as well as exempt volunteers from its minimum wage and overtime requirements. The bills must be passed at an early date.

THE GOAL IS FAIR TRADE, NOT PROTECTIONISM

(Mr. GEPHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago, the administration labeled efforts to eliminate unfair trading practices overseas as rank protectionism. Well, this has now become the umbrella under which the President has decided to protect himself from charges that his administration has lacked a trade policy.

The President's decision to act on the trade issue is simply too little too late. On one hand, he rejects the pleas of the domestic shoe industry—who played by the rules—and on the other, he claims that he is going to use his existing authority, and then some, to do what he has been authorized to do for the last 5 years.

We have a bystander President who lives in an Alice-in-Wonderland world where deficits, be they trade or budget, simply don't matter. We have a President who calls a tax increase, revenue enhancement. We have a President who calls rebels, freedom fighters. If we continue to look through Ronnie's looking glass, we will bring our Nation to ruin.

Now is the time for action on the trade front. It's not a time for creating a "war chest" as Vice President BUSH has called for, but a time for negotiating fair rules of trade worldwide. By saying we're going to meet fire with fire, as BUSH called for yesterday, we are simply inviting a trade war.

It seems that the President has misread what the Democrats and the American people have been asking for for the last 5 years; we don't want a trade war, we want fairplay. I and my fellow Democrats here in Congress stand for fair trade, not protectionism.

DEATH OF HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST, VASYL STUS

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, as a Congressman, as a Helsinki Commissioner, and as a human being, I rise today to eulogize Vasyl Stus, a courageous and indefatigable fighter for the rights of individuals and a victim of the Soviet Union's brutal system for the suppression of human thought.

Last week Mr. Stus, a 47-year-old Ukrainian poet and member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group, died in prison in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Government is responsible for his death. They put him in labor camps, denied him medical treatment after most of his stomach was removed, and subjected him to forced labor to hasten his demise. There is a systematic policy whereby Helsinki Monitors are perishing prematurely in Soviet prison camps.

Stus' manuscripts were confiscated and destroyed. But some of his poems have reached the West. In one of them he wrote:

> Is there in this world a trumpet that will sound a final blast to keep me from resurrection? Flow, water, flow and sweep me away form my weariness, for eternities of bondage have crushed me.

Last Thursday, five of my distinguished colleagues and I joined in front of the Soviet Embassy to sound a trumpet in support of Andrei Sakharov. His stepson is conducting a hunger strike in front of the Embassy to gain information about the whereabouts and condition of his parents. Dr. Sakharov is another of the tens of thousands of prisoners of conscience like Vasyl Stus, who suffer at the hands of the Soviet Government. While such efforts come too late for Mr. Stus, we must press forward with our attempts to win freedom for political prisoners in the Gulag.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach this fall's summit meeting between President Reagan and Party Secretary Gorbachev, the people of the United States look upon the refusal of the Soviet Union to abide by its commitments to the Helsinki Human Rights Act as deeply disturbing.

It is difficult to discuss peace with a superpower which wages war against its poets.

HIGH TRADE DEFICIT MEANS LOST AMERICAN JOBS

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post reports today that the President, Mr. Reagan, has met with Republican leaders and has promised them that he now understands the trade problem; that he will take initiative to offer legislative remedies for his failed trade policy. Unfortunately, this realization comes too late for many American workers who have already lost their jobs to the failure of the administration's trade policy.

In 1980, the year Mr. Reagan was elected, the trade deficit was about $36 billion. By the end of 1985, it is projected to be more than $160 billion.

Mr. Speaker, like a blip on an electrocardiogram, the $160 billion trade deficit means that many American workers have already lost their jobs, that factories have closed down, and that America suffers from the lack of a trade policy.

Mr. Speaker, what is needed is Presidential leadership that recognizes the urgent needs that America faces today.

SELECT BLUE RIBBON TASK FORCE TO SOLVE FARM CREDIT CRISIS

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, the farm credit crisis is upon us. The problems afflicting the farm credit system are so severe that unless some corrective steps are undertaken immediately the slide in real estate values in the 1930's will look like a mere seasonal adjustment.

I am introducing a sense-of-Congress resolution which calls for the creation of a select blue ribbon task force to solve the farm credit crisis. Composed of Members of Congress, officials from the Government, and lending institutions, this blue ribbon task force would have the expertise and nonpartisan makeup necessary to complete the job in a timely fashion.

Two immediate steps we must see if we are going to keep the farm credit system solvent are a dramatic drop in the interest rates and significant steps to stop the slide in real estate values.

I urge all my colleagues who are concerned about the future of the farm credit system, the agricultural economy, and basic productivity of food in this country, to cosponsor my resolution.

We must act now to solve the farm credit crisis.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH ON TRADE DEFICIT JUST DOES NOT CUT IT

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, last week the American people anxiously awaited our President's first major speech on the trade deficit; but after hearing the President's recent radio address, I am sure a lot of people are still waiting. The President's plan is weak and cosmetic. It will do nothing to get at the heart of the trade crisis facing our Nation. Why was there no mention of steel, machine tools, or agriculture? Why did he ignore the plight of the U.S. shoe industry? How could the President outline a trade strategy and not even discuss the automotive industry? Last year, nearly one-third of our trade deficit was with one country—Japan; and of that $36 billion trade deficit with Japan, $19 billion was in automobiles and automobile parts.

Mr. President, your speech just did not cut it.

Why will you not direct your administration to get to the guts of the trade problem? Who is afraid to go toe to toe with our trading partners? The people in my district want some answers. We know a smokescreen when we see one. Mr. President, your announcement last week did not fool anybody.

WHY ARE WE AFRAID TO DISCUSS AIDS

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, two issues frequently lead off if not dominate the news on our evening network news broadcasts over these summer months, the violence in South Africa and a disease called AIDS that is epidemic and killing people of all ages across our great country.

I have never, ever heard of a speech about AIDS in this House or in the other Chamber. Not 1-minute opening session speeches, not in any committee hearings or committee debate on the floor, not even in special order speeches at the end of House sessions. Yet we hear multiple speeches daily on South Africa.

Why are we afraid in the Senate and in the House to talk about a death-delivering disease, a communicable disease that has killed over 6,000 of our citizens?

One person dies per day of AIDS in Los Angeles. I heard in Orange County on a visit over the weekend to my district that three per day in Los Angeles contract AIDS. Three people contract an incurable disease with no cure leading to certain death every day. And it is spilling over into my county of Orange. That means 2 years from now three will be dying every day in Los Angeles and nine or more will be contracting it. Unless, of course, this terrifying epidemic explodes in geometric proportion and everyone is afraid to ever discuss that probability.

This morning on CBS I heard four doctors discussing the AIDS epidemic on split screen from New York City, San Francisco, Atlanta, and Washington, DC, and none of them could agree on basic medicine in regard to this raging epidemic. One doctor says AIDS is only spread from anal intercourse among homosexuals; another doctor says wrong, "I disagree, Doctor. It is only promiscuity, that spreads AIDS, heterosexual or homosexual, Doctor." Confusion. Contradiction. Is it any wonder that parents are picketing. Is it any wonder parents are frightened. Much of the Hollywood product and much of rock music tells our kids to get promiscuous as fast as they can, do it as often as they can, as young as they can and if you get syphilis, gonorrhea, herpes II or sure-death AIDS, well, you're on your own, loser. Yet we are afraid to discuss it here or at the White House level. Only Peggy Heckler, our former colleague heading up HHS and her Assistant Secretary for Health, Dr. James Mason, discuss this nightmare publicly. And, of course, our courageous Surgeon General, Dr. Ev Koop.

One more minute, Mr. Speaker. I am asking Dr. Mason to come to my office next Thursday the 19th. I am inviting all the Members to get a detailed briefing on a death-dealing disease that we are terrified to discuss openly in this House. I will let the Members know in a Dear Colleague letter when and where they can get the brutal facts about death by disease in the United States and Europe and what the AIDS epidemic will be like next year and the years to follow. The main thing we have to fear, not the only thing but the main thing, is fear and phoney embarrassment.

I thank the Speaker for his patience.

CHEMICAL HAZARDS

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, during August national attention focused on my district when a chemical leak caused 134 persons to seek medical attention, but in that week, Mr. Speaker, we found that hundreds of people across the country were evacuated or hospitalized as a result of similar incidents.

Today, my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. DEAN GALLO, and I are introducing what we believe is a workable solution to the chemical right-to-know issue. Our legislation guarantees that every State will have an emergency response plan and give assistance to local communities. It creates community right-to-know laws. It requires chemical operators to give immediate notice to local authorities when they know an emergency exists.

In April and May of this year there were 33 major chemical incidents nationwide exposing countless thousands of American citizens to danger.

In 1983, there were 91 incidents on our Nation's waterways involving more than 2 million pounds of hazardous substances.

In 1984, there were 237 accidents on our Nation's railroads involving chemicals, with 54 actual releases.

I am hopeful that the compromise that my friend, the gentleman from New Jersey, and I have reached will be included in the Superfund bill, Mr. Speaker, that is now moving through Congress. That is our aim and as the statistics I have mentioned clearly point out, it is about time.

OUR HEAVY BURDEN OF DEBT

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, this Nation now has $2 trillion in national debt. There is nothing more revealing about the horrors of the congressional spending spree over 40 years than $2 trillion in national debt.

The U.S. News & World Report says this week that that amounts to $37,000 for each American family. There are very few American families who have incurred $37,000 of debt on their own, except for one thing, and that is to buy the house that they live in. Other than that, very few American families have $37,000 in debt, but we have given them that much debt with the spending spree that we have been on.

Now, if you add up the interest to each family that has to be paid on that $37,000 at the 7½-percent interest that the Government is now paying, that is $2,075 a year that is it costing each American family for the debt that we have in their name.

It is interesting to note that the average American taxpayer pays only in personal income taxes, and I say only, it is a lot of money to that family, but they pay $2,766 in taxes. That means that every dime that is being paid by the average taxpayer to the Government is being eaten up in the interest burden that has been incurred on their behalf by this Congress. If there is anything that tells us why this Congress has got to stop its spending, it is that figure. We cannot go on having people paying all their taxes simply to pay interest on the debt. It is disgusting.

ADMINISTRATION ALREADY HAS AUTHORITY TO DEMAND FAIR TRADE

(Mr. JONES of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the news media would indicate that this administration has finally awakened to the fact that unfair international trade is costing American jobs and hurting American families and now this administration is scurrying around trying to come up with a trade bill. But before they take some cosmetic approach to these unfair trade practices, I hope that we will remember that they have all the authority they need to demand fair trade in this world right now.

The last Congress enacted into law legislation called reciprocity. That gave the President broad new authority to tell any country on this Earth that discriminates against United States products in their markets that we are going to reciprocate and close some of our markets to their products. That authority has never been used by this President. The responsibility for the unfair trade has got to rest on the shoulders of this administration.

I am frankly tired of having the United States treated like a Patsy in international markets. It is time that this administration adopt a get tough trade policy, not with words, not with cosmetics, but with action. It is time to negotiate fair and open trade throughout this world. Until that happens, all the words from this administration will not save jobs and protect families here in the United States.

ETHIOPIA'S HORRENDOUS HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the foreign aid bill passed by this Congress requested that the President determine whether Ethiopia is deliberately starving its people.

The President's determination describes the horrendous human rights record of the Ethiopian regime. It even states that—

> The Ethiopian Government's political, economic, and military policies have no doubt caused vast and unnecessary human suffering, including starvation * * * these policies have led to the starvation of hundreds of thousands of people with millions more at risk.

Despite all this, the President has determined that Ethiopia is not deliberately starving its people. If blowing up relief trucks, blocking food shipments, spending millions on a military buildup is not a deliberate policy of starvation then I don't know what is.

Mr. Speaker, this determination is telling the Ethiopian Government that you can continue to starve your people, but we will say you are not, so we can keep trading with you. I think that is exactly the wrong message to send. This determination is an embarrassment and a scandal and it should be reversed.

H.R. 7, THE SCHOOL LUNCH AND CHILD NUTRITION ACT

(Mr. SLATTERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague, Chairman HAWKINS, and members of the Education and Labor Committee for reporting a fiscally responsible school lunch and child nutrition reauthorization bill.

The programs reauthorized by this legislation represent the Federal Government's primary ammunition in the war against hunger and malnutrition in this country. Children, the initial beneficiaries of these programs, are our future.

I understand amendments may be offered during debate affecting the National School Lunch Program.

I am advised by the Kansas Department of Education that should an amendment to eliminate the Federal cash subsidy for paid school lunches succeed, approximately 42 percent of the school districts in the State may not be able to continue as participants in the program. In my district alone, the participation of almost half of the school districts would be placed in jeopardy.

Due to the depressed farm economy, the local boards of education would find it exceptionally difficult to raise either the local mill levy or the price of student lunches to offset the absence of the Federal subsidy. Schools in rural areas, where free and reduce price meals constitute a small percentage of the total meals served, would be dealt the greatest disservice.

My colleagues know that I strongly support efforts to reduce the deficit. My support for these efforts is tied directly to my belief that the Federal Government has under its wing programs in little need of Federal financing. The National School Lunch Program, however, cannot be placed in this category.

The educational excellence of our children is substantially linked to the success of the school lunch program. I urge my colleagues to vote no on any proposals to cut the child nutrition programs in this country.

CONDEMNING KIDNAPING OF INES GUADELUPE DUARTE DURAN

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 187) condemning the kidnaping of Ines Guadelupe Duarte Duran, daughter of President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PERKINS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 187

Whereas on September 10, 1985, Ines Guadelupe Duarte Duran, daughter of President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, was kidnapped and her driver and one of her bodyguards killed;

Whereas President Duarte has issued a statement saying that "We condemn this horrible act that shows an absolute disregard for human rights";

Whereas the Department of State has issued a statement deploring the kidnapping;

Whereas the kidnapping violates international standards of human rights and the laws of armed conflict; and

Whereas such actions will not shorten the conflict in El Salvador, but prolong it: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress condemns the unjustified and reprehensible kidnapping of President Duarte's daughter, demands that she be released unharmed, and offers its full support to President Duarte in his efforts to secure the release of his daughter and to secure a just end to the conflict in his country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is with a combination of outrage and sadness that I bring this resolution before the House this morning.

The resolution condemns the kidnaping of the daughter of that good and decent man, President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, by persons as yet unknown.

I am outraged by the wanton brutality of this act. I am outraged that anyone could consider that any legitimate purpose of armed conflict could be served by the deliberate targeting of innocent family members of political leaders.

And I am saddened because the target of this irresponsible action—President Jose Napoleon Duarte—is the single person most responsible for the fact that El Salvador has moved beyond the dark days when attacks like this occurred routinely. President Duarte has made it his own personal commitment to stop the death squads, stop the disappearances, stop the kidnapings, stop the violence directed at innocent civilians. Now his own family has become the victim of that very violence.

As all my colleagues know, I have been at the forefront of those who for years urged this Congress and this administration to speak out against the death squads, to make it clear that those who engage in this kind of activity cannot expect the sympathy of the United States.

Now I urge this body to send the same message to whoever perpetrated this outrage. I urge my colleagues to send a clear message that—

We condemn this unjustified and reprehensible kidnaping of President Duarte's daughter;

We demand that she be released unharmed;

We fully support President Duarte in his efforts to secure the release of his daughter; and Whatever effect the kidnapers may expect to achieve, we will continue to be firm in our support of President Duarte's efforts to secure a just end to the conflict in his country.

I know that all my colleagues join me in extending our understanding, sympathy, and support to President Duarte during this difficult time. Passing this resolution this morning will be a concrete expression of our sentiments. I urge the unanimous adoption of the resolution.

□ 1040

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to my colleague and friend, the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO], for agreeing to cosponsor this resolution with me. I would like to yield to the distinguished gentleman from California for any comments that he may have about our resolution.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I want to commend him for introducing this resolution and for including me as the principal cosponsor.

Mr. Speaker, the kidnaping of Ines Gaudelupe Durate Duran, the daughter of President Duarte of El Salvador, is a senseless, barbaric act, and is condemned by all responsible citizens in El Salvador, here, and around the world.

Apparently, and I checked just a moment ago with the State Department, there is no information at present confirming the identity of the kidnapers, although the evidence seems to suggest it is the work of leftist guerrillas. But no matter who it is, what group it is, what their politics are, it is clear, at least it is very clear to me, that they disagree with the policies of Jose Napoleon Durate and of the United States and of what he is doing in El Salvador, trying to promote democracy.

We can all only imagine the pain that he is suffering.

He is quoted as saying

I am definitely in pain, the pain only a father knows when he is in such a situation. But I also have a duty to my country and I am fulfilling it.

Many of us remember what President Duarte told us about 1 year ago, shortly after his election, when he came here to the United States to talk to Members of Congress about assistance to his country, which he succeeded in getting. He said at that time that he was willing to risk his life, to give everything for the cause of democracy in El Salvador. What he is going through now probably exceeds in pain even what he was imagining when he talked to us.

So Mr. Speaker, I know that our sympathies are with the President and our hope is for his daughter's safe return and for the adequate punishment of those who performed this terrible act. I think again, as the chairman pointed out, that we should make it clear, as we do, that we are not going to be swayed from what most of us in this Chamber, and I think most Americans at this point believe: Namely, that democracy is succeeding, going forward in El Salvador, that President Duarte is one of the primary instruments of that, and that this attack on him through his daughter is not going to succeed.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNES. I am happy to yield to the distinguished ranking member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to pay my respects and congratulations to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES], the chairman of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee, as well as the gentleman from California, Mr. BOB LAGOMARSINO, the ranking Republican, for bringing this resolution before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, I offer my support of this resolution which condemns the recent kidnaping of Ines Guadalupe Duarte Duran, daughter of President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador. Once again, mindless terrorism has struck out at an innocent human being. Regardless of what the terrorists may do, however, El Salvador will not give in to their senseless violence.

As my colleagues well know, Mrs. Duarte Duran was kidnaped after attending classes at the New San Salvador University. In the ensuing shootout, one of her security guards was killed and another was wounded.

As the Communist-backed guerrillas in El Salvador lose the war in the countryside, they have shifted their destructive activities to the urban centers of that once peaceful country. In recent months, innocent Salvadorans have been killed by these urban terrorists along with a group of four offduty U.S. Marines assigned to protect the American Embassy in that country. The guerrillas who killed the marines recently vowed to "annihilate" all American military advisers in that country.

I join my colleagues in calling upon those who kidnaped Mrs. Duarte Duran to release her unharmed. The free world will not give in to terrorism and those who solve problems from the barrel of a rifle. Random killing and violence directed against the freedom-loving people of that country will not bring down that freely elected government. Peace will come through negotiations, not with Russian assault rifles.

I praise President Duarte for the progress he has made in taking El Salvador along the road to democracy and wish him courage and strength during this difficult moment for his family and for his country.

I call upon my colleagues to join me in offering our support of this resolution.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNES. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and thank him for introducing this resolution, and in a very timely fashion.

President Duarte has been doing an outstanding job in El Salvador in dealing with the problems that they face in that country, both economic and military. I think he is to be commended, especially in view of all of this adversity.

One thing I would like to point out, however, as we continue to talk about leftist guerrillas possibly being responsible for this. Let us call a spade a spade. The leftist guerrillas are Communist guerrillas backed by the Soviet Union and the Nicaraguans and other Communist fellow travelers who are active in our hemisphere. We must remember that their total goals and objectives are to dominate all of Central America, and we must not allow that to happen.

When they resort to killing marines in El Salvador, or kidnaping President Duarte's daughter, it is a manifestation of their ultimate goal, that of conquest of all of Central America, which would endanger the very security of the United States of America. We must not allow that to happen. We must make sure the American people are very much aware of what the Communists throughout the world have as their ultimate objective, and that is the United States of America.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 187, condemning the kidnaping of Ines Guadelupe Duarte Duran, daughter of President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, and which offers the assistance of the United States in efforts to secure her release.

Mr. Speaker, this is a most despicable act which must be condemned in the strongest terms. It is further evidence of the disregard for human life and basic international standards of human rights by the extremists in El Salvador who are continuing to subject the citizens of that country to the most severe civil strife.

It is against the perpetrators of such actions which President Duarte has staked his personal and political life, and against which the United States must stand equally strong. President Duarte and Ines Guadelupe's children and husband have our heartfelt sympathy and prayers for the safety of his daughter and we offer the Salvadoran Government our assistance in securing her release.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption on House Concurrent Resolution 187.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNES. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, as appropriate as it may be to express our indignation at a horrendous act of violence, I never have favored violence as any kind of a policy that is susceptible of resolving any kind of human dilemma. The biggest single unlearned lesson of mankind is that violence has never resolved any kind of a problem confronting mankind.

On the other hand, I think that we have to be realistic and truthful enough to accept our responsibility for what obviously, in my mind, is going to be a continuing and successive episode of events such as this. We have decided that we would impose our will on El Salvador. At this particular time, the available means that we happen to find is President Duarte.

The fact is that no matter how much we have insisted on trying to make this an East-West confrontation, the fact in El Salvador and elsewhere in Central America, as is right now the case in Guatemala—Guatemala is not in the headlines, but it soon will be—where we have tolerated great injustices based on violence and terrorist tactics. We have been culprits in that respect. It ill behooves us to raise a cry of indignation at acts of terrorism when we ourselves have perpetrated them against even nations that to the world we proclaim amnesty and friendship by sending envoys that are there now, such as in Managua. In El Salvador, as I rise here now at this moment, we have our Huey attack helicopters under the guidance and direction of General Duarte, and annihilating children, women, innocent infants up in those mountain areas in the provinces where the scorched-earth policy is no different whatsoever from what we accuse the Russians of doing in Afghanistan, no difference whatsoever. If we look at it from the standpoint of the Russian/Afghanistan situation where Afghanistan is like Mexico is to us, and we look upon the whole situation as their attempt to safeguard their borders, then we have got to recognize that what I think we are doing in El Salvador, even with the best intentions, is reprehensible. We cannot justify the tactics that we have been using in an attempt to subdue the so-called leftists in El Salvador who are innocent civilians, grandparents, children, 6-month-old babies are being blasted out of existence.

In Guatemala, the same thing. It is not any importation of Russian-made, Cuban-made arms. They are almost 100 percent American-made arms, or a residue of Israeli-made arms that are exterminating Indian tribes in Guatemala.

Mr. BARNES. Let me say to the gentleman that I apologize for interrupting the gentleman, but I am going to have to take back my time. We have the Rules Committee awaiting action on a couple of rules.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I do think we have to counterbalance these things and see the realism of it, and see that we have a continuing responsibility for some of these acts of terrorism, and we are going to continue. I predict we will see more of this rather than less.

Mr. BARNES. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge a unanimous vote in support of this resolution condemning the act of violence, the murder of innocent civilians in El Salvador, and the kidnaping of the daughter of President Duarte.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNES. I have promised the Rules Committee that we would be out of here in 3 minutes, and we have already been here 20 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Was there any time on our side?

Mr. BARNES. There has been time on your side. Several Members of our side have spoken.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the concurrent resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 61. Concurrent resolution to commend Pete Rose on becoming the all-time Major League leader in base hits.

PROVIDING FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 7, SCHOOL LUNCH ACT AND CHILD NUTRITION AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 262 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 262

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7) to extend and improve the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points or order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 401(b)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, each section of said substitute shall be considered as having been read, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI and section 401(b)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and support the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 262 is the rule providing for the consideration of the bill H.R. 7, the National School Lunch Program and the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985.

Mr. Speaker, the rule provides 1 hour of general debate, divided between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 262 makes in order the amendment in the nature of a substitute which is recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor. This amendment is to be considered as original text, with each section considered as read.

The rule waives points of order under section 401(b)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act against consideration of the bill and the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. Section 401(b)(1) of the Budget Act prohibits the consideration of legislation which provides new entitlement authority to be effective before the first day of the fiscal year which begins in the calendar year in which the legislation is reported.

Since the bill and the substitute provide new entitlement authority for the School Breakfast and Child Care Programs which is to become effective July 1, 1985, and since this is before the first day of fiscal year 1986, the bill and the amendment violate section 401(b)(1) of the Budget Act. However, the Committee on Education and Labor has agreed to offer a floor amendment making the programs concerned effective October 1, 1985, and therefore, curing the Budget Act violation. As a result the committee considers the waiver purely technical.

The rule waives clause 5(a) of rule 21, which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill against that substitute. Certain provisions of H.R. 7, as reported, allow previously appropriated funds to be used for new activities and thus constitute appropriations. Since H.R. 7 is not an appropriation measure a waiver of clause 5(a) of rule 21 is needed.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985, reauthorizes five expiring programs which are designed to ensure a nutritionally adequate diet for children from low-income families and to provide for nutritional needs of the Nation's elderly. The five programs are the supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children, more commonly known as the WIC Program; the Summer Food Service Program for low-income children; the Commodity Distribution Program that provides support for both children and older Americans; the State Administrative Expense Program, which provides payments to States to pay for the costs of the programs, and the Nutrition Training and Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 7 would authorize $1.86 billion for fiscal year 1986, $1.95 billion for fiscal year 1987, and $2 billion for fiscal year 1989. Of the total funding for fiscal year 1986, there is $121 million in new funding for expansion of existing programs. The bill would add 120,000 new participants and $60 million for the WIC Program.

Mr. Speaker, a similar bill was passed by the House during the 98th Congress, but no action was taken on the bill by the other body. In order to prevent the termination of these programs they were extended for 1 year in the continuing resolution for fiscal year 1985. Mr. Speaker, unless the House enacts this legislation the existing programs will expire at the end of the month. I urge my colleagues to vote for House Resolution 262.

□ 1120

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule and I urge its adoption.

H.R. 7 is a very important bill reauthorizing a number of Federal food programs, many of which are set to expire at the end of this month. The five expiring programs are the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children—the so-called WIC Program—the Summer Food Service Program for Children, the Commodity Distribution Program, payments to the States to pay for the administrative costs and the Nutrition Education and Training Program.

In addition to extending these programs, the bill also expands the School Lunch Program both by broadening its eligibility and by enhancing the nutritional value of the meals it provides to our schoolchildren.

I don't think there is any significant disagreement about the reauthorization of these important Federal food programs, but there is some dispute over the amount of money that should be spent on them. H.R. 7 sets the spending level at $1.6 billion for fiscal year 1986 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1987 and 1988. This compares to the $1.5 billion provided during the current fiscal year and the administration's budget request for $1.5 billion for the coming fiscal year.

Last year the House passed a similar bill by a vote of 343 to 72. The other body, however, failed to take up that bill and these programs were included in the continuing appropriation resolution. I hope that history will not be repeated this year because these important programs deserve careful consideration in their own right and on their own merits.

Mr. Speaker, since this is an open rule permitting full debate and the opportunity for Members to vote on all the issues in dispute regarding this bill, I ask for a "yes" vote on the rule so that we can get down to the business of working on this important bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, here we go again. Once more, we bring a rule to the floor that waives the Budget Act. Remember just about 6 weeks ago when we passed the budget, with all of the flowery headlines and all of the flowery press releases about what we were doing to end deficits and bring down the amounts of money that we were spending in deficit? Remember all those headlines back home that all of us gloried in? Well, when it comes to actually spending money, guess what. We use the rules process to simply say that the Budget Act is irrelevant, bring it out here, waive the Budget Act, spend the money. That is how we get big deficits. This rule is another link in the chain of big deficits.

Why? Well, this one is really bad. Now, some of them I have mentioned before are kind of procedural. But here you have got one that is really a doozy, because in this particular rule what we are waiving in the Budget Act is entitlement authority. In other words, what this bill does is it creates new entitlement authority. You know those entitlements that everybody says are contribuing to the increase of deficits? Well, right here we are creating one, in violation of the Budget Act. And why do I know it is in violation of the Budget Act? Because we are having to waive the Budget Act in order to bring this entitlement authority to the floor.

So in fact what we are doing here is we are specifically adding to the deficit with new entitlement authority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that it is time that we begin to be a little rational about what we are doing. I mentioned some figures this morning that indicate that every dime of taxes being paid by the average American working family in this country, every dime of them is going to pay their share of the national debt, the $2 trillion of national debt. Their share of that debt being compounded each year, with interest, by the Federal Government, is $2,775, and the average taxpayer pays only $2,766 in taxes.

We are piling on debt to the point where people are now spending every dime they are paying in their personal income taxes just to pay their portion of the debt that we have spent for them.

This bill is one more link in that chain. We have got to stop it. If you vote for this rule, you are voting specifically to waive the Budget Act, to say that entitlement authority will be done in violation of the Budget Act, and we are going to go ahead and spend the money, regardless of the fact that it is new entitlement authority, in violation of the Budget Act.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we are going to continue that pattern, then someone has got to begin to hold us responsible for what is going on here. We have got to begin holding responsible the people who bring these bills to the floor and the people who vote for these bills.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I would advise the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] that I have two more firm requests for time, and possibly three, and at this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for yielding me some additional amount of time to discuss both this rule and the impact of this rule and the impact of this bill on legislation and on the Federal deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to either support or oppose the rule. The rule is an open rule to allow for some amendments that I will be offering, along with a number of other Members, and so I support that.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, and others, have pointed out that the rule also waives the Budget Act, and that is correct. That is the problem of this bill: In bill after bill, program after program, many that are good programs like these and many that have nice titles like these, we continue to waive not just the Budget Act, but we waive the entire ability of Congress to deal with the entitlement programs.

Mr. Speaker, 52 percent of the Federal budget is entitlements, and that means they almost never or very seldom come before the floor in a way that we can deal with them, and when they do, they always have such good titles, such as school lunch, that any attempt to change them is resisted.

What I will do during debate on the rule is to set the tone of the debate, and I promise you that I will be repetitive both during the rule, during the debate, and during the amendments. As each of you knows, it is terribly difficult to get a very clear debate on programs that are entitled with such names as the School Lunch Program.

My point, of course, will be that the changes and lack of changes in these programs are going away from the direction I think Congress intends to go with at least our public statements and our debate about the deficit, and I will have some charts that I will be passing out on the floor. But the key element of the chart, Mr. Speaker, is to show that the programs covered by H.R. 7 in the fiscal year 1985 cost the American taxpayers $5.5 billion, and that is not bad.

But, Mr. Speaker, through a series of entitlement changes that are in H.R. 7 and in present law would increase the cost of those programs, assuming the same number of recipients, by $2 billion biannually by fiscal year 1990, a 36-percent increase, assuming the same number of recipients, no more, no less.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will have a set of amendments, five in all, with the unanimous consent of the majority and the minority I will be offering to block three of those amendments, to be considered en bloc, and consider the other two separately, to save some time in the debate, although on a $2 billion increase I think we need to take all the time we need.

Mr. Speaker, let me first show the committee what the existing programs are. In H.R. 7, these programs have been increased, each one, by a modest amount, some with improvements, the School Breakfast Program—in fact, I support this change—would add some nutrition, which is sorely needed, at 6 cents a meal. The WIC Program has been increased. And I think over the long run that saves us money because it saves money with the neonatal care and hospitalization. But the difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is the cumulative effect of those changes adds $2 billion to the Federal deficit with one swoop, with one bill, and that bill is up today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I have done is I have prepared five amendments that are modifications to these programs. There are no slashing amendments, there are no cutting amendments, there are no amendments that do any great damage. In fact, these amendments are rather modest modifications that have been long discussed and are generally regarded as positive, good-government types of reforms that have simply never been adopted because the title of the program is the School Lunch Program.

Mr. Speaker, I will explain each of these amendments in detail later in the debate. one has no cost estimate impact now but it will save money in the long run, and that is program simplification by the school districts themselves, by the local governments. The second one is to delete the food service equipment, a new program that we are restoring that had been deleted before. Next is to means test family day care, the same as all other school lunch programs are means tested, no more, no less. The next is to eliminate the cash subsidy for nonneedy students, for those students who are receiving a cash subsidy through their school district of 12½ cents in cash for children, yours and mine, who are middle income.

The last is to freeze the COLA for 1 year to provide for a catchup of the increases in COLA's and reimbursements over the last 5 years that frankly did not reflect the increased costs of these programs. The result of that, Mr. Speaker, is to reduce the rate of increase in these programs; it is not to cut the programs. The programs will still increase. But to reduce the rate of increase of these programs. Instead of increasing by 36 percent, that would be cut in half. If the House votes for these amendments today, Mr. Speaker, rather modest reforms, the result will be that 5 years from now we will be spending $1 billion less per year every year until the end of time compounded on these cumulative programs, less than we would if we do not adopt these amendments. The programs will still increase; they will still go up. These are not cutting amendments; they are limiting the rate of increase.

Now, there is a lot of talk in the 1-minutes, at recess, at town halls, on the campaign stump and elsewhere about balancing the budget and reducing the deficit. The only spending program we have on the House floor today is H.R. 7. We cannot reduce anything except the rate of increase in H.R. 7 and in these programs. I understand that it is terribly difficult for a Member to ever vote for anything that would reduce the rate of increase in the School Lunch Program. But, Mr. Speaker, these same children have parents that are trying to get jobs and those jobs will not be there if we continue these deficits.

Those same children have parents that are trying to buy a home and cannot buy them because interest rates are so high that they cannot afford the cost of interest. Those same children have parents who have been thrown out of work by the trade deficit that is a direct result of Congress not making decisions on program after program. The deficit is before us today. It is before us today on only one program, on one program that is a symptom of the 52 percent of all the programs that are called entitlements. That will be the decision. I thank the gentleman for the extra time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Tennessee in particular, not only for his work on the Rules Committee, but also for his sage advice and counsel to some of us that are new to the House of Representatives. We need quite often to go to some of the Members that have been here for a while and very often just to learn the ropes. It is nice to have people like Mr. QUILLEN to be able to turn to. I again want to thank the gentleman for giving me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this rule, and in a larger sense, in opposition to the recurring incidence of a rule that waives the Budget Act. Last night we had a discussion about the deficit and how serious the problem is and what we can do about it. There was a Member on the floor who suggested the problem is that the President lacks discipline and the President does not send us a balanced budget. I do not think that is quite accurate. The President does not originate spending bills; we do in this House. We have that responsibility; we have that authority, and we need to be disciplined.

We write budgets for discipline and for guidelines and to establish principles for spending. In our budget discussions, we always concern ourselves with entitlements. The question is how can you control, regulate, diminish or reform entitlement programs, and they always become an obstacle to budget reductions, to spending cuts, and to control of the deficit.

The rules are supposed to provide us with discipline. You have to play by the rules. When the Dallas Cowboys beat the Washington Redskins by 30 points, they must play by the rules, and they managed to do that, despite the fact that many thought they were an underdog. So the rules are there for a purpose. I would suggest to you that when you have another rule that says your wide receivers can perform an end run before the ball is snapped, that undermines the discipline of the game.

So we have to in this case question the principle of recurringly going to the committee and obtaining a rule that says waive the Budget Act. Waive these considerations that we labored over for so long to establish a set of guidelines, a set of priorities, and a reasonable allocation of the scarce taxpayers' dollar in America. We do not have enough money to do everything that some would have us do. We must have discipline; we must have a budget, and then within the rules of the House we must learn to live within that budget once we have gone through this often painstaking task of settling on a budget. This is not the only bill that will come to this floor with such a rule. It happens time after time after time. I guess I am going to have to suggest that some of us are going to have to watch this process, determine who asks for the rule that waives the Budget Act, and perhaps give some publication to that or find some way to find some instrument or device where we can get some discipline to adhere to the rules and adhere to the budget.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Just to help him make his point, we are going to have a rule coming up immediately after this one. It too, waives the Budget Act.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman for making my case so clear. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Texas. We have something in common, not only as colleagues, but his wife is from my district. He is a great guy.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing a good job of mixing oranges and apples and almost anything else so far in this debate. First of all, let me remind everyone that we are reauthorizing five programs in H.R. 7. These five programs are WIC, Summer Feeding Program, Commodity Distribution, State Administrative Costs, and Nutrition Education Programs. We are not reauthorizing School Lunch or any other program than the five that I mentioned. That is all that H.R. 7 does. I think it is time to stop trying to confuse the issue. There are five programs to be reauthorized.

Second, I would like to know where the creation of the new entitlement programs are in H.R. 7. I cannot seem to locate them, and if somebody knows where they are, perhaps when I am finished, when I am finished, you have had a lot of time, you can show me where the creation of all these new entitlement programs are in H.R. 7.

Furthermore, I would like to know where these great expansions are of entitlement programs. USDA said that the School Breakfast Program does not feed nutritious meals. It was USDA that said that in a study that they made, and so it takes 6 cents in order to feed that nutritious meal, 90 percent of which go to, I quote, "the Safety Net Programs." That was coined by this administration I believe. So that goes to the Safety Net.

I would also tell my friend from Texas when you talk about the trade imbalance, et cetera, it goes way beyond what we do here on the floor of the House. There happens to be two people, two naive people left in this world who believe there is free trade. I believe they are both in the United States; I am afraid they are both connected somehow or another with the White House, and that has a lot to do with our trade deficit. So do not try to minimize the trade problems by getting into this program.

During World War II, when we began to draft, those who were responsible for drafting people who might be able to defend this country and the free world found that as a matter of fact there was such a nutrition problem that they really had a difficult time getting people who could stand on their feet to try to protect the free world.

So the Congress reacted by passing a school lunch program, and then added other nutrition programs during the years to ensue.

The Congress decided, as a matter of fact, that this was very important. I served on the Budget Committee. I did not have the luxury of serving on the conference committee, and I suggested to people on the Budget Committee here and on the Senate side ways that, if we are going to freeze everything, we can freeze the nutrition programs without doing too much harm. But they decided in the Budget Committee, and particularly in the conference, that as a matter of fact, we are not going to freeze everything.

In one program, we say you can have a cost-of-living or inflation increase this year, and you can have that inflation increase and 3 percent besides the next years.

It seems to me nutrition is equally important, and we are not asking for that here. In this bill we are basically saying that there is a $121 million increase from current services. I know you just saw a chart and you are going to hear this over and over again, "Oh, you are talking about $2 billion." In the five programs that are being reauthorized in this H.R. 7, we are talking about a $121 million increase, brought down from the $370 million increase that was asked for and passed overwhelmingly in this House last year.

That basically goes to WIC, where we are told again that it costs $2,000 a day—$2,000 a day—to keep a child who is prematurely born in a neonatal care clinic, $60,000 a month, because it usually takes 30 days until they are able to get them caught up. We are talking in WIC of $400 a year versus $2,000 a day per child, and most of that $2,000 per day and that $60,000 per month will eventually come from taxpayers if we do not prevent it.

So we will talk more about this when we get to the actual bill, but there are only five programs that we are reauthorizing. School lunch is not one of them.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to at this time thank the gentleman who just left the microphone for putting this debate in its proper perspective.

In fact, the amendment that is going to be proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and which will ultimately be adopted, cures the Budget Act violation. Just the changing of July 1 to October 1 cures the Budget Act violation, so all the statements made at the microphone about how much we are spending really is not the Budget Act violation we are talking about. It is just the changing of the date from July 1 to October 1.

Had we had this bill with an October 1 date on it, rather than July 1, there would be no Budget Act violation, so I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] who just left the well really showed where the apples were and where the oranges were. It is only a technical violation, and I do not know where all these entitlement authorities that are being talked about come from, but as I say, as soon as the amendment of the gentleman from California is adopted, there will be no Budget Act violation. I am sorry that some of the speakers chose to discuss this Budget Act waiver in terms of the amount of money being spent. In fact, this Budget Act waiver involves not a single dollar of additional money being spent. It is a technical waiver for a provision which will be corrected by committee amendment. The waiver is necessary only for the purpose of bringing up the bill in order to allow that committee amendment to be offered.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 266, nays 142, not voting 26, as follows:

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1985, OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER, CONSIDERATION OF A RESOLUTION MAKING CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time on Wednesday, September 18, 1985, or any day thereafter to consider in the House a resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right object, Mr. Speaker, I do so just to ask our committee chairman, it is my understanding that this bill contains all of the prohibitions that are presently in law; is that correct?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, that is true.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2266, AMTRAK AUTHORIZATION FOR FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 263 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 263

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2266) authorizing appropriations for Amtrak for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, establishing a commission to study the financial status of Amtrak, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and to the amendment made in order by this resolution and which shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, each section of said substitute shall be considered as having been read, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI and clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. It shall be in order to consider the following amendments: (1) an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of September 11, 1985, by, and if offered by, Representative Foley of Washington and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI are hereby waived; and (2) an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of September 11, 1985, by, and if offered by, Representative Evans of Illinois and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 263 is the rule providing for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2266, the Amtrak reauthorization for fiscal year 1986.

Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for 1 hour of general debate, divided between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution provides a waiver of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act—the May 15 reporting deadline for authorization bills. This waiver is necessary because the Committee on Energy and Commerce did not report H.R. 2266 to the House until May 23, 1985.

Because we have heard a lot in the previous debate about waivers of the Budget Act, I want to make the background on this matter as clear as possible. This is a procedural issue. There is no money involved in the waivers. I would stress that the Committee on Energy and Commerce voted on May 15 and ordered the bill reported. So, the dollar amounts were known to the Budget Committee in a timely fashion, which is the whole point of section 402(a).

However, the filing of the report was delayed to accommodate the minority's interest in submitting views, and the report was not actually filed until 8 days later.

House Resolution 263 makes in order the Energy and Commerce Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute to be considered as original text, with each section of the substitute to be considered as read.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 263 waives clause 5(a) of rule 21, which prohibits appropriations in legislative bills, against consideration of the substitute. Section 1 of H.R. 2266 designates new uses of previously appropriated funds, and since H.R. 2266 is not an appropriation measure a waiver of clause 5(a) of rule 21 is needed. Also, the rule waives clause 7 of rule 16 which prohibits nongermane amendments against the substitute.

Mr. SPEAKER, House Resolution 263 waives the germaneness rule to permit consideration of two amendments printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 11, 1985: An amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY], and an amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS]. Finally, House Resolution 263 provides one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2266 authorizes $616 million for the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, more commonly known as Amtrak. The bill would direct Amtrak to use nonoperational capital funds for operating expenses so that it can maintain current levels of service, maintenance, and equipment overhaul. In addition H.R. 2266 authorizes $1 million for the establishment of a 15-member Amtrak Study Commission. This Commission will examine the ability of Amtrak to further improve its financial performance, study its capital needs, and investigate alternative funding mechanism.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] for their diligent efforts in developing this important legislation. H.R. 2266 represents a strong bipartisan consensus of a bill that is of vital importance to the economy and our national transportation system, it is critical that we continue our commitment to maintaining a viable railroad system and I am grateful to my colleagues on the Commerce Committee who have consistently supported this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge adoption of House Resolution 263 so that we may proceed to consideration of this important bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield for the purposes of debate only to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA].

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, most of us have heard from our constituents who are concerned about the deficit of our Government and most of us have made speeches calling for action to reduce the deficit.

Well, the bill made in order by this rule is one place where we will have an opportunity to do something about the deficit, not just talk about it.

Let me begin with a historical note about Amtrak. When Amtrak was established by the Rail Passenger Service Act of 1970, the intent of Congress was that Amtrak would be a self-supporting, for-profit corporation. Let me repeat that—would be a self-supporting and a for-profit corporation.

Section 301 of the Rail Passenger Service Act states:

> The Corporation shall be operated and managed as a for profit corporation, the purpose of which shall be to provide intercity and commuter rail passenger service.

Et cetera.

This theme was expressed repeatedly during the floor debates both in the House and in the other body. And yet, Mr. Speaker, in spite of all these good intentions and all of these wonderful speeches, Amtrak's revenues have never equaled its costs. Government subsidy to Amtrak, which was originally envisioned being simply transitional aid, has cost the American taxpayers between $9 billion and $11 billion since 1971. According to projections provided by the Office of Management and Budget, Amtrak will cost the taxpayers in excess of $8 billion over the next 10 years, and let me say, that is $8 billion more red ink, because we do not have the $8 billion.

To put Amtrak subsidies in perspective, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Congressional Budget Office has compared Amtrak's Federal subsidies on a per-passenger mile basis to the Federal subsidies received by other modes of transportation. Last year, the Federal subsidy to Amtrak totaled about 17 cents per passenger mile, as compared to 8 cents a passenger mile for general aviation and 0.2 cents per mile for intercity bus passengers. Travelers on commercial airlines and automobile users overpaid by 0.2 and 0.1 cents respectively per passenger mile.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, overall cost recovery has improved, with passenger fares covering 50 percent of costs in 1984, versus 38 percent in 1980. However, unrecovered infrastructure costs, meaning track repair and maintenance in the Northeast and track rentals paid to freight railroads elsewhere, have increased since 1980, so that overall operating subsidies remain close to their 1980 levels.

Mr. Speaker, we are at the place where the taxpayers can no longer afford to continue providing huge Federal subsidies to Amtrak.

Mr. Speaker, the congressional budget resolution passed by this Congress just weeks ago provided a 1986 funding level of $582 million for Amtrak, far more than we can afford. But this bill comes in at $616 million, well over the budget which we agreed to. Let me advise the House that unless the committee of jurisdiction comes forth with an amendment to bring this authorization within the budget, I will personally offer such an amendment.

However, Mr. Speaker, the better part of wisdom would be to terminate this program, which we cannot afford, and do something meaningful toward deficit reduction. By so doing, we could send a message to the financial markets and to the American people that we really mean all those speeches that we have made about reducing the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, let me make a couple points about the rule itself which provides for this reauthorization. It begins by waiving the Budget Act requirement that authorization bills be reported by May 15. Naturally, this bill missed the reporting deadline.

The rule next provides for 1 hour of general debate and an open amending process.

Then there is a waiver of the germaneness rule, because the introduced bill was a simple authorization, while the committee substitute includes a number of changes in permanent law.

There is also a waiver of the rule which prohibits appropriations on a legislative bill, because there are a number of provisions in this bill which technically constitute appropriations.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order two amendments, which are not germane to the rest of the bill.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, with one thought. If we cannot cut this bill, where can we reduce spending?

Mr. Speaker, I have a couple requests for time. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding. Let me also congratulate him on the remarks that he just made.

I think the gentleman pointed out very clearly the nature of the bill that we are considering and he has also made clear that the rule that we are considering has some problems with it.

Let me first of all comment on the first part of that. He made the point that the bill we are considering if this rule is permitted to pass is a bill that, in fact, creates spending that we cannot afford. Here is a problem that the President in his budget called for the total elimination of it. He said we ought not to spend any money for this program. We cannot afford it.

And what is the reaction of the House of Representatives at a time of high deficits, at a time when we are piling debt upon debt? What is our reaction to the President's initiative to actually eliminate this program? We are going to waive the Budget Act to spend the money. And that is precisely what this rule does.

It is not the bill that is going to waive the Budget Act. We are waiving the Budget Act right here in this rule.

Now we have heard it mentioned that that is probably the fault of the minority, they did not file soon enough. Well I would say to those who make that kind of argument, I do not care whose fault it is, the fact is we bring it out here under the Budget Act and we are in violation of the Budget Act. We are going to spend the money in violation of the Budget Act. We have to stop that.

The American people are disgusted with us parading around a budget and then violating it. This is twice today. Here is the second time in 1 day that we just violate the Budget Act, waive it, say it does not mean anything.

I will tell you, I think there are a lot of people growing sick of the presses that suggests that the discipline we gave ourselves under the Budget Act is meaningless when it comes to spending the money, and that is precisely what we are saying.

Now I am realistic enough to know if the House voted by more than 100 votes on the last bill to violate the Budget Act, even when it related to entitlement authority, that we are not very likely to reject this rule where the violation is more technical, but it is still appalling.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I also rise in opposition to this rule. I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding. I admire his work in this body.

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, here we go again. I have to say also that it is rather amusing that we are waiving the Budget Act now on a resolution to fund Amtrak because the train was late coming into the station. I think that is a bit ironic.

Yet, I can understand how we might be a little bit late getting pending bills out of committee and onto the floor. It does take a little bit of time to spend $900 billion of the taxpayers' money. We spent $200 billion more than we have taken in in taxes, so we can have a $200 billion deficit. It does take a little bit of time to spend money in that deficit, contrary to the President's request, so that we can come back and say the problem of the deficit is that the President did not request a balanced budget.

I do understand how all of these things take place. And I understand, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is off track. We need to derail this whole process, not only as it regards spending on Amtrak, but in many, many other areas where we have excessive abuses of spending.

Remember, the Government does not create wealth, it does not create income, it just takes it out of one pocket and puts it into another pocket, and it ought to at least do that on time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, in closing debate, I want to stress again that the Budget Act waiver involves not a single dollar of additional money being spent.

It is a technical waiver, only. The committee voted to report the bill by the May 15 deadline. The filing was delayed, at least in part, to accommodate the filing of minority views.

The Budget Committee and the Rules Committee agree that the waiver is purely technical and an appropriate step.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 236, nays 159, not voting 39, as follows:

Mr. ENGLISH and Mrs. ROUKEMA changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. OWENS changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION ACT, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3244) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1248

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3244, with Mr. SHARP in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, September 11, the Clerk had read through line 4 on page 42.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 321. Notwithstanding any other provision of law or regulation, the Secretary shall, with regard to the Discretionary Grants Program of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, within 30 days after the enactment of this section, issue a letter of intent and, upon completion of the current environmental impact statement, enter into a full funding contract with Metropolitan Dade County, Florida, for $180,000,000 to complete the north and south legs of the downtown component of metrorail, which shall be exempt from the major capital investment policy issued by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration on May 18, 1984: Provided, That the $180,000,000 shall include $20,000,000 earmarked for fiscal year 1984, $49,000,000 earmarked for fiscal year 1985, $40,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and, subject to the availability of funds from Congress, $71,000,000 in subsequent fiscal years.

SEC. 322. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall, with regard to the Discretionary Grants Program of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, within 30 days after the enactment of this section, issue a letter of intent and enter into a full funding contract with the Municipality of Metropolitan Seattle, Washington, for $175,000,000 for completion of the bus tunnel project: Provided, That the $175,000,000 shall include $27,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and, subject to the availability of funds from Congress, $148,000,000 in subsequent fiscal years.

tation may use not to exceed one-half of 1 percent of—

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of title III be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title III?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SOLARZ

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SOLARZ: Page 44, line 20, through page 46, line 7, strike out section 325.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, when the history of the Republic is finally written I suspect that the debate on this amendment will come to be known as the "Battle of the Bridge."

In one corner is the Staten Island Slugger, Mr. MOLINARI; in the other corner is your humble servant, the Brooklyn Bomber.

What is this battle all about? It is about the biggest and most beautiful suspension bridge not only in the country but the world, the Verrazano Bridge.

Right now, on the Verrazano Bridge which connects Staten Island to Brooklyn, both of which are in New York City, there are two sets of toll collection booths. Tolls are collected on the Brooklyn end of the bridge from people going from Brooklyn to Staten Island, and tolls are collected on the Staten Island end of the bridge from people coming from Staten Island and New Jersey into Brooklyn.

My very good friend from Staten Island, Mr. MOLINARI, managed to insert into the bill at the very last moment in the committee markup last week an amendment which would prohibit two different toll collection points on the Verrazano Bridge and which would require that the only place at which tolls can be collected on the bridge is at the Brooklyn end of the bridge.

Now, I can understand why my very good friend from Staten Island, Mr. MOLINARI——

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield just for one point of clarification? Because I think if we are going to start the debate, we want to start it with accuracy.

Mr. SOLARZ. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOLINARI. Did I understand the gentleman to say there are two separate toll booths, one on the Brooklyn side and one on the Staten Island side? Well, I think if the gentleman is as informed on the rest of the proposal as he is on that, we are in deep trouble, because the toll booths are all on the Staten Island side.

Mr. SOLARZ. The point I was trying to make is that the gentleman's amendment would require tolls to be collected only at one point on the Brooklyn end of the bridge, going from Brooklyn to Staten Island. In other words, what the gentleman's amendment would do would be to permit people from Staten Island to go into Brooklyn without paying any toll on the bridge whatsoever.

Mr. MOLINARI. If the gentleman will yield again, the gentleman is still maintaining the same thing, and the gentleman is wrong. It is going to be collected on the Staten Island end of the bridge, regardless of what way they go.

Mr. SOLARZ. I take the gentleman's point, but the gentleman would agree, I am sure, under his amendment, people going from Staten Island into Brooklyn would not have to pay a toll for that part of the trip.

Mr. MOLINARI. That is right.

Mr. SOLARZ. They would only have to pay a toll if they go back over the bridge into Staten Island.

Mr. MOLINARI. That is correct.

Mr. SOLARZ. And then they would pay a toll at the Staten Island end.

Mr. MOLINARI. That is right.

Mr. SOLARZ. OK, we agree on the facts.

The fact of the matter is, from the point of view of the people of Staten Island, the ability to cross the Verrazano Bridge into Brooklyn without paying a toll is, presumptively, a benefit. I would not deny that from their point of view, it may very well be beneficial. But the Metropolitan Transit Authority, which has scientifically studied this question, has concluded that it would cost New York at least $10 million in lost toll revenues, because commuters coming in from Staten Island and New Jersey into Brooklyn over the Verrazano Bridge would not have to pay a toll and would find other, perhaps more circuitous, routes to get back to Staten Island and New Jersey without having to pay a toll on the bridge returning later in the day.

□ 1255

Furthermore, the estimates are that it would substantially increase the amount of vehicular traffic coming from Staten Island and New Jersey into Brooklyn by at least 10 percent, which would add another 7,500 vehicles to the rush hour traffic in Brooklyn, which is already very congested.

Now I want to suggest to my colleagues in the House that the real issue here is not whether the interests of 350,000 people on Staten Island should be pitted against 2.2 million people in Brooklyn. The real issue is not whether Mr. MOLINARI is right in assuming that everybody would be better off if this amendment were left in the bill and there were only a one-way toll collection on the bridge, or whether the MTA is right in assuming that it would cost the city $10 million.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SOLARZ was given permission to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. SOLARZ. Or whether the MTA and New York City are right in asserting, on the basis of their study, that it would cost $10 million and increase traffic in Brooklyn.

The real issue, the fundamental issue, is whether the Federal Government should be involved in making this determination. The Verrazano Bridge is a local bridge. It connects one part of New York City to another part of New York City. It is a bridge which is built with local funds. It is a bridge which is maintained by local funds.

The MTA, the city of New York, the Governor of New York, the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, are all opposed to the Molinari amendment which is contained in this legislation.

This is preeminently a local issue. Whether there should be two toll collections on the Verrazano Bridge, whether the toll should be collected at the Staten Island end or at the Brooklyn end is not a matter for the Federal Government to resolve and determine and to dictate to New York City.

If ever there was a local issue, this is an example of it. I know of no other bridge in the entire country with respect to which the Federal Government has legislated a determination that there should only be one-way toll collections, let alone at which end of the bridge the toll should be collected.

So I am prepared to acknowledge the possibility that my very good friend from Staten Island may be right, and the Metropolitan Transit Authority may be wrong, but this is not an issue which the Congress of the United States ought to determine. It is a matter for local resolution.

The fact of the matter is that the city of New York, the Governor of New York, the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, and the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, all of which are the relevent jurisdictions concerning the Verrazano Bridge, believe that Mr. MOLINARI's amendment would be harmful to New York and are therefore opposed to it.

So I call upon my colleagues to vote for the amendment I have offered which would strike from this bill the provision put in it by Mr. MOLINARI. Which, I might add, was put in without any hearings before the Transportation Subcommittee whatsoever; and over the opposition in the committee of my very good friend, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, who may feel obligated to support it now because he has to defend the bill on the floor. When the amendment was offered in committee, he opposed it, I suppose, on the grounds that there were no hearings, and because all of the local authorities were against it.

So I appeal to you on grounds of home rule alone—do not assert the heavy hand of the Federal Government on the Verrazano Bridge.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that my colleague from Brooklyn has put the tone of this debate in that it appears to be a Staten Island versus Brooklyn issue because it is not.

The fact is that my district is both in Staten Island and in Brooklyn; on both sides of the bridge. I have well over 150,000 constituents in Brooklyn.

Now, the Governor's office has told me, or told my office, they are taking no position on this issue. Yet, you are making a quote, Mr. SOLARZ, that the Governor is opposed to my provision.

Let me get by that for a moment.

Does the gentleman wish me to yield to him?

Mr. SOLARZ. If the gentleman would yield, if there is a factual question about the position of the Governor, I take it the gentleman is aware of the fact that when a proposal to this effect was introduced in the State legislature, the Governor sent the message opposing it.

Mr. MOLINARI. Well, I am glad you mention that, because that will bring me to another subject. Let me try to frame what I am trying to do here. I make no apology for what I am trying to do here; I am trying to deal with a very serious problem that affects not only my congressional district, but the entire city of New York.

I have sought this legislative vehicle to address that problem, and I would applaud anybody else that would attempt to do the same thing. In fact, I would support somebody else who would attempt to do, to take the same approach.

Now, if you look at my district, Staten Island is the fastest-growing county of the 62 counties in New York State. It happens to be the eighth fastest-growing county in the entire country. The present population there, by the way, is 435,000. So that the traffic bind at the toll plazas is continuing to grow and to grow and to grow.

There are two main reasons why I seek this relief. No. 1, common sense. All the other bridges in the city going to New Jersey, you pay a one-way toll. It has worked out fine.

Mr. SOLARZ. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLINARI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman very much for yielding. I hope the gentleman is aware of the fact that on all of the bridges within New York City itself of which the Verrazano Bridge is of course the leading example, there are tolls which are collected both ways.

Not perhaps on the interstate bridges like the George Washington Bridge, but on the bridges within New York City on which tolls are collected; they are collected on the traffic going in both directions.

Mr. MOLINARI. The fact is that for the three existing bridges from Staten Island to New Jersey, you pay no tolls; that is one of the reasons why I had the eastbound traffic pay no tolls.

There is a second, perhaps more serious question that we have to address. The traffic backs up extraordinarily; and on the Staten Island side, there is a low valley. The carbon monoxide buildup there has grown so intense that the Environmental Medical Center of St. Vincent's Hospital has recommended a number of times that during many periods of the year the Verrazano Bridge toll collectors do not collect tolls, to allow people to go through those toll booths as quickly as possible because there is a health emergency, during air enversion episodes.

They are not listening; they do not listen to the entreaties from the health community.

Now, if you want to talk about the State legislature and the Brooklyn position; I do not think the gentleman is aware of the fact that there was a similar bill introduced into the State assembly, and interestingly enough, it is cosponsored by Assemblyman Lasher and Assemblewoman Eileen Dugan, both of whom represent the Brooklyn portion of the bridge. That, incidentally, would provide for a 1-year proviso: a 1-year pilot program similar to what I am suggesting here.

Now, if the city is correct in its assertions, the provision included says, after 6 months, if one of two things happen; if there is a serious loss of revenue or an adverse impact on traffic, which some people suggest and I do not believe.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MOLINARI was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MOLINARI. Then the Governor simply has to make a request to the Secretary of Transportation, provide that information, and this provision would be rescinded.

Mr. SOLARZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLINARI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman once again for yielding. I think the gentleman's escape clause is a very constructive part of his amendment, and the gentleman is absolutely right in saying that at the end of 6 months, if the Governor believed that this had resulted in a loss of revenues or it created additional traffic problems, he could apply for a removal of the requirement.

The problem that I have with that formula is that at the end of the day, it leaves the determination in the hands of a Federal official; namely, the Secretary of Transportation, when this is quintessentially a local problem, which in my judgment should be resolved by the State and local authorities and not by Washington.

If it were an interstate bridge, then the gentleman's amendment would probably make sense; but this is a bridge, as the gentleman knows, connecting one part of New York City to another part of New York City.

Mr. MOLINARI. The gentleman has made that point before.

Let me quickly try to move on. The MTA raises three objections to the proposal. If you look at them, they are absolutely ridiculous. No. 1, that one of the things that happens at a toll bridge is it stops traffic, and they say that creates a metering effect upon traffic.

□ 1305

Can you imagine using that as an argument? A metering effect upon traffic.

Why not then put four toll plazas, so that you have four meters instead of one, and you slow the traffic down? I have never heard such an argument in my life as justification for collecting tolls.

No. 2, the issue of safety. They talk about two entrances to the expressway on Staten Island near the toll plaza, they allege that the cars now approaching Staten Island, without paying a toll, would be traveling at faster rates of speed. And they would. That is the intent of my provision. My answer to that simply is: Close those couple of entrances that are nearby the toll plaza and force the Staten Islanders to go a little farther south. They would be happy to do it, because they would be getting across the bridge at a much quicker pace.

So that the second argument is blown out of the water.

And, third, they say that the impact of a toll system would cause a loss of revenues, and they say, for example, "It is anticipated that trucks would abandon the southern bypass and go through Manhattan."

Can you imagine trucks, to save $3 on a toll, assuming they double it, going all the way across Manhattan—and we are not counting on getting on any toll traffic on the other side—to save $3?

The study that was done by the State estimates that it would take an hour. So a truck is going to go an extra hour, burn all the additional gas, to save a $3 toll. Now, if you believe that, then you support the Solarz amendment.

Let me tell you something else. There was a study made. And do you know what the study revealed? Contrary to what you had said earlier, the information you gave me, that 40 percent of the Staten Islanders would seek another way around, I checked that out, and URS Co. conducted a study that was paid for by the State of New York, and their conclusion was that virtually no one from Staten Island would deflect to another route to avoid the one-way toll. Also, Schoepher, the head of TBTA, did not agree with the URS conclusion that 30 percent of the Long Island-southern New Jersey traffic would deflect. Their estimate is that it would take an additional hour. Now, look, we could argue all day. I think I have put forth a fair proposal. We have 6 months to see what would happen. I feel very strongly, very, very strongly, that at the end of 6 months the city is going to be very pleased with what they have seen happen there, and they are going to continue it. I do not think there is going to be any loss of revenue whatsoever.

But let me say one thing in closing at this point in the debate: URS, according to the Democratic sponsors of the State bill, conclusively proved, according to this memorandum, that the only way to determine what will happen in a one-way toll mode is to try it, which is what we are proposing to do here today.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, Let me first address the issue of the appropriateness of this particular provision in this legislation. This is not an issue of legislating in an appropriation bill. This particular provision would be wrong, whether it was in an authorizing bill or whether it was in an appropriation bill. Here we have a bridge that was built totally with non-Federal funds, it is maintained with non-Federal funds, and here comes the Congress of the United States and attempts to tell the locality in New York as to where, if you will, the toll booths on that bridge, built by their own moneys, will be placed. If that is not micromanagement carried to the most ridiculous extreme, I cannot imagine what could be more ridiculous and more extreme. If you can do it in New York, you can do it anyplace in the country. And on the face of it, this is not the kind of behavior, not the kind of action that the Congress of the United States ought to be engaged in, nor has it any justification for being engaged in.

There is not a single precedent for this kind of action. There is no justification for it. If the gentleman from Staten Island has a problem——

Mr. MOLINARI. Staten Island and Brooklyn, Mr. WEISS.

Mr. WEISS. If the gentleman from Staten Island and Brooklyn has a problem, he ought to persuade the appropriate authorities in New York City or the State to undertake the action that he wants, but to bring his problem here and then to have it attempted to be done in the manner that this was done is just totally wrong and inappropriate.

Now, let me talk for one moment about substance. This is not just a fight between Staten Island and Brooklyn. It is not just the people of Staten Island and Brooklyn who are impacted. The people who govern the city of New York have expressed their opposition to this particular provision because they are looking at the impact on the city as a whole and the additional traffic impacted on the city as a whole.

Now, it just so happens that in my district in Manhattan we have two major tunnels, the Lincoln Tunnel and the Holland Tunnel. The tolls on those tunnels are on the New Jersey side. There are no tolls on the New York side. So that if trucks—never mind Staten Islanders; we are talking about long-distance trucks—are able to cross Staten Island into Brooklyn without any fees and then are able to go back to New Jersey without any fees, they are getting an absolute free ride. But even beyond the money that is involved, what they are doing is flooding, throwing additional heavy traffic on the already most congested traffic-laden streets perhaps in the country, in lower- and mid-Manhattan. If it is a truck, the toll for a six-axle rig is $8 in each direction. We are talking about a lot of inducement, especially when getting from New Jersey into Brooklyn and in Manhattan by traveling across Staten Island and the Verrazano Bridge is a much easier, trafficwise, route.

So I tell you, my colleagues, neither on the basis of procedure nor fairness nor rationality should you be supporting this legislation. And I would have hoped that my distinguished friend and colleague, with whom on many transportation issues I am in total agreement, would have seen the inappropriateness of attempting to have the House of Representatives and the Senate act on this kind of legislation in this fashion.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEISS. I would be delighted to yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOLINARI. Does the gentleman have any idea what it would cost for those trucks, once they got to Jersey and got on the turnpike, what it would cost them in ultimate tolls when they go on the turnpike?

Mr. WEISS. All I can tell you is the facts that I have recited to you, and that is going to mean an inducement to them to do it.

Mr. MOLINARI. Well, now, we are talking about tolls as high as $3.25.

Mr. WEISS. We are talking about 8 bucks a shot for a six-axle rig.

Mr. MOLINARI. Three dollars twenty cents. One other thing I would like to call to the gentleman's attention. Yesterday, when you made a very articulate plea on the West Way bill, you made one statement that I took notice of, and that was that you wanted it to be noted that that West Way project—and I am on the same side of the issue as you are.

Mr. WEISS. Yes, you are, indeed, and I commend you for it.

Mr. MOLINARI. That it was totally within your district. And I am saying to you, in fact, I am making a request of you and my colleagues of this House, that we have a very serious problem in my district.

Mr. WEISS. If I may take back my time just for a moment, I appreciate the gentleman's serious problem.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WEISS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WEISS. But what the gentleman is attempting to do, without any kind of balanced approach or involvement of the city authority, is to take the problems that his constituents may have in Staten Island and dump them on my constituents in Manhattan. And that I object to.

Mr. MOLINARI. I am going to ask the gentleman to yield again, if he would.

Mr. WEISS. I would be pleased to yield.

Mr. MOLINARI. Here is what the city has been telling you folks: The people in Brooklyn are going to be faced with longer traffic lines. And yet they also say it will cause a diversion of traffic going to Manhattan. You are going to be faced with longer traffic lines. So everybody is going to be hitting extra traffic lines. I ask you, where are these vehicles coming from? Are they going to be dropped out of the sky and by helicopter, and half of them going to Brooklyn and the other half going to Manhattan? Come on. It does not add up. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. WEISS. If the gentleman will allow me to take back my time again, all I ask you to do is, during traffic hours, anybody, to recollect, if you have been in Manhattan during traffic periods, and know and recollect the congestion, the traffic congestion, on the streets of Manhattan leading toward the tunnels. That is going to be exacerbated. The problem right now is almost beyond endurance.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the overriding issue here is the fact that the agenda of this body is being reduced to absurdity by having this discussion on the floor. This item should not have been included in the bill. I think I am a bit more objective than the two gentlemen who spoke previously. My district is not affected directly, in terms of transportation arteries. But I want to know and I wanted to hear from the gentleman from Staten Island and Brooklyn reasons why the local governing bodies cannot be allowed to make this decision. We have an elaborate network of decisionmaking bodies, planning boards, the MTA I think appropriately provides technical information, the mayor himself, the Governor, the legislators. We have enough people who are reasonable to make this decision. Why cannot the collective wisdom at the local level be allowed to have this discussion and make the decision, looking at all the technical arguments and the opposing arguments, et cetera.

The important thing is, nobody here knows better than the people at the local level what these various arguments mean. Certainly the argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] a few minutes ago about the Manhattan streets being clogged with the approaches to the bridges and the tunnels which feed into the Belt Parkway which feeds into the Verrazano Bridge, anybody can see that, you do not have to be a traffic engineer. And the Belt Parkway is one of the worst constructed and oldest and most congested artery you want to find. It is dangerous to ride on it when you do not have a lot of traffic because people are speeding and it is dangerous, but when it is clogged with rush-hour traffic it does not move at all, and you are going to feed more traffic onto that kind of artery. And even if you put only 1 percent more, it is 1 percent more too much. And I am sure the gentleman from Staten Island and Brooklyn would recognize it is going to increase traffic to some extent. There is going to be a backup into Brooklyn if something goes wrong on the bridge and if something goes wrong at the toll spot.

So I would plead, I would beg that we table this argument, or certainly support the Solarz amendment, in order to get this out of this discussion and back into the local decisionmaking bodies, where there is every reason to believe that the collective wisdom would come away with a decision which takes into consideration the serious problem that Staten Island may experience in terms of the backup of the traffic and the pollution there, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, these other very serious problems which I think only people at the local level can deal with.

I yield to the gentleman from Staten Island.

Mr. MOLINARI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to answer those two questions, briefly, if I may. First of all, in terms of backup, no, I do not see a backup. The question you have to answer to yourself is: Is it quicker for toll collectors to collect $3 or $1.50. I suggest it is much quicker to pay $3 or to collect $3 than $1.50. Once you have to change a dollar, you are slowing the process down a great deal.

The other question you raise, why do we not accept the word of the transit authority of the city of New York, that is a simple one for me to answer. Because their record is abominable, atrocious. We just saw what happened with the tunnel in Queens, $800 million gone down the tubes, that project Senator D'AMATO has been attacking. They are right now eliminating express bus service in five boroughs, in all five boroughs. More and more cars are being forced on the road because of their inefficiency and their terrible record. That is why I have to bring my case to the floor of the House.

Mr. OWENS. The argument that I make is not that MTA has all the wisdom. I said the collective wisdom of all the bodies, all the decisionmaking bodies. And I think the MTA is just one. I would rely on them only for technical information, and I would want that checked. I would agree with you that they are not a body that has a great deal of credibility right now. But I do not see why the collective wisdom at the local level cannot be allowed to make this decision. I think it would be a great abuse of power for this body to go forward with this item still in the bill. I think, as Congressman SOLARZ said, we would open it up for Des Moines, for Oshkosh, for Jackson, MS, anyplace where there is a toll bridge we then have jurisdiction, we set a precedent which is a ridiculous precedent. Why should we take on that kind of burden? Why not leave it to the people at the local level to decide about how the tolls are to be collected at a bridge which has no Federal funding and no Federal involvement at all. I think we are off limits and in danger of grossly abusing our power.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, the sole apparent effect of which would be to needlessly perpetuate traffic congestion and delays for users on a major New York River crossing, and urge my colleagues to join in voting for its rejection.

My committee colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI], is the author of the provision in the appropriations bill before us which requires that tolls be collected from motorists moving only one way, rather than both ways, on the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge between Staten Island and Brooklyn, NY.

His rationale is both simple and persuasive. It makes no sense to stop traffic moving in both directions if such can be avoided without creating other traffic problems or leading to a substantial loss of toll revenues. Indeed, of 16 bridges and tunnels in the New York City area, tolls are collected one way on no less than six.

One-way toll collection procedures are hardly revolutionary. You simply assume that traffic moving one way via a bridge or tunnel eventually will go the other way. So, cutting the toll collection process, but doubling of the toll rate will yield the same amount of revenue. Now sure, there will be always some one-way traffic getting a free ride moving in the nontoll direction, but you will also pick up one-way riders on the toll side as well.

Even if there is some evasion, that may well be offset by the savings on toll collection. It costs no more to collect $3 from a motorist than it does $1.50.

When you consider the backups and congestion and fuel consumption and automobile exhaust generated at toll bridge plazas, this seems to be a most worthwhile approach, where it will work.

The real question, then, is whether you are going to get evasion, circuitous travel by enough motorist to generate a substantial revenue loss, or traffic problems. It seems to me that the provisions in the bill authored by Mr. MOLINARI have addressed any potential problems. He provided that the one-way toll collection regime can be scrapped by the Secretary of Transportation if the Governor of New York so petitions after 6 months on the basis of traffic problems or a substantial revenue loss.

One further point on the matter of revenue loss, it may be theoretically possible for motorists to beat the system and reduce their toll contribution by using other bridges, but to do so they would have to employ extremely circuitous routes and subject themselves to many more miles of New York area rush hour congestion, not to mention increased fuel use. In any event, a 6-month trial would tell the tale.

From my observations, as ranking minority member on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, it can be an extremely expensive process to come up with street and highway improvements in congested and heavily developed urban areas. We spend in the millions or hundreds of millions to reduce travel time. Any traffic management alternative along the lines of the provision authored by Mr. MOLINARI and now incorporated in the bill should be given every reasonable opportunity to succeed.

Mr. Chairman, a final point. I believe it can be said that we on the Public Works Committee were prepared to accept Mr. MOLINARI's provision as a part of pending authorization legislation. And I think our aversion to seeing authorizing provisions in appropriations bills is pretty well known to Members of the House. But, our colleague from New York [Mr. MOLINARI] made such a strong case with us that action should be taken promptly that we were pleased to concur in the provision's incorporation into this bill before us today along with others of merit.

It is a good provision. It should stay in the bill. A full-scale working test should be allowed to proceed. The amendment should be defeated.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this issue was brought to my attention by the gentleman from New York, a member of our Committee on Public Works and Transportation, Mr. MOLINARI, as a time-sensitive problem which required the immediate attention of the Congress. Based on this understanding, I agreed to support this measure's inclusion in the appropriation bill, even though it clearly establishes transportation policy which would normally be handled through the authorization process rather than the appropriation process.

Our committee will be marking up H.R. 3129, the Surface Transportation Reauthorization Act within the next 3 weeks. However, it is also clear to me that the other body does not intend to consider highway reauthorization legislation until later this year or perhaps early next year. The gentleman from New York has indicated to me that the immediacy of the transportation problems in his congressional district require a timely solution. Therefore, I am a strong supporter of the provision in the bill and urge the defeat of the amendment.

Those of us from the State of New Jersey have been very familiar with this kind of situation with our tunnels and bridges into the city of New York for quite some time. So what this has done is to collect double the money one way, and not have to collect at all the other way. In our situation in New Jersey, the toll collections are on the New Jersey side, not the Manhattan side. So we do have to suffer. We do have congestion, and of course that might be added to not at all, because it takes less time to collect $3 than it does $1.50, but then it relieves the congestion to a degree on the West Side of Manhattan. Of course, the West Side of Manhattan does have a terrible transportation problem, which I believe was compounded greatly by the vote this body took yesterday on the Westway amendment which is going to add to the problem because not only will New York not get Westway, which it should not get, it cannot get an interstate highway on the West Side of Manhattan, and will not even be able to get 1 cent to improve its streets or roads or to improve its mass transit which could help the vehicle traffic on the West Side of Manhattan as we tick aways toward September 30 of this year. So there is a greater disaster coming.

I think that this program is logical; why not stop them for the same amount of time or less time on one side and not have to stop the traffic at all on the other side? Once in a while here we get something that comes along of which we say, "Why have we not thought of this before?" Or if we have seen it work in other areas, why not expand it and extend it, it just makes so much sense.

So, I would hope, and of course, having this 6-month deadline on it in which it may be evaluated is probably a very good thing. I think anyone who has been involved in this around this area of New York and New Jersey for any time knows you really do not even need the 6-month study because we know at the end of the 6 months everyone is going to say it is a great idea, let us keep it going.

So I do urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the arguments offered by my very good friend from Staten Island, and I want to frankly say that inasmuch as I am not a traffic engineer I do not feel competent to thoroughly evaluate the validity of the arguments he serves.

What I do know, however, is that the Triboro Bridge and Tunnel Authority, the city of New York, the State of New York, the MTA have studied it and they come to a different conclusion. I also know that no hearings were held on this proposal either in the Transportation Subcommittee or in the Public Works Committee. I would hope that if this amendment is adopted and the gentleman's provision is defeated that we could get together and consider the possibility of a study in the future which might possibly lead to the objectives the gentleman seeks.

But I do think it would be inappropriate for the Congress of the United States to impose its views over the objections of literally all of the local authorities on what is clearly a local issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

The question wa, taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments not prohibited by clause 2(c) of rule XXI?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the chairman, the ranking member, and the other members and staff of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee. This bill is always one of the most difficult pieces of legislation facing the Appropriations Committee and this year's budget constraints made the drafting of this legislation even more difficult.

I would like to address three items in the bill which are particularly important to the Washington Metropolitan Area and the State of Maryland.

The bill includes a critical appropriation of funds for the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority. While the funds in the bill are less than the $250 million requested by the administration, the jurisdictions surrounding Washington, DC, will be able to tighten their belts and proceed ahead on its long-range construction plans for the completion of the full Metrorail System. A steady appropriation of funds over the upcoming years will be required for the orderly construction of the remaining miles of the system and the administration seems inclined to proceed with an appropriate level of funding until the Stark-Harris authorization for Metrorail is depleted. While the subcommittee was faced with difficult budgetary constraints and ultimately had to reduce the administration's request for Metrorail, it nonetheless has strongly reaffirmed its support for the WMATA system and the entire Washington Metropolitan Area deeply appreciates this commitment.

The bill also has included a provision, after consulting with the authorizing committees, that allows the National Park Service to maintain its control over the Baltimore-Washington Parkway and provides funds to begin long-awaited repair work on that road. The Parkway, which has been dedicated in the name of our former colleague, Gladys Noon Spellman, stretches from Washington, DC to the outskirts of Baltimore, MD, and is a highly travelled though increasingly dangerous route. The committee's willingness to maintain the Park Service's control and servicing of the Parkway and provide funds to get rehabilitation underway is appreciated by the millions of people who travel the road each year.

Last, the bill provides funds to begin work on the Jones Falls Expressway in Baltimore, a road so in need of repair that the Mayor of that city has considered closing it unless work began immediately to repair the road surface and bridge supports. The Jones Falls is the main artery into the city of Baltimore from the north and is built in great measure above ground. The committee's willingness to provide Baltimore with discretionary funds has prevented a potential disaster on, or closing of the Jones Falls.

I again want to thank the subcommittee for their hard work. They receive very little thanks for the tough job of making priority decisions on activities and projects that almost all of us agree are excellent investments. I thank them for their work and congratulate them on an excellent product.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my strong support of H.R. 3244 Department of Transportation Appropriations for fiscal year 1986.

First, I want to congratulate the committee members, both the majority and minority, for their care and wisdom in preparing this legislation for floor consideration. I also would like to commend the distinguished chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee, Mr. LEHMAN, for his leadership on this vital issue, as well as that of Mr. COUGHLIN, the ranking Republican.

Second, it is important to note that this bill is below the funding level provided for in the transportation appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985. With the adoption of Mr. LEHMAN's amendment of a reduction of $1 billion, we meet the overall targets of the budget resolution. It is difficult to advocate reductions in programs that are beneficial to the American people. I salute the chairman for his recognition of the budget crisis and his courage to propose cuts.

At a time when efforts are aimed at reducing Federal spending, I believe it is imperative to see new financing policies—policies needed to be able to continue transportation and public improvement projects in the future.

Repeated large budget deficits require that Congress also adopt creative strategies to reduce Government spending while maintaining essential public services, such as public transportation. One possible alternative which should be examined for operation of transit systems is privatization. I feel it is necessary to expand the role of the private sector in public transportation. There clearly are benefits for the private sector in development of public transit. The private sector, then, should share the cost. Report language accompanying this bill clearly states that the potential of the private sector to reduce costs and improve service must not be overlooked. I believe the report language regarding privatization in this appropriations bill is an important step in the right direction.

I also want to make special reference to a small, but increasingly significant aspect of the Transportation appropriations bill. This is the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation. The opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway 25 years ago made the Great Lakes a new seacoast for international trade by both the United States and Canada. The seaway is one of our Nation's most important transportation routes, and has a vital role in our manufacturing, farming, and defense capabilities. I believe this waterway linking our industrial heartland to world ports has an even greater potential for the future. Taking maximum advantage of that potential is important to our balance of trade and employment outlook.

My primary efforts this session have been aimed at reducing the huge budget deficit. Toward that end, I have introduced and/or supported efforts to curtail Federal spending on a wide variety of programs. The only way Federal spending can be reduced equitably is for every program to take its fair share of spending limitations. So we come to the Transportation appropriations bill—and spending provided for in this legislation is limited. I am proud that the subcommittee of which I am a member has produced such a bill, and I urge my colleagues to support it. Thank you.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Coughlin amendment to delete all funds for the Westway project in New York City. I agree with my distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Public Works Committee that the DOT appropriations bill is not the proper place to address this issue.I would like to reiterate what was said by the Gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], that in no way is a vote against the Coughlin amendment a vote against legitimate environmental concerns; in no way is it a vote for more outrageous, pork-berrel spending. My record will show that I am an ardent environmentalist, and that I have worked hard to achieve serious, balanced cutbacks in Government spending.

The Coughlin amendment was rejected by the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee and the full Appropriations Committee and for sound reasons. It is very poor legislative practice, and I think it is very unfair to the State and city of New York to deny this issue a full hearing before the committee which has sole jurisdiction over Westway, the House Public Works Committee.

The chairman of that committee has a bill of his own that addresses Westway, and has made clear his intention to hold, before the end of the month, a full committee hearing on Westway during consideration of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act.

The Public Works Committee is the proper forum for addressing this issue in a thorough fasion. It is the only forum which guarantees that the right of New Yorkers, and all American taxpayers, to all fair consideraion of a aspects of federally supported transportation policy in the city of New York.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. KILDEE] having assumed the chair, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3244) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 307, nays 102, answered not voting 25, as follows:

Mr. GOODLING changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MINETA changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMENDING PETE ROSE ON BECOMING ALL-TIME MAJOR LEAGUE LEADER IN BASEBALL HITS

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 61) to commend Pete Rose on becoming the all-time major league leader in baseball hits, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. THOMAS LUKEN, who is the chief sponsor of the House resolution.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of myself, Mr. GRADISON and 18 of our colleagues, who represent areas in Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky from which the Cincinnati Reds draw fans, in support of this resolution (S. Con. Res. 61) in order to salute and honor a man whose accomplishments on the baseball diamond are legend. We glow with pride that Pete Rose was born and raised in Cincinnati, and that he has played 16 seasons as a Red.

Last evening in Cincinnati, Pete Rose broke Ty Cobb's record of 4,191 major league hits, lining a sharp single to left field.

Pete represents the American dream. More, he has accomplished the impossible dream. Several years ago when he set out on this quest, experts scoffed. The smart money was wagered on age, infirmity, injury preventing fulfillment of his dream.

But Pete proved once again that the impossible dream can be a reality in America, where determination and perseverance can carry one to any heights.

So we honor Pete Rose because of his heart, his grit, his quality of rising above the crowd by sheer fortitude and will. Pete Rose embodies much more than mere athletic ability.

It is fitting and appropriate that Pete Rose be honored by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States for making baseball history. Cosponsors of the resolution in the House are:

BILL GRADISON of Ohio; ROBERT GARCIA of New York; FREDERICK BOUCHER of Virginia; DAN BURTON of Indiana; MICHAEL DEWINE of Ohio; TONY HALL of Ohio; LEE HAMILTON of Indiana; LARRY HOPKINS of Kentucky; CARL HUBBARD, JR. of Kentucky; TOM KINDNESS of Ohio; ROMANO MAZZOLI of Kentucky; BOB MCEWEN of Ohio; WILLIAM NATCHER of Kentucky; DON PEASE of Ohio; CARL PERKINS of Kentucky; HAROLD ROGERS of Kentucky; PHIL SHARP of Indiana; GENE SNYDER of Kentucky; BOB WISE of West Virginia; and CHALMERS WYLIE of Ohio.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON].

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join with my colleague from Ohio in support of this resolution.

When Pete Rose first stepped onto the field as a second baseman for the Cincinnati Reds in 1963, no one doubted his love for the game of baseball and the zest with which he played it. In the ensuing 23 years, fans of the national pastime across the country have followed the brilliant career of "Charlie Hustle" as he set new records and appeared in numerous All-Star Games, National League championships and the World Series.

Last night, yet another record fell to the bat of Pete Rose. When Ty Cobb, a similarly determined player, retired from baseball in 1928 with 4,191 hits to his credit, it was considered an unsurpassable mark. As he has done so often, Pete has set a new standard. As a player and a manager, Pete Rose has consistently demonstrated the virtue of hard work and a commitment ot excellence that has inspired countless fans and players not only to use the talents they have but to strive to reach ever-higher levels of achievement. Along the way, Pete has left sports fans across the country with memories of head-first slides and sharp line drives. I am proud that Pete Rose and the Cincinnati Reds are constituents of mine.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the excellent remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

At this time, I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio, [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding and want to thank my chairman for his courtesy as well.

As an Ohioan, I am really proud of Pete Rose, and I think today we need today contemporary heroes. He is a genuine hero, and he is a regular guy, and I think it is terrific. I know that my colleague from Cincinnati, my good friend, Congressman LUKEN, who has been awaiting this resolution from the other body all day and all week trying to get it passed, I want to commend him for his work on this as well. I am just real proud that Pete Rose broke the record.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Utah for yielding. I think we should try and set a couple of records straight here before we do anything else.

No. 1, this committee has stated very specifically that we will not pass a resolution on this floor honoring any living person, and I think it is important that the record indicate that.

I believe that what happened last night in Cincinnati is a once in probably a forever period of time. I do not believe anybody else will ever break the record that was broken last night by Pete Rose of the Cincinnati Reds.

So having said that, and having people understand that this is the first time that we have honored a living person in a resolution, that it is a double honor in the case of Pete Rose.

Now I also want to make it clear to my friend from Ohio that you do not have to be from Ohio to love Pete Rose. And those of us from New York, and especially myself who lives within a 2-minute walk from Yankee Stadium, that in spite of this moment in which I give way to my fanaticism for the sport of baseball, I would like to make it very clear that I remain a loyal Yankee fan. And if Pete Rose and the Cincinnati Reds should ever end up in Yankee Stadium, that this moment will be part of the past, and as we go on to the future, we will do everything possible to strike Pete Rose out.

So having said all of that, I say to my colleague from Utah, and my good friend from Cincinnati, Representative TOM LUKEN, to both of you that I am just delighted that when we talk about the crisis in the Middle East, and we talk about the problems of Central America and our deficit, that Pete Rose shines above it all, and he is like the Phoenix and he comes out of the ashes and he says to all of us, hey, let us get back to America's great pasttime, baseball. And that is one area where there is bipartisanship. It does not matter whether you are Republican or Democrat, a liberal or a conservative.

So I say to Pete Rose, wherever he is right now, we thank you for bringing us together on this historic day.

□ 1425

Mr. HANSEN. Let me just say that the eloquent remarks from the chairman of the committee are well stated. We appreciate them very much. We will see whether or not the gentleman qualifies as a prophet when he says that this never will happen again or that he seriously doubts it.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the others in enthusiastically sponsoring and supporting this resolution. You know, as a non-Ohioan, as a Kentuckian, seeing those tens of thousands of young people who travel from Kentucky, from West Virginia, and the surrounding areas to Cincinnati to watch the Reds play, Pete Rose is today perhaps one of the premier examples in their lives. What a joy it is to see a person who plays the game with such zest and such joy, who is the eternal teenager yet we all know he is a couple of years past that, but the joy and zest that we see this prime example for our youngsters playing, at a time when we see perhaps some others in the sports setting being perhaps an example that we would not wish to be set, is especially true at this point, to see this man lifting our spirits and lifting the example for our youngsters to watch.

So for all of those Kentuckians and all of those West Virginians and Indianans and all the others who come to those games in Cincinnati to watch Pete Rose and the Reds, we say salute again to a great American sports hero and a great figure in the game, forever, of course, Pete Rose.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT].

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to point out to my fellow colleague from New York, and we are so proud to be from the Empire State, that there is a great deal of identification with Pete Rose and New York.

First of all, he started his very distinguished baseball career with the Geneva, NY, Red Legs. Second he is going to end up in New York. Very few of us know where future constituents are going to come from. I am one exception, because I have the privilege of representing Cooperstown, NY, with the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum located there, and we all know because of his very distinguished accomplishments on the playing field Pete Rose will return whence he came. He started in Geneva NY. He will return to Cooperstown, NY, where I will invite all of my colleagues at the appropriate time to join in the induction ceremony for a very able professional.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS].

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, in 1963 an enthusiastic young man donned a Cincinnati Reds uniform for his first full season in the major leagues. His aggressive style of play, immense desire and wit immediately set him apart from other rookies in the major leagues that year.

At age 44 that characteristic style and winning attitude, marked by head-first slides and running instead of walking to first base after a walk, continue to set Peter Edward Rose apart from his colleagues in major league baseball.

In lining a base hit to left-center field in the first inning last night, number 4,192 of his illustrious career, Peter Rose has now amassed more base hits over his career than any other player in the history of our national pastime.

On this occasion, we congratulate and commend him on achieving what many of us thought was not possible. Indeed, we thought the Cobb record would stand forever.

Many comparisons have been made between Ty Cobb and Peter Rose, and it's a good bet that they will continue. But I hope in making all these comparisons we do not forget the inspiring message in this accomplishment.

Since his early days in baseball, fans have witnessed the enormous success of this man borne from tremendous dedication and hard work. In effect, we have witnessed his living our American dream.

Congratulations on this great accomplishment, Pete.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Senate Concurrent Resolution 61 commending Pete Rose for breaking the record that he broke last evening. I think today youngsters need someone whom they can watch. The youngsters do not need critics; they need models. Pete Rose became a model for many, many youngsters. I think it would be worthwhile for all of us to look behind the records Pete Rose has set, to look behind last nights historic 4,192d base hit, and look at Pete Rose in the context of the success that can come to an individual if he or she is willing to give 100 percent to the effort before them. Total dedication and commitment are the hallmarks of Pete Rose. He accomplished the feats that have made famous only because of his terrific work ethic, a work ethic that all of America would do well to emulate.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time to join my colleagues in commemorating this great event. I would point out to all of my distinguished colleagues that we in Philadelphia take a little pride in the success of Mr. Rose. We feel very strongly that during the period he was with us in Philadelphia he benefitted from being in the City of Brotherly Love and Sisterly Affection, and all of us join in congratulating him on the great achievement.

We feel he is part of Philadelphia as well.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, sports fans across the Nation witnessed a baseball milestone last night. Cincinnati Reds Pete Rose got the big knock "number 4,192" which broke Ty Cobb's record for career hits.

Before a standing room only crowd at Riverfront Stadium, Pete slammed a line drive single into left field. The Cincinnati fans responded with a standing ovation for their favorite son. Like the fans at Riverfront Stadium and those across the country, we applaud this great achievement.

Throughout his entire baseball career, Pete Rose has worked hard to attain his goals. Like Ty Cobb, he has strived to become a good hitter. So it should come to no one's surprise that Charlie Hustle has reached this goal.

Mr. Speaker, the Reds player-manager also had a second hit in last night's contest against San Diego. I join with his teammates and friends in congratulating Pete Rose in his effort to set the new all-time record for career hits because sports fans—"You ain't seen nothing yet!"

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in full support of the resolution (S. Con. Res. 61) to honor Pete Rose, who last night broke Ty Cobb's major league record for total career hits.

In one swing of the bat last night, Peter Edward Rose became a baseball immortal. Perhaps there are some who did not know his name until last night, but it's safe to say that the man they call "Charlie Hustle" did not earn his reputation with one swing of the bat.

In fact, Pete Rose holds 23 National and major league records, including most games played in a career (3,475); most career at bats (13,767); and a record that is perhaps more special than any other to Pete, most winning games played.

That last statistic undoubtedly paints the most accurate picture of Pete Rose—above all else, he is a winner. In fact, two teams—the Philadelphia Phillies and Montreal Expos—gambled huge sums of money on the fact that Pete could turn their image as perennial underachievers into a winning tradition, not necessarily with his considerable talent, but with his attitude.

And, what a refreshing character Pete Rose turned out to be. During an age of sports' superstars who earn millions of dollars for playing a game and then selfishly claiming they owe nothing to nobody, Pete Rose gives it all back. He has spent hours on end throughout his career signing autographs for adoring fans and granting interviews for anxious reporters who cannot seem to get enough of Pete's quick wit and captivating anecdote. Most telling of all was Pete's reaction to his 0 for 4 performance the night before he set the record. Was he nervous because of the record chase? No. "I was tight on Tuesday," he said, "because I hate to inconvenience people and I felt like I was holding everybody up waiting for this."

When the record was broken was he thinking about all the fame and glory that would now come his way? No. "I looked up in the sky and started thinking about my (late) father. I thought I saw him there. And right behind him was Ty Cobb," he added.

Yes, Pete Rose cried last night when he thought of his father's inspiration, and when he shared his joy with his son, Pete, Jr. He cried because Pete Rose appreciates knowing where he came, and where he is headed—and no record in the world will ever change that.

Pete Rose is also the ultimate in sportsmanship. Throughout the course of the record chase he never had a disparaging word for Ty Cobb, nor would he ever suggest that he was better than the man they called the "Georgia Peach." Instead, he did what only Pete Rose would do. He named his baby son Ty Rose.

When he barreled over catcher Ray Fosse to help the National League win an All-Star game a few years back, essentially ending the young catcher's career, nobody suggested Pete was a dirty player; he just didn't know any other way to play but all out.

Every so often an athletic event or an athlete become larger than life. Last night was one of those memorable times. It is a moment that will be treasured by generations to come. What happened last night was good for all our sakes—but, especially for Pete's sake.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to insert an article that appeared in today's Washington Post chronicling the baseball career of Peter Edward Rose, a real American hero.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 12, 1985]

ROSE: IT ALL STARTED ON A SPRING DAY 44 YEARS AGO

(By Dave Sell)

History. Pete Rose is part of it.

On April 14, 1941, Harry and LaVerne Rose had a son. Forty-four years 4 months 28 days later, that son, Peter Edward Rose, is the most prolific hitter in the history of baseball. For Pete Rose, it's the most important kind of history.

Last night, he broke Ty Cobb's 57-year-old record for career hits, 4,191, by getting a single for the Cincinnati Reds in the first inning of a 2-0 win over San Diego at Riverfront Stadium, Rose also tripled and walked.

Rose's career began shortly after he graduated (although not without going through 10th grade twice) from Western Hills High School in Cincinnati. The father, who had taken Pete to Crosley Field so many times to watch the Reds and had given his son his own sense of desire and drive, put him on a plane soon after he was awarded his diploma and signed his contract. The contract reportedly was for a whopping $7,000, with a $5,000 bonus if Rose made the big leagues for 30 days.

The bonus clause is somewhat ironic given that one of the 23 National and major league records that Rose holds is for most games played in a career, 3,475. The records that Rose claims, and never has been a shrinking violet about, include most career at bats, 13,767 through Tuesday's game. That one statistic often is the focus of debate when fans argue whether or not Rose is a better hitter than was Cobb, who batted 11,429 times.

Rose began his pro career in 1960 with the Geneva of the New York-Penn League. According to the Reds, he signed on June 18 and made his debut June 25, going two for five. He went on to hit .277 in 85 games. He was the second baseman on that team, pushing Tony Perez, who now platoons with Rose at first base, to third.

In 1961, the year that Cobb died of cancer at the age of 74, Rose hit .331 for the Class D Tampa Tarpons, leading the Florida State League with 160 hits.

Macon, Ga., was home for the summer of 1962. Rose batted .330 and scored a career-high 136 runs in 139 Class A Sally League games.

When Rose arrived in Tampa for spring training in 1963, he wasn't on Cincinnati's 40-man roster, and may have annoyed some of the veterans who didn't take kindly to this kid who ran to first on a walk. Before he made the team, he reportedly received the nickname "Charlie Hustle" from Mickey Mantle.

Rose walked—maybe ran is a better word—in his first at bat in the majors. Bob Friend of the Pittsburgh Pirates may someday find his name in the sports version of Trivial Pursuit as the pitcher who gave up Rose's first big league hit in the fourth game of the season, on April 13. Rose hit .273 that year while playing in 157 games at second and in the outfield, and was named National League rookie of the year by The Sporting News, which would later in his career name him player of the decade.

He would play 16 years with the Reds, during which time he spent only 22 days on the disabled list, before playing out his option and signing with the Philadelphia Phillies in December 1978. He helped the Phillies get to two World Series. But in 1983, he hit only .245, and was released after the season. The Montreal Expos signed him Jan. 20, 1984, hoping his experience would help a team that was a chronic underachiever win a pennant.

But he didn't spend much time in Montreal. It was time to go home. Vern Rapp was struggling as manager of the Reds. By Aug. 16, Rapp was unemployed, replaced by the prodigal son.

Rose had come home. Some wondered if the Reds were making the move more for the increased attendance that Rose's chase of Cobb would bring than for reasons of improving the team. But Rose has proved those skeptics wrong. The Reds are winning, and, now, he has his record.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 61

Whereas Peter Edward Rose has become the all-time leader in base hits in the history of the American pastime, Major League Baseball, by surpassing the record of four thousand one hundred and ninety-one of the great Ty Cobb;

Whereas Pete Rose has played in more winning games than any other player in Major League history;

Whereas Pete Rose won three National League batting titles in 1968, 1969, and 1973;

Whereas Pete Rose was named National League Rookie of the Year in 1963, National League Most Valuable Player in 1973, and the World Series Most Valuable Player in 1975;

Whereas Pete Rose was named the National League Player of the Decade for the period 1970 through 1979 by the "The Sporting News";

Whereas Pete Rose has been named to the National League All-Star Team sixteen times, including ten straight years (1973 through 1982), and has started at five different positions in All-Star games;

Whereas Pete Rose has played in seven National League Championship Series and six World Series; and

Whereas Pete Rose holds all-time Major League records for most games played; for most at-bats; for most singles; for most hits by a switch-hitter; for most total bases by a switch-hitter; for most seasons of two hundred or more hits; for most seasons of one hundred and fifty or more games; and for highest fielding percentage by an outfielder for one thousand or more games: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress to commend Peter Edward Rose on the achievement of becoming the all-time Major League leader in base hits and to recognize all the accomplishments and the inspirational manner in which Pete Rose has played the game of baseball, the National Pastime.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to Peter Edward Rose.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SCHOOL LUNCH AND CHILD NUTRITION AMENDMENTS OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 262 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 7.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] to assume the chair temporarily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7) to extend and improve the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, with Mr. GARCIA, Chairman pro tempore, in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I regret to have to rise somewhat on a negative note, but this morning on this particular proposal a great amount of misinformation was given which gives the impression that this bill is being taken up not in compliance with the budget resolution and, in some way, in a rather suspect manner. Such is not the fact, and I regret that some individuals were misinformed as to the extent to which this bill is in simple compliance not only with the budget resolution but in many ways with what has been expressed by the administration.

Unfortunately, several individuals who spoke about the bill this morning and about the rule gave the impression that this is a budget-busting proposal and that it really authorizes new programs and that many of these programs do not conform to the limits expressed in the budget resolution.

I think it is most unfortunate that individuals who talk about fiscal responsibility in a very high intellectual manner have very short memories. Three of the gentlemen who spoke, two from Texas and the other gentleman from Pennsylvania, this morning, on a motion made some time ago, on June 18, 1985, on Mr. ASPIN's motion to conform the defense authorization bill to the budget resolution, voted against this amendment which would have reduced the defense appropriation by $10 billion so as to conform to the budget resolution, who today have reversed themselves and now wish to oppose merely $121 million as compared with the $10 billion and speak then of fiscal responsibility.

It seems to me that in considering a little bill to help the children of this Nation they have not demonstrated very much fiscal responsibility.

Now, H.R. 7, as was explained by Mr. GOODLING, a member of the committee, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee that handled this bill this morning, H.R. 7 merely reauthorizes, not authorizes but merely reauthorizes, five specific programs. These programs are the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985 which would reauthorize the special supplemental food program for woman, infants, and children, sometimes known as the WIC Program; the summer food service program for children; the commodity distribution program; the State administrative expenses and nutrition education and training programs.

It should be thoroughly understood that this is simply a reauthorization, that the administration supports the extension of all of these programs.

They are the same programs that we reauthorized just a few years ago in this House by a vote of 343 to 72, except that at that time the expense was much greater, was substantially greater. We have reduced it. So that we have already voted for a much stronger bill than that which is before the committe today.

These programs expired in September 1984, and we are still trying to reauthorize and extend these programs merely by a continuing resolution.

Now, testimony before the committee has demonstrated that these programs have widespread support, that they have been successful, that they are cost effective, and yet they have been the ones that have borne more than their fair share of the budget cuts since 1981.

Let me just briefly describe these five programs. The WIC Program provides nutritious supplemental food to pregnant and post-partum women and infants and childran through age 4. These are persons determined to be at nutritional risk because of inadequate nutrition and inadequate income.

Currently the WIC caseload is just over 3 million, and this is about one-third of the target group.

That we are not doing nearly enough in this regard and have not been over generous, I think, is reflected in the fact that this Nation, among the developed nations, stands 16th in terms of infant mortality.

Last year, 1984, there were 40,000 infant deaths attributed in one way or the other to this serious problem.

A second program which is being extended, the summer food service program for children, which provides food for children in low income areas during the summer months. A third program extends the authority for commodity distribution which requires the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the legislatively-mandated levels of commodity support for the Child Nutrition and Older Americans Act.

It is possible if we do not act on this program and provide for the funding of it through section 32 customs receipt funds, that these programs would have to be funded out of the general funds of the Treasury, and this would require, instead, that we would increase rather than, in this instance, decrease the deficit.

The fourth expiring program provides for payments to the States to assist in meeting the administrative costs of operating various Federal child feeding programs. The last expiring program is the nutrition, education, and training program. This program provides grants to the States to instruct students on the nutritional value of food and to train school food personnel to improve their management of these programs. In addition to extending the five expiring programs, H.R. 7 also provides for a modest expansion of the proven cost-effective programs in the amount of $120 million merely to increase efficiency in handling an increasing caseload. The WIC Program, it should be remembered, has been deemed by experts to be one of the most cost-effective Federal programs in existence.

Numerous studies show that the WIC Program is a sound investment of Federal funds, that saves billions of dollars in health expenditures through prevention and intervention.

Currently, for example, on a unit basis we are paying out $400 to $500, approximately, in this program, as compared with a later cost, if we did not make this expenditure, of several thousands in intensive care in hospitals. This has been well documented, to say nothing in this instance of the cost of dealing with retardation, cerebral palsy, seizures, poor vision resulting from low birth weight which this proposal addresses.

□ 1440

An evaluation of the National School Breakfast Feeding Program, sponsored in 1984 by the Department of Agriculture, estimated that 3 million children in the United States who now skip breakfast would not do so if the breakfast program were available to them.

This same study also regrettably concluded that the School Breakfast Program does not currently provide adequate amounts of certain vitamins and that therefore they have recommended to us on the committee that these meals to be improved; and we have done so.

H.R. 7, therefore, adds 6 cents a meal to the breakfast program in order to correct these iron and vitamin deficiencies as disclosed by the Department of Agriculture.

This investment will return benefits for years to come. There are many studies and testimony of expert witnesses to indicate a direct correlation between children who are well nourished and their motivation in school.

H.R. 7 also makes milk available to kindergartern students, raises the tuition ceiling from $1,500 annually to $2,500 for private school participation, and authorizes $1 million to purchase food equipment.

Mr. Chairman, since 1981, the budget cutbacks in the child nutrition programs have been approximately $5 billion. A Congressional Budget Office report has shown that as a result of these cuts, millions of children and thousands of schools were dropped from the program. One-third of these children were from low-income families.

Though I am, like my colleagues, deeply concerned about the Federal deficit, I earnestly believe that adequate funding of the Child Nutrition Program is a sound investment in our children's future. If a person is hungry, there is not much motivation to do anything.

I further believe that it is in our national interests, and a wise investment for the present and the future that we put an end to hunger in our society.

The President was right in September 1984 when he said, and I quote him: "If even one American child is forced to go to bed hungry, that is a national tragedy." The President was right in 1984; should we do less in 1985 then we did in 1984?

As a task force, the Harvard School of Health has said:

Hunger is now more widespread and serious in the United States than at any time in the last 10 to 15 years.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I submit that we must act and we must act promptly. There is no greater cause; there is no sounder investment, and there is no greater moral responsibility.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 7 as reported by the House Education and Labor Committee. Earlier this year Representative HAWKINS, the author of this bill, joined me in introducing H.R. 1856, the Comprehensive Nutrition Assistance Act of 1985. I am pleased to note that many of the provisions from my bill are included in the legislation before us today. I would hope that all my colleagues will join me in voting for H.R. 7 today.

H.R. 7 passed the committee by unanimous consent. It is a solid bipartisan package that provides modest, but important, improvements in WIC and other child nutrition programs. The fact that these improvements are primarily targeted to particularly vulnerable groups in our society lends even more credence to the critical need for approval of this bill.

For example, H.R. 7 increases the WIC Program authorization to permit the addition of approximately 120,000 participants. WIC provides crucial nutrition and health services to low-income pregnant women, infants, and children who are determined to be at nutritional risk. the latest available figures indicate that the program serves less than one-third of those who are potentially eligible for benefits. I have always been a proponent of the WIC Program. As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, I have gained a more extensive understanding of just how cost effective and successful this program is in improving pregnancy outcomes and child health.

In addition, H.R. 7 provides a nominal increase in the reimbursement rate for meals under the school breakfast program. This provision responds directly to recommendations included in a 1983 USDA report that the school breakfast meal pattern be improved. Considering the majority of existing programs are found in low-income areas and 91 percent of the participants are poor, I believe that this provision reflects a solid contribution to the nutritional well-being of our children.

Census Bureau statistics released just last month indicate that the 1984 poverty rate for all children was 21.3 percent. There continues to be a prevalence of poverty among children. I believe this condition clearly dictates the need for a continued commitment to the maintenance of quality benefits under child nutrition programs.

Mr. Chairman, it would be detrimental to the health and welfare of the children of this Nation if we reduced services provided by these programs. A vote for H.R. 7 demonstrates that we will not renege on our obligation to this Nation's most valuable resource, its children.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I address my colleagues today in support of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985. This legislation seeks to reauthorize five important child nutrition programs, programs which are shortly due to expire.

These programs, without question, are critical to the health and welfare of thousands of Americans. I strongly urge my colleagues to place their full support behind this important piece of legislation. It is imperative that we maintain these valuable programs, and, in doing so, reaffirm our commitment to what is perhaps this Nation's greatest asset—its children.

I would like to ask my colleagues to recall that in 1984, the House voted to reauthorize these programs by an overwhelming vote of 343 to 72. And the bill which we now consider would provide for spending levels that are even more prudent. In short, this measure is a fiscally responsible initiative, and one which possesses a strong degree of bipartisan support. It provides for a modest expansion in services, and, something which we all must keep in mind, this growth is specifically targeted at those Americans who are most in need. Finally, I would add that the bill, as reported out of committee, is entirely consistent with the budget resolution adopted by the Congress in August.

Programs such as the ones which we seek to reauthorize today are worthy of support largely in and of themselves. The services which are provided are of enormous value to thousands of children throughout this Nation. Indeed, it is rare that we question the worth of these services. It is significant to realize, however, that we are able to defend these programs not only on the basis of their social value, but also on the basis of their cost effectiveness. In fact, there are few programs that prove to be as cost effective as the one which we address today.

Numerous studies have demonstrated that child nutrition programs ultimately save more money than that which is initially authorized. I would cite, as an excellent example, the Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children, commonly referred to as the WIC Program. It is estimated that for every $1 spent on the WIC Program, $3 is saved in terms of the money that would eventually have been spent on health services. I recommend to my colleagues that you refer to a recent bipartisan staff report entitled "Opportunities for Success: Cost Effective Prorams for Children." This report, issued by the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, clearly illustrates the cost benefits of these programs, as well as their contribution to America's children.

In closing, I would like to emphasize the fact that these programs have suffered budget cuts in excess of $5 billion over the last 4 years. Yet during this same period, the number of poor children in the United States has increased by 33 percent. Clearly, these programs have taken their share of the burden in the ongoing budget-cutting process. The WIC Program, and other child nutrition programs, are so critical to the health and welfare of our citizens, that it is our duty to preserve, and, indeed, strengthen them. Let us today reaffirm our commitment to our Nation's youth. Let us strongly support the measure before us, so that these vital programs may continue to benefit so many American children.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by saying that I have a great deal of respect for the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS]; I found him as a chairman to be at all times fair and courteous and very sincere in his efforts.

We are both here today to reauthorize the several programs contained in H.R. 7, and on that issue, we have no dispute; these programs should be, and no doubt will be, reauthorized.

The issue then becomes as to how those reauthorizations will occur and whether the House will be able to make modifications in the reauthorization and indeed in the underlying legislation to provide for some fair modifications so as to limit the rate of increase that are in these programs.

Now I suppose I am not surprised that Defense would come up; I suppose I am surprised that the Defense bill would come up so early in the debate. There are good and valid arguments affecting national security of this country on both sides of the debate as to how far we should cut or add to the defense budget and how fast.

The defense vote will be up next week, not today. What we have before us today are a series of programs that, unless this House acts with some amendments, will be allowed to increase by approximately 36 percent over the next 5 years under these reauthorizations.

Now the size of the bill itself and the changes that the committee made, some of them were good and in fact I support many of those changes. The difficulty is if you accumulate the total cost of these programs including the changes but also the underlying programs that the Congress has never gotten around to changing, you add an additional $400 million in spending next year, from $5.5 billion to almost $6 billion; $5.9 billion; and if you add up the total cost over 5 years, you will add some $2 billion in Federal expenditures, or a 36-percent increase on an annual basis at the end of that 5 years.

So the issue is not whether to reauthorize the School Lunch Program; the issue is how best to reauthorize it. The issue is not even as to whether to increase funding for school lunches, school breakfasts, and WIC, but how best to increase that funding and what is the amount that will keep this Congress from hurting the needy people of this country, who also need and need even more reduction of the Federal operating deficit so that interest rates might come down and unemployment might come down, and their parents might get jobs, and their families might be able to buy homes.

I would take a minute to set what I think the procedure will be for the House Members, I know, who are wondering how long we will be here on this bill. We will have an hour of debate and then I will offer a series of amendments, five in total, one of which may well be accepted by all sides; and that would leave four. I had offered to offer these four amendments either en bloc or in some sort of a block, but a number of Members on both sides of the aisle have requested the opportunity to vote on them separately; and that is the request of the leadership for both the majority and the minority of the committee, and so that is their decision, and that is fine with me.

The numbers are large; the School Lunch Programs are important; and the size of the increases are extraordinarily large and extraordinarily negative, and so I think the House will and should take sufficient time to consider each of these amendments in detail as to what they do, and then the cumulative effect of the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, just a word about the bill itself. The bill does make some needed improvements. For example, the WIC Program will be reauthorized and extended to, I think, save Federal dollars over a long period of time by lowering the cost of neonatal care by providing for additional nutrition for prenatal care.

The School Breakfast and Lunch Programs will be changed in a number of ways that many of us have advocated, including an offer versus serve of the School Breakfast Program and a study of the allocation formula of the State administrative expense.

The authorization continues to ignore budgetary and indeed economic restraints on the programs, and H.R. 7 does not target scarce Federal resources to the needy.

Now it is one thing to advocate continued funding for those programs that serve low-income families in this country; the needy, and I support that. It is another thing to support large increases in those same fundings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOODLING. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I will take my 1 minute and then we will have some additional debate during the amendments.

I will be offering five amendments, including an amendment to simplify the program at the local government level; to delete the now program that would be reinstated of the food service equipment assistance, to instate the same means test for family day care homes for school lunch, the same means test that every other part of the School Lunch and School Breakfast Program has; to eliminate the cash subsidies of nonneedy students; that is to say that portion of the subsidies that goes not to the low income but to the middle income at the rate of 12½ cents cash subsidy per student, and to freeze for 1 year the automatic COLA increase that would occur on July 1, 1986.

The cumulative effect of the amendments would be to reduce annual spending of these programs by $931 million, almost $1 billion, at the end of 5 years, or to cut in half the increases. So if these amendments were adopted, we would be at a freeze level.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is a real pleasure to stand here on the House floor and talk today about something that I believe very deeply in, and that, of course, is H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985.

Now, when we talk about this particular piece of legislation, we are talking in broad strokes about some of the most important programs that we have in our country. We are talking about programs that affect your children and our children. We are talking about things that are very basic. We are talking about food. We are talking about the ability to go to school and have some food in your stomach.

Back in 1981, these programs were cut by this Congress drastically. During that time period these programs have taken $5.2 billion in cuts over these last 4 years in combating of hunger among our children.

Now, the problem is getting worse, and the number of poor children who need proper nutrition has grown by over 1 million. It is a terrible fact that since 1981 the elimination of these programs has forced over 800,000 children to go without these services. The school districts simply cannot afford to continue to offer free or reduced breakfasts or lunches. We are moving backward. We have moved backward fast in the last 4 years in our efforts to help these children. I am sure this was not the intent of the Congress and those who voted for those cuts in that time period, but the simple fact of the matter is, that is what has occurred. We have gone backward in terms of nutrition and helping poor children in the last 4 years. In the face of the growing number of hungry children, I do not see how anyone can refuse to support fully this particular type of legislation. We will deal with the individual amendments when they come up. But I can truthfully say to you that there are children who live in poverty in every district of the United States of America, every Congressman in this House of Representatives has children in their districts that have this particular type of problem. No area is immune to this plot. Now is our chance to recapture some of the lost momentum of the fight against poverty and the fight against hunger right here in America.

We passed legislation in this House to provide assistance to the needy people of Africa. That was right and good. But now let us, the Members of the 99th Congress, do the same for the children that we represent. For the sake of our children and the sake of the future of our children, I urge overwhelming passage of this legislation.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], the ranking minority member of our committee.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, we have an extremely important bill before us today. First of all, I want to commend all of the members of the committee, and especially the chairman of the committee, the chairman of the subcommittee, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee for putting together a nutrition bill that I think we all should support.

I know, in this day and age when we are suffering from problems of budget deficits and it is necessary for us to try to save every dollar we can, that we have to look very carefully at bills that come to the House floor. The cry is to freeze everything, do not increase anything, and thus we can bring the budget under better control. But there are areas where it does make sense for exceptions, where a program will end up actually saving money, not costing money.

Before getting into that rationale, I would like to say that there are no new entitlement programs in this bill. There are some changes and some modifications in the bill, and with respect to the all-important WIC Program there is even more money to attempt to increase our participation levels.

Let us take a look at what this bill does and, more importantly, what nutrition has done for this country and what the facts show is occurring now.

First of all, good nutrition does save money. The gentleman from California alluded earlier to a report that came out today, a briefing that I attended, which indicated that statistically the facts show that over the years 1980 to 1983, notwithstanding the fact that the country itself improved in such areas as infant mortality and low birthweight, in the poor rural areas we had a significant increase in infant mortality and low birthweight. What is the result of this and what are the implications of these facts for the budget?

We have essentially frozen WIC, as far as the number of people who have been able to participate in this program over the last few years, and we have decreased the amount of money available in food stamps by some $2 billion over the then-current policy of some 4 years ago. The results of the study indicate that this may well be having its ramifications on the health of our country.

What do these program changes mean to us, not only in the sense of what we would like to do for ensuring that our young people are born healthy, but also its ramifications for the budget. We have more young babies born with low birthweight in certain areas and population groups. It costs us about $2,000 a day until that baby comes to a point where it can be self-sustaining.

Studies have indicated very clearly that the WIC Program is a money-saving program. It saves, a Harvard study shows, about $3 for every $1 spent. Thus, we are not saving money by freezing the participation in the WIC Program.

My State of Vermont provides further empirical evidence that this program does work. Whereas the national participation in this program varies somewhere between 30 and 50 percent, the participation in Vermont, among the first States to have the WIC Program, is close to 80 percent. Vermont is one of the most rural areas of the country, has some of the highest poverty, ranked 38th in per capita income and 46th in average wages, yet, our birthweight problem is less than the national average, as is our infant mortality rate.

What would that mean, for instance, if the rest of the country would have the same participation rate as the State of Vermont? It would mean that if we were to spend that extra money to bring the national rate to 80 percent, the net effect would be that we would save in the budget $3.2 billion each year in Medicaid costs and other health services costs.

So, let us delude ourselves in thinking that if we take off a few dollars or if we were to cut rather than expand the WIC Program the very modest bit that we do here, that we would somehow be saving money. It would be a false saving. It would do nothing other than to increase our budget problems, as well as to reduce our compassion for those who need help in the most rural areas of this country.

I want to end by again commending those who have worked so hard, the gentleman from California, the chairman of our committee, and all of the members, including the ranking minority member from Pennsylvania, who have done such an outstanding job in bringing a program here before us. A bill which we can ardently support on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985. As a member of the House Education and Labor Committee, I am familiar with this legislation and feel that it is a measure that all members of good conscience should support.

One of the strongest reasons to support this bill is the fact that it falls within the constraints of the Budget Act. The House Budget Committee, despite its preoccupation with the budget deficit and the need to reduce expenditures, saw fit to fully fund this program. All of us may denounce the growing budget deficit, but there was general agreement that this program should be fully funded when the Federal budget was approved by Congress.

A strong reason for support of this bill is the efficiency of its programs. Some of you may be aware that the Women, Infants, and Child Nutrition Program [WIC] has been estimated to save $3 for every dollar spent. This is very important, especially for my colleagues who are concerned with the health of expectant mothers, the high rate of infant mortality and the urgent need for adequate child nutrition.

Over the last 4 years, the Reagan adminsitration has seen fit to cut an overwhelming $5.2 billion from this program. The small increase that we have allotted by no means makes up that difference, but it is a positive step to eradicate hunger of poor and disadvantaged schoolchildren in this country.

There are other important and valid reasons and all play a part in my reasoning to support this bill. However, nothing is more important than the fact that this legislation will make a difference for the people who need this type of assistance the most. I know that this will make a difference for children in Chicago who, because they have been forced to go to school hungry, are unable to concentrate, and therefore unable to learn. I know that this will save lives in the city of Chicago, a city where infant mortality was 17 percent in 1983, 24.9 percent for black infants. Both these numbers are unacceptably high, and the WIC Program will help us to alleviate this problem.

Strong support and protection for the unborn have been shown by some, and that is their right, and I respect it. But I implore you to please show comparable concern to prolong the lives of those who have already arrived on this earth.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985 and urge my colleagues to adopt it without weakening amendments.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, let me begin by issuing, along with so many others, a special commendation to the distinguished chairman of our committee, and even his predecessor, who have been such strong leaders in this area. But I would be remiss if I stood up here this afternoon and did not issue a very special commendation to the ranking Republican on the subcommittee, Mr. GOODLING. He has been clearly my teacher in all of these elementary education issues, and I think there is no more expert in the U.S. Congress on child nutrition than Mr. GOODLING.

You cannot educate a child who is concerned about the hunger pains in their stomach. And that is why, whether we are Republican or Democrat, liberal or conservative, the issue of child nutrition ought to be so essentially important to each and every one of us. As we get into the debate today I think we will learn a lesson, a lesson that perhaps we would have been better off in freezing everything, because I, too, find it very difficult to stand up here today and ask for cuts in certain areas of child nutrition not so we can reduce the deficit but so that we can increase spending in other areas. That game is never won by anyone.

Today we reauthorize H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985. As indicated before, we are dealing with five programs which expire, the WIC Program, the summer food service program for children, the commodity distribution authority, the funding for State administrative expenses of these programs and nutrition education and training programs. We are making some improvements and additions to such programs as the School Lunch Program. This program, the School Breakfast Program, does not expire. They are entitlements. We are only making corrections in those programs. I think that is important to understand.

I had two amendments adopted in the full committee consideration which I want to take this time to elaborate on because I think they are important for each and every one of us. One of those is the restoration of the special school milk program. Does it cost money? Yes; it costs $15 million. But, really, all we are doing is correcting a mistake that was made and an oversight that was made in the 1981 Gramm-Latta reconciliation. At that time it was the decision of this Congress that we would eliminate the special School Milk Program, believing that the School Lunch Program, which provided reimbursement for milk, would cover all students in our schools.

We also went on to provide special milk for students in schools that did not have a hot lunch program. What we did not realize is that in all of this we were succeeding in eliminating or prohibiting kindergarten students from getting their regular milk break, because they would go to schools that had a hot lunch program, but they did not participate in the hot lunch program. This then is simply correcting a mistake that was made in that area.

A second amendment of mine is to require that every school offer as an option for students in the school milk or school lunch or school breakfast programs whole milk. Believe it or not, up until this time, the present law and regulations require that you must have skim milk, you must have low fat milk, and you must have butterfat milk. But you do not have to have whole milk.

Now, there may be some debate about adults as to whether or not you should have 2 percent or whole milk, et cetera. But I think the evidence, healthwise, is pretty clear among young people that the content, the fat content, the protein content of whole milk is very nutritious and necessary in their growing bodies and the calcium that it includes. Second, all we are saying here is make sure those families and those students that want this whole milk have that particular opportunity.

We are going to consider a lot of amendments this afternoon, and I would like to just briefly mention a few of them. First of all, the question of freezing rates happens to be an amendment that I think can be supported for 1987, obviously not for this year, July 1 has already been here. It is a legitimate debate but it is one that I think can be defensible. It will save $30 million the first year; $250 million the second fiscal year because of the 9 months in that second fiscal year.

The cash subsidy is a difficult issue to determine where we ought to go in terms of trying to be efficient and still maintain the integrity of our School Lunch Program as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so eloquently spoken so many times. I can tell you that my school administrators say absolutely keep the commodity subsidy. If you must cut in this area, take a look at some cut in the cash subsidy area. Frankly, 12 cents may be too much. But perhaps this is an area where we could at least find some subsidy.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I am in support of H.R. 7. I hope that this important piece of legislation will not be controversial and will enjoy wide bipartisan support.

The legislation as reported by the committee would reauthorize the five child nutrition programs that expired last year but were extended by the 1985 continuing resolution. These matters should be addressed in authorization bills, not continuing resolutions.

The legislation calls for a very modest increase in the authorization for the WIC Program—the supplemental feeding program for women, Infants and children—and an increase in the Federal reimbursement rate for the School Breakfast Program. The change in the reimbursement rate for the breakfast program is a direct result of the Department of Agriculture's study which indicates that the breakfast program needs to be improved nutritionally.

The national evaluation of school nutrition programs, released by the Department of Agriculture, in March 1982, indicates that the School Lunch Program is extremely important to students in all income categories. The breakfast program, however, was deficient in the protein category. The committee is attempting to respond to this finding by increasing the Federal reimbursement for breakfast by 6 cents per meal, and thus improve the nutritional guidelines for the program.

The funding in this legislation has been cut back by approximately $200 million from the legislation that passed the House overwhelmingly last year and then died in the Senate. The cost of the legislation, approximately $100 million, has been included in the budget resolution as agreed to by the House and Senate.

I am pleased that the bill includes an amendment I proposed that provides automatic eligibility for free meals for those children who are members of households receiving assistance under the Food Stamp Program or members of an AFDC assistance unit under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act in a State where the standard of eligibility or such assistance does not exceed 130 per centum of the income poverty guidelines. For purposes of the AFDC Program, the standard of eligibility is the payment standard rather than the standard of need (in those States where the two standards are not the same).

The purpose of this amendment is to allow for the least burdensome and least expensive application and verification procedures under the free lunch and breakfast programs. It is my intent that in adopting this amendment the privacy of families of individuals participating in the free lunch and breakfast programs will be protected by requiring their permission to use their AFDC or food stamp eligibility as criteria for participation in the free lunch and breakfast programs.

I am pleased to encourage support for H.R. 7.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, as we consider this significant measure, it is important that we consider the condition of poverty and malnutrition suffered by thousands of women, infants, and children in our Nation. Because of the widespread affects of this national dilemma, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 7, legislation designed to reauthorize and improve upon the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966. I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], for their extensive efforts in bringing this measure before us today.

The National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act comprise a crucial segment of our federally subsidized food programs, allowing low-income families to meet vital nutritional standards through a system of reduced price and free meals to schoolchildren, as well as aid to pregnant women and infants deemed nutritionally at risk by medical authorities. H.R. 7 modifies some of the provisions of the original acts and provides for an additional $121 million in new spending in fiscal year 1986 permitting $60 million to be added to the WIC Program to accommodate about 120,000 new participants, thus extending the number of eligibles to those not able to feed themselves and their families. This legislation also continues support for State administrative expenses associated with all Federal child nutrition programs.

The extent of the national hunger problem was painfully revealed in a recent Harvard study which notes that increased hunger among low-income children is a result of an inadequate WIC Program and cuts in other subsidized school breakfast, lunch programs and child care feeding programs. H.R. 7, is restoring $121 million to the child nutrition account, provide dire needed assistance to low-income pregnant women, infants and children who are suffering from the debilitating effects of malnutrition.

As a member of the Select Committee on Hunger, I appreciate that a nutritional program must be aimed at providing essential dietary supplements. H.R. 7 accomplishes this task through a series of directed improvements in the school breakfast and lunch plans. For instance, under the new, more comprehensive programs, the USDA is required to ameliorate the nutritional quality of breakfast meals and a 6-cent increase per meal assures that some of our neediest students receive at least one nutritionally balanced meal per day. H.R. 7 also provides automatic eligibility for free meals for children in households receiving food stamps or AFDC in a State where the standard for eligibility does not exceed 130 percent of the income poverty guidelines.

A further provision in H.R. 7 furnishes children with well-rounded meals include the offering of whole milk as a school-lunch beverage. H.R. 7 would also provide special milk to kindergarten children who, because they attend school in split sessions, do not benefit from federally subsidized school meals. The Committee on Education and Labor reports that this bill will provide milk for approximately 1 million kindergarten children.

Nutritional health is tied inextricably to developing good eating habits. In that regard, H.R. 7 reauthorizes through fiscal year 1988 the nutritional education and training program which instructs both students and school food personnel on how to best meet daily intake of essential foodstuffs. In addition, a summer food service program is extended and will continue to implement the school year program so as to ensure a child's continued health throughout the entire year.

In response to the mounting desire to eliminate world famine, the Select Committee on Hunger was established to quell the cries of global suffering in a world which knows no limits to the destruction caused by hunger. Much attention has focused on the widespread famine in Africa and rightly so—but this should not and must not detract from our responsbility to address our problems of domestic hunger. The select committee's moral tenet was to ensure that no child in the world would go hungry, and that no family would be subject to the perils of malnutrition and starvation. Let us make sure that this mandate is extended to our own Nation before we become complacent, ignoring the neglected portions of our society when the overall American standard of living places us well above the world norm. I trust that the irrationality of allowing Americans to go hungry will not be lost on my fellow colleagues.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this measure, thus underscoring our Nation's ardent desire to erase all traces of hunger both at home and abroad.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Nutrition Amendments of 1985.

I want to commend the chairman and the other members on the committee who have worked so hard to bring this measure before us today. Indeed, in the last 4 or 5 years, we have had great debates, and unfortunately, I think more often than not, the WIC Program, the school lunch programs and the child nutrition programs have been the losers in that program. In the end, I think our Nation loses when, indeed, we do not meet these types of needs because it is the sort of cost that will be reflected in the future as we attempt to tap the pool of talent and the resources that we have as a nation.

The bill, of course, is an appropriate response to the problems of poverty in our society, and hunger in our Nation. In the United States, not only do thousands of kids go to bed hungry every night, but they come to school hungry every day.

As a former educator, I can speak from personal experience. You cannot teach hungry kids. Kids do not sit still when they are hungry. They do not listen. They do not pay attention. And most importantly, they do not learn.

You cannot teach kids who are sick. Sick kids who do not get the proper food or enough food at home because their families are of low-income background are a recurring phenomenon in our society.

Recently, Professor Hodgkinson, a fellow at the U.S. Department of Education, recently pointed out the changing complexion of our school-age population across the Nation. Unfortunately, increasingly those kids, those youngsters who are coming into our school system are from low-income backgrounds. The fact of the matter is that, sadly, very often it is the minority groups who contribute the largest amount to our school-age population find themselves for a variety of reasons, which I think are all too familiar to us in terms of discrimination and the other disadvantages that they have, and these manifest themselves in kids with limited ability in our school-age population; so much so that they, of course, will be making up nearly half of our school-age population by the end of this century.

The fact of the matter is, if you look across this country, we find that very often these minority students coming from low-income backgrounds needs the types of extra support that can be offered through programs such as this.

So I appeal to my colleagues to support this worthy program. I think it is a good investment in our future.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to clear up a few misconceptions that people seem to have.

It has been mentioned on several occasions by prior speakers that we are reauthorizing only five programs and I would like to reemphasize that. There are only five programs that are being reauthorized at this particular time, and those five programs are the WIC Program, the Nutrition Education and Training Program, the Summer Feeding Program, the Commodity Procurement Program, and the State Administrative Expenses Program. There are no other programs being reauthorized in this place of legislation.

Second, it was mentioned earlier today, inadvertently or incorrectly, that there are new entitlement programs in this legislation. There are no—I repeat, underline, emphasize—no new entitlement programs in this legislation.

It was also indicated that there are large additional expenses to existing entitlement programs. I emphasize: There are no large increases in existing entitlement programs. The largest increase is in the breakfast program, and that is because, as was mentioned before, the Department of Agriculture indicated that the School Breakfast Program meal is not nutrititious, and therefore, in order to make it nutrionally adequate, we have added 6 cents per meal to improve that breakfast.

Again, let me say there are no new entitlement programs. There are no large additions to existing entitlement programs.

Then let me point out, and I am sure this was done inadvertently, but the gentleman from Texas has used some figures that are incorrect, and I think we should probably correct them at this time.

What the gentleman did in his figures, and I said it was inadvertent, I am sure, so he can sit down and not get too exicted, he included gross customs receipt money because he included, I believe—I am just saying I believe he included—$350 million, which is where he seems to be off the whole way across, and I am assuming that is coming from an act that was passed in 1935, and it was passed at that time in order to take care of the agriculture program. In that act, they said that one-third of those gross custom receipts would go to the Secretary of Agriculuture to disperse. So the $350 million, I would believe, where he is above the whole way across, would probably come from something that has nothing to do with this legislation whatsoever.

Let me give the correct figures for child nutrition spending—with and without passage of H.R. 7—according to CBO. Let me also say that we are not talking about 1989 and 1990. We are reauthorizing for 3 years. So let me give the 1986 correct figures according to CBO.

Current policy: $5,640,000,000; with H.R. 7 passed, $5,761,000,000, which is "plus" $121 million.

In 1987, $6,054,000,000 is the current policy figure; $6,178,000,000 with H.R. 7, which is "plus" $124 million.

Then in 1988, the last year of reauthorization, current policy would be $6,468,000,000; passage of H.R. 7 would make that $6,595,000,000, which is "plus" $127 million.

So we do not have the large increase that was indicated earlier today.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I would be very happy to yield very briefly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I will be very brief.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the Members do not want us to debate technicalities as to what the titles are or when what was passed and at what time. The numbers I have presented to the House are a compilation of the cost, the total cost, of all of the programs that are covered by H.R. 7. Now, it is true the National School Lunch Program is not technically reauthorized by H.R. 7 because it is permanently reauthorized, so it has no sunset, so this is the only opportunity for the House to deal with it.

But the numbers before you, adding up to $7½ billion in fiscal year 1990 represents——

Mr. GOODLING. I figured the gentleman picked that number because it comes out to $2 billion, which sounds more dramatic than anything else.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman would yield further, no, sir; I picked that number because it is time this Congress begins to look at the cost of their programs as they compound down the road.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time because we can get into some lengthy debate later on during your amendment process, let me again say that I am giving the exact figures from CBO because people do like the accurate figures.

□ 1525

I believe the error, as I indicated before comes from the $350 million item, which has nothing to do with this package with relationship to reauthorization and funding. That $350 million comes, as I said, from the section 32 account. Section 32 includes one-third of the total customs receipts which is used primarily, I believe, to remove agricultural surpluses.

So, again, let me indicate that the only areas where we are talking about sizable increases are in two, particularly the WIC Program. It has already been mentioned that when we talk about the cost of neonatal care for youngsters who are prematurely born, we are talking about $2,000 a day. We are talking about $60,000 until, as a matter of fact, they leave that particular care since the average length of stay is 30 days. That eventually will be paid by the taxpayer in most instances.

So here this is what we are talking about. Let us spend just $400 a year, not $2,000 a day, and see whether we can prevent this problem. That is what we should be doing in medicine; we should be practicing preventive medicine, It is so much cheaper.

As I indicated, the other area we are talking about is the breakfast program. Here again we have two choices: do away with the breakfast program or make it worthwhile. According to the Department of Agriculture, it is not worthwhile at the present time, and it will take 6 cents a meal to make it worthwhile.

Let me also mention that this Congress must understand that you cannot have this so-called safety net and, at the same time, question paying childrens' meals being subsidized. I would like to emphasize over and over again that the subsidy is to continue the school lunch program. It has nothing to do with the paying child. The Congress decided that in order to keep the national school lunch program going, we must subsidize to a certain degree. If we do not, what happened in 1981 and 1982 will happen again.

In my district alone, to give an example, there are two school districts within 30 miles of each other that we are cutting. As we cut the paying customer, it had no impact whatsoever because one was a very affluent school district, they dropped out of the national school lunch program. They did not have to worry; they did not have that many people to serve. In the second district 30 miles away, 1,300 youngsters were receiving free and reduced-price meals. This district dropped out of the program; they do not have to worry further about those 1,300 youngsters. Why do they not have to worry about those 1,300 youngsters? Because free and reduced-price eligible youngsters have to be served if the school participates in the national school lunch program.

Three States have a requirement for this, but in the others, that is not so. So you just toss them by the wayside.

This is an administration that talks about a safety net. You need that safety net, and you get that safety net by subsidizing all school lunches.

There is one other area where there is an increase. There is an increase in relation to participation by private and parochial schools in the program. This is an administration that believes in tuition tax credits. This is an administration that believes firmly in vouchers. So I would think that it would also be an administration that believes that we certainly should do the same then for the private and parochial schools, when it comes to nutrition, as we do for the public schools.

In order to summarize, I want to again repeat that we are only reauthorizing five programs, not the many that we heard discussed. We are not adding any new entitlement programs. We are not adding a great deal of money to any entitlement program. The only one that gets much of anything is the school breakfast program.

So again let me say that we have brought to the Members a piece of legislation that ought to be passed overwhelmingly. I think there were 77 votes against it last year. We have reduced it from $370 million to $121 million. Many of the amendments we will hear about are amendments that I gave to the Budget Committees in the House and the Senate, and we said that if we are seriously going to freeze every area of the budget, there are ways we might do it without hurting the programs too seriously. But we decided we are not going to freeze the whole budget. So if we are going to have cuts, let us also have fairness.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON].

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 7.

I strongly believe that the child nutrition school lunch programs have played, and will continue to play, an important role in serving ill-fed youngsters in America. As we talk about the fiscal and budgetary impact, it is important that we remember that we are speaking of children, children in this country, the richest country on the face of this Earth, and a country with the ability to feed millions of starving children and people in other countries. What we are asking the Congress to do here is to do the very minimal amount to see that American children have a halfway decent share and an even shot in this country.

As a result of cuts in the past, almost 700,000 children were taken off the reduced and subsidized free lunches. In the WIC Program, you cannot go to a hospital in this country without a clear demonstration of the cost-saving impact of providing nutritional assistance to pregnant mothers.

In the medical center at Farmington—the Dempsey Center—I spoke to doctors, and as I said to my colleague just recently on the floor, a cost savings of $60,000 to $70,000 per child is seen when a child is born at full weight and full term, as compared to a child who comes prematurely and of low birth weight.

The debate here on the fiscal and budgetary impact is an important one, but there is also an important role that we, as Members of Congress, face in seeing that we help the next generation of Americans come into our society with somewhat of an equal opportunity. Children who go to school and do not have adequate nutrition do not learn. Children who go to school with an inadequate diet end up at the bottom of society, at the bottom of the job market. Unless we wish to stratify the society further, unless we wish to forget our responsibility in the Congress to the people of this country, we need to understand the importance of passing this piece of legislation as it comes to us from the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee chairman for yielding me this time, and I urge support of H.R. 7.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the committee for giving me this opportunity to speak. I commend the gentleman and his committee for the type of work they have done in the past and continue to do. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this particular measure. My remarks, I think, may be a little different from others. I think they sound on a few points that must be made.

Forty percent of the poorest families in America receive but 15 percent of all our income in America, whereas the top 20 percent of all the families in this country enjoy and share 43 percent of all our wealth and income. As we can see, the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. There is a particular dynamics occurring in America that is much more dangerous than any missile, and that is the social status of people and the income variations that exist between those rich and those poor.

In that regard, we are now talking about a program that deals with nutrition. To echo the words of the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. CHRIS PERKINS, who was out here earlier, and the statement he made, which was excellent, 1981 set us far back. Now, in 1985, in the land of America, we are talking about hunger and children who do not have adequate nutrition. This is ridiculous. We have an opportunity here to restore funds to programs that are not only cost-effective but that have a far-reaching effect on America and the health of our children.

Since the cuts in 1981, the number of poor children has risen 33 percent. There are 3.3 million more children in America than there were 6 short years ago. So what we are deliberating here is an issue of great importance. Unfortunately, the House is not filled as it should be, but these are the issues that have a tremendous bearing on our country. That is why I am so proud to be a sponsor of the measure.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to close and say that I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. CHRIS PERKINS, when he says that it is literally a disgrace that we should even be discussing hunger for the children of America.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of passage of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985. I commend the distinguished members of the Education and Labor Committee, and their chairman, MR. HAWKINS, for their work on this urgent measure. Their hearings on this important bill were comprised of difficult decisions, with demands for budget cuts being weighed against the compelling need to restore and maintain the Federal child nutrition programs.

The bill before us today provides a much leaner budget than the bill passed overwhelmingly by the House last year. Nonetheless, I believe the modest increase is indispensable, as it preserves essential programs which provide primarily for one group of beneficiaries, specifically, children in poverty.

I will not continue to take the time of my colleagues with my own words, Mr. Chairman, but I do wish to share with the Members of this body, the words of one of my constituents, Lorraine Escobar, of Milpitas, CA.

With simple eloquence, Ms. Escobar offers us a sagacity from which I hope we can all benefit. I urge my colleagues to read what she was written. It is a straightforward and sensible message.

The letter follows:

JUNE 6, 1985.

Congressman DON EDWARDS,
House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN EDWARDS: The proposed budget cuts in the federally-funded nutrition programs, and others like it, scare me. These cuts could put a devastating end to the hopes of a better life for many single-parent families.

How can an underpaid single working mother manage to survive the high cost of rent and daycare without some assistance? How can she even dream of security for her family if she has to go hungry so that her children can eat? How can she teach the valuable lesson of self-sufficiency if the high cost of daycare forces her to rely on welfare?

These federally-funded programs are a helping hand, not a handout. I know; I was helped myself. When I became a single parent, the only thing that stood between me and welfare was the subsidized child care program and the nutrition program. These programs afforded me the opportunity to earn my living and develop my job skills to the point where I will soon be able to completely support myself.

My children have witnessed my progress and now have a mother of whom they can be proud. Thanks to these programs, coupled with my desire to better myself, I know my children will be self-sufficient in their own adulthood having had my example to follow. Such a small investment that helps women like myself can pay such large dividends—children who become responsible and self-sufficient adults.

These cutbacks will result in a much larger far-range devastation than this society will be able to handle. Please, don't let this happen, rather, think, think of what tomorrow will bring.

Sincerely,

LORRAINE ESCOBAR.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, last September President Reagan made a statement that all of us considering this legislation today should consider. The President said "If even one American child is forced to go to bed hungry at night, or if one senior citizen is denied the dignity of proper nutrition, that is a national tragedy."

I strongly agree with that sentiment and that is why I strongly support the passage of H.R. 7 as reported by the Education and Labor Committee, on which I am privileged to serve. Despite some of the statements that have been made around town, this legislation does not "bust the budget." The budget recently adopted by the Congress assumes the levels of funding contained in H.R. 7.

This legislation provides for a modest increase in the Child Nutrition Programs, an increase justified by the severity of the hunger problem now experienced by many Americans. In fact the hunger problem is more serious now than at any time in the last 10 to 15 years.

The bill before us today would allow for a small increase in the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children [WIC] so that this program could reach an additional 120,000 persons. Currently WIC serves only one-third of those eligible for this program, despite the fact that a number of studies have shown that WIC is a cost-effective program that saves $2 to $3 in medical costs for every dollar spent in nutritional supplements.

H.R. 7 also provides for a small increase in the school breakfast program to improve the nutritional quality of the breakfasts served to the 3 billion low-income children who participate in this program. Hungry children don't learn. And that's why I believe it would be pennywise and pound foolish to make any further cuts in these important child nutrition programs which have already lost $5.2 billion due to budget cuts between 1982 and 1985.

H.R. 7 also contains a provision which I authored that restores $1 million in funding for the Food Service Equipment Program in fiscal year 1986 and such sums as are necessary in fiscal year 1987 and fiscal year 1988. This program which existed in one form or another since the inception of the Federal School Lunch Program was eliminated by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act.

H.R. 7 would once again authorize the provision of small grants to private, parochial, and public schools to help them replace, install, or upgrade the equipment they need to prepare, store, or serve meals in the Federal School Lunch Program.

This small program had served a real need in maintaining the infrastructure of the School Lunch Program, particularly for hard pressed private and parochial schools and rural public schools which serve large numbers of low income children. Such schools are often hard pressed to meet teacher salaries, and faced with replacing a $3,000 refrigerator or a stove, many have had to drop out of the School Lunch Program or switch to more expensive vendor prepared meals.

The Secretary of Education would determine eligibility and priorities for these grants after consulting with the states and the regional offices of the Food and Nutrition Service. Maintaining the infrastructure of the School Lunch Program is a reasonable and cost-effective program, which is why this provision is supported by the coalition of 70 groups who are working to ensure the passage of H.R. 7, and by the Agudath Israel of American, COJO, the Jewish Board of Education of Greater New York, the U.S. Catholic Conference, and the New York City Board of Education.

Because of the importance of the child nutrition programs contained in H.R. 7, I hope that my colleagues will support the bill as reported by the committee and reject all amendments. These programs help to preserve the health and well being of our Nation's children who, after all, are our Nation's hope and future. I urge the timely passage of H.R. 7 and commend the chairman, Mr. HAWKINS for his tremendous effort to provide for the nutritional needs of our Nation's children.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, when this body last year passed the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Act by a vote of 343 to 72, it was clear to all that we in the House of Representatives recognized the value and successfulness of the individual programs.

Today, we have before us again, the same bill, H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Act and, in the interim nothing has changed concerning the value and success of the program.

The House Committee on Education and Labor, however, has made one major revision—in the area of costs.

The 1984 version of the bill would have extended the five individual programs in this package through fiscal year 1988 with additional spending in the amount of $370 million. The new version, the 1985 bill, shows that we in the House are very much aware of the need for holding the budget line, especially in the light of the huge deficits we have incurred since the current administration took hold of the Government's reins.

The 1985 version of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Act provides for a modest expansion of the program with an additional $121 million, an amount that has already been included in the budget resolution adopted by both Houses of Congress.

Some might think that even this modest increase is too much in light of the budget deficit, but we must keep in mind the unfair burden borne by these programs during the past several years.

In 1981, we reduced funding for these School Lunch and Child Nutrition Programs by $1.5 billion, 4 percent of the total cuts enacted by the Budget Reconciliation Act of that year. In fact, according to the Congressional Budget Office, the cumulative effect of cuts in these programs between fiscal years 1982 and 1985 has been $5.2 billion.

But the dollars only tell a part of the study, the impact on people, especially children, is even more tragic, as a result of the program cuts in recent years, millions of schoolchildren have been dropped and one-third of these children were from low-income families.

Even the Department of Agriculture has found it to be nutritionally important to children. For many of the poorest, it is the only nutritional meal they will have in a day and, without that, these children have an even more difficult time in school. Let's face it, if your stomach is empty, how can you worry about a long division problem or whether a poem has some meaning for you?

Studies have shown the effectiveness of the WIC Program in terms of preventive intervention. For every dollar invested in WIC, we save $3 in later medical costs. Yet, only half of the eligible WIC population is currently being assisted.

Several years ago, we made a commitment. We, as a nation, committed ourselves to helping those who, because of circumstances beyond their control, were unable to help themselves.

In this bill, H.R. 7, we are honoring that commitment as well as our intent to keep Federal spending within acceptable limits.

We must ask ourselves whether the poor who cannot help themselves should be asked to bear an unfair burden in our efforts to reduce the Federal budget deficit.

This bill brings both elements into line and I urge its passage.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, it will not be possible for me to be present on the vote on the extension of our nutrition programs in H.R. 7. If I could have been present I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985. This legislation extends and improves five expiring child nutrition programs: The Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children [WIC] program, the Summer Food Service Program, the Commodity Distribution Program, nutrition education and training, and State administrative expenses. I strongly support all of these programs because I firmly believe that they are vital for the well-being of our Nation.

I would like, in particular, to stress one of the programs which is dear to my heart based upon my experiences in my district. I have reference to the Summer Food Service Program. I believe that it is highly important that during the summer period when our Nation's children, and in particular our Nation's impoverished young people cannot count on regular sustenance, that the Summer Food Service Program is available as a source of enrichment and stimulation.

I can recall visiting a site in my district where young people were involved this summer in summer feeding programs. It was encouraging to me to see that taxpayers' dollars were being made available to these young people as a means of giving them a fair shake in life.

I was also impressed that in addition to the food that was made available, a program of instruction was also provided.

Mr. Chairman, I thought as I left the site what might have happened to these poor children in terms of nutritional food and snacks from this summer food service had it not been in place. I am convinced that it is an effective and beneficial program and in our national interest and should be sustained.

Another program which I would like to talk about briefly is the WIC Program. This program has been cited by many as "the most cost-effective program in existence." It has also been reported that for every $1 invested in this program, $3 is saved in terms of medical costs. Further, reports show that approximately 35 to 50 percent of the eligible WIC population is not served because funds are not available. This is a shame especially for a program which has demonstrated its successes over and over again. In my own State of Missouri, there was a study conducted with 6,560 prenatal participants active in the WIC Program during 1980 matched with their offsprings' birth certificates and has been cited by GAO as one of the best studies in the Nation. The finding was that "for the participants, the low birthweight rates were less than one-half of the rates comparable for non-WIC mothers." My colleagues, this is of particular significance since low birthweight is a major determinant of infant mortality in our country.

Mr. Chairman, I could cite many examples of successful nutrition programs in my district. The point is that we should have as one of our Nation's No. 1 priorities—the feeding of our hungry children.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this very vital and essential legislation without amendments.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support on H.R. 7, School Lunch and Nutrition Amendments of 1985. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of H.R. 7 which would extend and improve through fiscal year 1988 five expiring and vital lunch and child nutrition programs. Among the programs to be extended are:

The WIC Program;

The Summer Food Service Program for children;

A commodity distribution funding authority;

The assistance for State administrative expense of these programs; and

The Nutrition Education and Training Program.

These programs, without the passage of this legislation, would expire at the end of this month.

The School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985 also target new funding of a modest $121 million for fiscal year 1986 for limited expansion of these cost-effective programs. Under this legislation the WIC Program would be authorized to increase by 120,000 the number of beneficiaries through the infusion of an additional $60 million in resources. The School Breakfast Program would be nutritionally enhanced by the addition of 6 cents to the Federal contribution to each meal served under this program.

This would be accomplished by the addition of $42 million to the School Breakfast Program to correct those nutritional deficiencies which have been documented in the program by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

With the passage of the school lunch and child nutrition amendments, milk would be made available to children in our Nation's kindergartens. This initiative would be undertaken at a cost of $15 million. An authorization of $1 million would be granted for the purchase of food equipment. The tuition limitation would be raised to permit moderately priced private schools, schools with tuition levels of $2,500 or under, to continue their participation in the various school feeding programs. This provision's estimated cost is $3 million.

Mr. Chairman, these programs and the improvements embodied in this authorizing legislation are in our national interest and are required if our Nation is to maintain a minimal and civilized level of food security for our children.

As the committee report accompanying H.R. 7 points out, a physician's task force from the Harvard University School of Public Health issued a report his year entitled "Hunger in America, the Growing Epidemic," which concluded that the scourge of hunger in the United States is, in 1985, more serious and affects more of our citizens than any time in the last 10 to 15 years. The report went on to assert that this situation of expanding hunger among our citizenry was, "primarily due to governmental failure." In making this statement, the report cited the impact of $5.2 billion in cuts in these child nutrition programs that were enacted in 1981. As a result of these 1981 budget cuts associated with the Reagan-Gramm-Latta budget there was a loss of 3 million children from participating in the School Lunch Program, 1 million of them from low-income families. With these cuts 2,700 schools were forced to drop out of the School Lunch Program. With these cuts 400,000 children and 800 schools ceased their involvement in the School Breakfast Program.

Tragically, these reductions came at the very time that the American and world economies were undergoing a dislocating transition, increasing unemployment and the impoverisation of all too many of our Nation's children. Today, according to the Bureau of the Census, there are 1 million more children who meet the criteria for free and reduced-price meals than there were when the cuts were enacted in 1981.

In the District of Columbia these programs are meeting a significant and compelling need. The School Breakfast Program provided through the DC Public School serves 13,200 children daily. Ninety-seven percent of those served are children from low-income families. The School Lunch Program serves 46,450 students and 38,700 of these students come from low-income families.

The WIC Program in the District of Columbia served a total of 18,949 clients for fiscal year 1984; the breakdown is as follows: 5,225 women; 6,832 infants; and 6,892 children.

The projected number of clients to be served at the completion of fiscal year 1985 is a total of 18,348; the breakdown is as follows: 5,127 women; 7,010 infants; and 6,211 children.

If we care about our children, if we are true to the ideals we espouse, if we are rational in our understanding of the nutritional, medical, social, and economic benefits that will accrue from this very modest authorization, this legislation should and will have overwhelming support. I urge my colleagues to pass H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Act. While this program reauthorizes five expiring child nutrition programs, I would like to focus here on one of these—the WIC Program. In my home State of New Mexico we have over 63,000 individuals eligible for the WIC Program—of these 63,000 eligible participants less than one-third are currently receiving the help they need. The need for the WIC Program clearly exists. We need to not only keep this program alive—but also to expand it as much as possible within our fiscal constraints.

The bipartisan support for this bill is evident. H.R. 7's funding levels have been approved in the House/Senate budget resolution. I believe that it is significant that the conferees, even with their deep concern over the deficit, felt that this program should not only be continued at current levels, but should also receive a modest increase in funding. WIC is acclaimed as one of the Federal Government's most successful programs. For every dollar we invest in this program we get three back. Not only is this program a wise investment in our childrens future, but it also saves a great deal of money. The average cost for a hospital stay of an infant suffering from low birth weight is $60,000 the average cost of WIC is $400 per year. WIC helps to prevent low birth weight and neonatal problems requiring hospitalization.

I would like to strongly urge all of my colleagues to support the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985—these programs have clearly shown that they deserve our support as investments in our childrens future. This is what President John F. Kennedy had to say on the issue over 20 years ago:

The prevention of future adult poverty and dependency must begin with the care of dependent children—those who must receive public welfare by virtue of a parent's death, disability, desertion or unemployment. Our society not only refuses to leave such children hungry, cold, and devoid of opportunity—we are insistent that such children not be community liabilities throughout their lives. Yet children who grow up in deprivation, with adequate protection, may be poorly equipped to meet adult responsibilities.

The School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1985 address this societal obligation—a small amount of money spent now helps to solve future problems and to prevent a need for larger future expenditures.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 7, a bill to extend and improve the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Act.

The programs extended by this bill—summer feeding, commodity distribution, nutrition education, the funding of State administrative expenses, and the Women, Infants, and Children [WIC] Supplemental Funding Program—are essential components in our national efforts to combat hunger. In addition to extending authority for these programs, H.R. 7 would restore approximately 10 percent of funding cuts sustained by the Special Milk Program, Private School Eligibility and the Food Equipment Aid Program under the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981.

Most importantly, this bill makes substantial improvements to the WIC Program. At present, there are 2.8 million low-income women, children, and infants participating in this program and receiving a package of highly nutritious food supplements each month. WIC has been successful in improving the health and nutritional status of low-income pregnant women and children determined by the medical profession to be at nutritional risk. Various studies have shown that the WIC Program reduces the incidence of low birth weight by 16 to 20 percent. This is extremely important because low birth weight is the leading cause of infant mortality and is also associated with other serious child health problems. In the black community, conditions are especially bleak for infants. The infant mortality rate for black infants has consistently been much higher than for white infants. It is now at twice the rate and the gap is widening. These tragedies are preventable.

Mr. Chairman, the School Lunch Program has proven to make a substantial difference to children, both nutritionally and educationally. It is a well-known fact that children are less able to participate at their peak if they are hungry. The cuts that Congress made in 1981, coupled with the administrations cutbacks and alterations of the child nutrition programs since then, have had a very negative effect on low-income children who are most at risk in our educational system. This bill affirms congressional commitment to child nutrition by eliminating many of WIC's uncertainties over funding.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BARTLETT

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTLETT: Page 3, strike out line 17 and all that follows through line 10 on page 4.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a rather simple amendment. It would delete a new program which was added by the committee entitled "Food Service Equipment Assistance."

Before I explain the specifics of the amendment, I want to take a few minutes to talk again about the entitlements in the bill and to place this amendment in its context. First, I have a great deal of respect for the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Secondary and Elementary Schools, the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He understands the school lunch program as no other Member of the House does. He has a great deal of knowledge, and he and I have worked together on many of these programs in committee. In fact, I commend the gentleman because he was right on many of these amendments which he either offered or supported, both in the Budget Committee and in the Committee on Education and Labor, and also on the subcommittee and privately. I do hope that he will be able to support some of these amendments on the floor today.

I want to clear up a few concepts and go to the heart of the bill. First, let me point out the total cost of the programs.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that the House remember that on all of these programs, if you ask USDA, as I did, what the total cost of all the programs is that are covered by H.R. 7, they would tell you that those programs would cost $5.5 billion in fiscal year 1985 and are increasing approximately 6 to 7 percent a year compounded until by 1990; if we make no changes, they would be up to $7.5 billion.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the Department also told the world that catsup is a vegetable.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's attempt to do less than to clarify the issue at hand.

The total cost of these programs, if we do nothing at all today, will rise by 36 percent. It is true that the school lunch program is not up for reauthorization today because it is never up for reauthorization. It is a permanently authorized program, and this is our only day to discuss it and to attempt really for the first time, or this is one of the few times in this body's history, to attempt to control the out-year entitlement program expenditures, of which this is one.

Mr. Chairman, this specific amendment is an amendment to delete the food service equipment, which was an add-on amendment in the committee, and add-on amendment to cost $1 million in the first year.

□ 1540

After that, it was authorized that such sums that it reinstates in fact a program that had been deleted in prior years. It is an old program that is being resurrected.

It seems to me that in these days of scarcer resources we should not be adding on new programs, particularly programs that go for equipment instead of food.

Now, this is the first amendment in a series, Mr. Chairman, and I would point out the consequences of all these amendments. This one is only $1 million, but the consequences of adopting this amendment, the next one and the ones after that, would be to reduce the total expenditures of these programs by $474 million the first year up to $931 million, or right at $1 billion annually by the 5th year, for the first time to attain some control and limitation over the rate of increases of the entitlement programs.

Mr. Chairman, everyone likes to talk about the deficit. It is some $200 billion this year. It has extraordinarily negative consequences, primarily on low-income families that these programs would serve. The deficits at these levels adding to inflation, to the next recession, to unemployment, to trade deficits, to a lack of ability to buy homes and higher interest rates, in fact hurts poor Americans far more than anyone else. It is concern for those low-income Americans that brings me to the House floor.

Now, we talk about the deficit in many different ways. Half the 1-minute speeches every day on both sides of the aisle are about the horrors of the deficit. We have special orders about a balanced budget amendment or a line-item veto and we talk about it in our town halls. I would suggest that every Member who went home for the recess heard about it and talked about it and said that he or she was against it in their town halls.

Yesterday the Southern Governors Association said that in the aggregate they wanted a budget next year that was balanced in 1 year, that Congress should reduce spending by that amount. But talk is cheap, Mr. Chairman. Today we find out, as we know, that this is the only way to reduce the deficit.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me again place this amendment in such focus, as the gentleman from Texas has been saying. This amendment actually seeks to do what was rather strangely said by his chart. It seems rather strange the gentleman speaks of equipment as being separate from the preparation of food in a school lunch program. I do not see how you can separate the two, because without equipment, how are you going to prepare the food? So there is not that distinction, it seems to me, that can be made.

I would like to refer to the U.S. Department of Agriculture study on this very item and one of the reasons why we adopted that as a result of the Department of Agriculture study. They indicated that most school kitchens in this country were found to be deficient.

Secondly, they indicated that kitchens in rural communities, those that are serving elementary school children and those built prior to 1954 were especially deficient in food service equipment.

Third, they indicated that it appears that poor equipment does affect meal production.

Fourth, across all kitchens, they said, it is estimated that the total cost of removing the deficiencies in equipment in school kitchens would approximate $379.5 million.

Now, instead of taking literally the deficiencies that they recommended needed correction, we added only $1 million, not the $379.5 million which they indicated.

This bill, therefore, I say is a very modest one and it seems rather peculiar to me that a gentleman who supports adding $10 billion in defiance of the budget resolution has no argument to oppose the addition of $1 million in a simple manner to this particular proposal, which is in compliance with the budget resolution.

There is, therefore, it seems to me, a grave inconsistency and I think the amendment should be rejected.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I simply rise so that everyone can focus on this issue from a different perspective. I must tell you that in terms of the magnitude of the whole bill, this is not a significant amendment on one side or the other. It is not going to make any dent, frankly, on the national debt or anything like that and we should not look at it from that perspective.

The only point I would suggest which would bring merit to this issue is that in 1981 when we were forced to prioritize our money in our child nutrition programs, we deleted money for food service equipment, saying that if we have a limited amount of money, let us spend that money on food for children.

This would change that, not too greatly, no, not at all. It is going to be a very small degree. If you look at the five areas where we have increased funding in H.R. 7, I support them. The WIC Program, if there is anyone who objects to the increase in the WIC Program, I would be more happy to discuss the merits of that.

The school breakfast issue was adequately explained by our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I hopefully tried to explain the School Milk Program.

The tuition limitation for private schools is again an effort to try to make the school nutrition programs more accessible to children who happen to be attending private schools.

So out of the five areas, there is only one where we are spending money for equipment rather than food or nutrition for young people.

I must add that the way the program is set up is that it is only in competitive grants. I have to tell you, and our late distinguished chairman of the committee, the Honorable CARL PERKINS, who so adequately represented the schools of rural America, I have no illusions that any school in my district or any school in Mr. PERKINS' district, our present Mr. PERKINS, would have any chance of getting of this money, this $1 million. It is a competitive grant. You know and I know who is going to compete for it.

I guess what you have got to ask yourself is should this $1 million be spent here, and frankly, if we are going to spend it, is there not a better place to spend it?

I just share those thoughts with you.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

It does appear to me that the gentleman has hit the nail on the head on several counts.

First, it is not a large amount of money, $1 million in the first year. I would note, however, it moves to such sums after that.

Second, it is a competitive bid kind of process and consequently it is not a situation where all school districts are going to benefit equitably from this kind of a program.

Third, we did not leave the school districts without any way to maintain their equipment or improve their equipment in 1981 when we concluded that it was best to spend money for food. At that time we said that they would be able to use reimbursements to maintain, replace or upgrade food service equipment, and that is not changed in this law; so there are a variety of reasons I think why it does not make good sense now, when we do have to make prioritization decisions, to decide to move back into the area of using school lunch money for the purchase of equipment. We ought to continue to focus attention on the providing of food to individuals. I believe that the gentleman stated that very well, so I join with him in support of this amendment.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise to speak in opposition to the amendment.

I have here a cellophane packet that contains six items that have been documented to have been purchased for defense purposes at a cost—and I want you to pay attention to this—for $21,528.

There is an allen wrench in here about 2½ inches long that was purchased for $9,606. Our cost if we had purchased it out in the open market in the free enterprise system would be 13 cents.

There is an antenna motor pin, and that sounds tremendous, for $7,417. It is a little copper wire about hair thin, about 2 inches long. That is known as an antenna motor pin for $7,417.

There is a nut in here that cost $2,043, a bolt at $1,075, a flat washer, you can see it in there, about a half inch in diameter, that cost $387. On the open market it cost a penny.

The last item is called the external screw. That was purchased by our military for $1,000. The open market cost again is one penny.

So I just want to make this comment in general. It is pretty hard to prepare food without equipment; but finally, it seems that every time we get to the issues that deal with entitlement programs, everybody is coming out with breaking and busting the Treasury and adding to the national debt.

Well, when I came here I took a very firm look at the budget deficit and the problems we face. I took a look at the $21,000 worth of external screws. I tried to do something about it, but I did not hear one person stand up and talk about busting the bank in that area.

So I would just like to say that there are many amendments coming forward here under the guise of saving good old Uncle Sam's pocketbook that are not necessarily so. I think we should put our priorities in order and I think this is about the priority that America has been dealing with, and it is really a shame.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT), there were—ayes 8, noes 12.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently, a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Frenzel for, with Mr. Brooks against.

Mr. EVANS of Iowa changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to address the Members of the Committee and explain the present situation and the plan for the rest of the afternoon.

This gentleman has been approached by a great number of Members who have made commitments and who have reservations. Unfortunately, we did have a late start. I have consulted with Mr. BARTLETT and the ranking Members on the other side and on the Committee, and they have no objection to concluding today's consideration of the bill at this point.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having assumed the chair, Mr. SLATTERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7) to extend and improve the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, had come to no resolution thereon.

APPOINTMENT AS ADDITIONAL MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION ON THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES BICENTENARY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 3 of House Resolution 249, 99th Congress, the Chair appoints as additional members of the Commission on the U.S. House of Representatives Bicentenary, the following Members of the House:

Mr. RODINO of New Jersey; and

Mr. SHARP of Indiana.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time so that we can inquire as to the schedule for the balance of the day and the week, and I ask the distinguished majority whip the program for next week.

I would be glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. FOLEY. If the distinguished Republican whip will yield to me, Mr. Speaker, this concludes the business for the day and the week, and we will be in a pro forma session tomorrow.

On Monday, the House will not be in session because of Rosh Hashana. On Tuesday, the House will meet at noon and consider four bills under suspension of the rules; H.R. 2032, the Government Securities Act of 1985, House Concurrent Resolution 185, commending the organizers of the farm aid concert, H.R. 148, the Michigan Wilderness bill, and H.R. 2385, the Federal Trade Commission reauthorization.

Any recorded votes ordered on Tuesday will be postponed until Wednesday, September 18.

Also on Tuesday will be H.R. 2266, the Amtrak Reauthorization Act for fiscal year 1986. General debate only; the rule has already been adopted.

On Wednesday and the balance of the week, the House will meet at 11 a.m. on Wednesday and Thursday, and 10 a.m. on Friday. We will consider on Wednesday recorded votes ordered on suspensions debated on Tuesday, September 17. Also, H.R. 3128, the deficit reduction amendments, subject to a rule being granted. An unnumbered House bill for continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1986, subject to a rule being granted. The continuation of H.R. 7, the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Acts, and H.R. 2266, the Amtrak Reauthorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986, the complete consideration. And possibly take up H.R. 2100, the 1985 farm bill. This is subject, of course, to the usual reservation that conference reports may be brought up at any time and a further program may be announced later.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman for that information. I would like to ask him a few questions.

First of all, the school lunch bill that was just being considered by the House would be back up on Wednesday?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes, Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. LOTT. The House will not be in session on Monday, and there will be no recorded votes on Tuesday.

Mr. FOLEY. That is correct. With the usual reservation that those are legislative votes; that procedural votes might be possible but are not expected on Tuesday.

Mr. LOTT. Then suspension votes, if any are ordered, would go over to Wednesday?

Mr. FOLEY. Wednesday, September 18.

Mr. LOTT. I noted that the DOD conference report is not on the schedule for next week, and I had been under the impression, along with others, that that conference report would be brought to the floor next week.

Mr. FOLEY. Well, as I said, conference reports may be brought up at any time and it is possible that the Department of Defense conference report may come up next week. We have not yet made that determination so it has not been scheduled.

Mr. LOTT. All right, sir.

Mr. FOLEY. We do expect it to come up in the near future.

Mr. LOTT. Can the Members expect to be out by 3 o'clock next Friday?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes. We intend to conclude by 3 o'clock on Friday.

Mr. LOTT. There have also been a number of questions about the following week. The information that we have distributed to our Members indicated that we will have votes on Monday, the 23d. Can the distinguished whip reaffirm or confirm that that is still the plan of the leadership?

Mr. FOLEY. I can certainly say that it is still the plan for the House to meet with votes on Monday, the 23d of September, and to then resume legislative business on Thursday, the 26th of September. On Tuesday and Wednesday, we are recognizing the high holy days, and there will not be votes on those days; and on Friday we do not expect session or votes.

I might tell the gentleman that the current time, obviously subject to changes being announced later, H.R. 2100, the 1985 farm bill, may be brought up on Friday, the 20th of September, for a rule and general debate, and amendments to the bill may be considered on Monday the 23d and then again on Thursday the 26th.

So unless changes are announced, Members would have to assume that the most likely legislation for these 2 days of Monday and Thursday the following week will be votes on amendments to the 1985 farm bill.

Mr. LOTT. I think that is very important information for the membership. I know if there are going to be recorded votes on amendments to the farm bill anticipated on Monday the 23d, that the Members would want to plan to be here for sure on that date. The gentleman is talking about just the rule and general debate on Friday next on the farm bill, with the amendments coming the next week; is that correct?

Mr. FOLEY. That is the current estimate; yes.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman.

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 444) to amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, with a Senate amendment to the House amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the House of Representatives, insert:

SECTION 1. The Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688, 43 U.S.C. 1601-28), as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections.

"SEC. 34. (a) For purposes of this section the following terms shall have the following meanings:

"(1) the term 'The Agreement' or 'Agreement' means the agreement entitled 'Terms and Conditions Governing Legislative Land Consolidation and Exchange between NANA Regional Corporation, Inc., and the United States' executed by the Secretary of the Interior and the President of NANA Regional Corporation, Inc., on January 31 and January 24, 1985, respectively.

"(2) the term 'transportation system' means the Red Dog Mine Transportation System described in Exhibit B of the Agreement.

"(3) the term 'NANA' means NANA Regional Corporation, Inc., a corporation formed for the Natives of Northwest Alaska pursuant to the provisions of this Act.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided by this section, the Secretary shall convey to NANA, in accordance with the terms and conditions set forth in the Agreement, lands and interests in lands specified in the Agreement in exchange for lands and interests in lands of NANA, specified in the Agreement, upon fulfillment by NANA of its obligations under the Agreement, provided, however, that this modified exchange is accepted by NANA within 60 days of enactment.

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall convey to NANA, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph A(1) of the Agreement, the right, title and interest of the United States only in and to those lands designated as 'Amended A(1) Lands' on the map entitled 'Modified Cape Krusenstern Land Exchange,' dated July 18, 1985. The charges to be made pursuant to paragraphs B(1) and D(27) of the Agreement against NANA's land entitlements under this Act shall be reduced by an amount equivalent to the difference between that acreage conveyed pursuant to this subsection and the acreage that would have been conveyed to NANA pursuant to paragraph A(1) of the Agreement but for this subsection.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph A(3) of the Agreement, the Secretary shall not convey to NANA any right, title and interest of the United States in the lands described in such paragraph A(3) and the Secretary shall make no charge to NANA's remaining entitlements under this Act with respect to such lands. Such lands shall be retained in Federal ownership but shall be subject to the easement described in Exhibit D to the Agreement as if the lands had been conveyed to NANA pursuant to paragraph A(3) of the Agreement.

"(d)(1) There is hereby granted to NANA an easement in and to the lands designated as 'Transportation System Lands' on the Map entitled 'Modified Cape Krusenstern Land Exchange,' dated July 18, 1985, for use in the construction, operation, maintenance, expansion and reclamation of the transportation system. Use of the easement for such purposes shall be subject only to the terms and conditions governing the construction, operation, maintenance, expansion and reclamation of the transportation system, as set forth in Exhibit D to the Agreement.

"(2) The easement granted pursuant to this section shall be for a term of 100 years. The easement shall terminate prior to the 100-year term:

"(i) if it is relinquished to the United States; or

"(ii) if construction of the transportation system has not commenced within 20 years of the enactment of this subsection. Computation of the 20-year period shall exclude periods when construction could not commence because of force majeure, act of God or order of a court; or

"(iii) upon completion of reclamation pursuant to the reclamation plan required by Exhibit B to the Agreement.

"(3) Within 90 days after enactment of this section the Secretary shall execute the necessary documents evidencing the grant to NANA of the easement granted by this section.

"(4) Except as regards the trail easement described in Exhibit D to the Agreement (to which the 'Transportation System Lands' shall be subject as if such lands had been conveyed to NANA pursuant to paragraph (1) of the Agreement), access to the lands subject to the easement granted by this section shall be subject to such limitations, restrictions or conditions as may be imposed by NANA, its successors and assigns, but NANA and its successors and assigns shall permit representatives of the Secretary such access as the Secretary determines is necessary for the monitoring required by this section.

"(e) The easement granted by this section makes available land for the transportation system, and is intended to be sufficient to permit NANA to comply with the laws of the State of Alaska which may be necessary to secure financing of the construction of the transportation system and the operation, maintenance or expansion thereof by the State of Alaska or by the Alaska Industrial Development Authority.

"(f) The easement granted to NANA by this section may be reconveyed by NANA, but after any such reconveyance the terms and conditions specified in Exhibit B of the Agreement shall continue to apply in full to the easement.

"(g) NANA is hereby granted the right to use, develop and sell sand, gravel and related construction materials from borrow sites located within the easement granted pursuant to this section as required for the construction, operation, maintenance, expansion and reclamation of the transportation system, subject to the terms and conditions specified in Exhibit B of the Agreement.

"(h)(1) The construction, operation, maintenance, expansion and reclamation of any portion of the transportation system on any of the lands subject to the easement granted to NANA by this section shall be governed solely by the terms and conditions of the Agreement, including the procedural and substantive provisions of Exhibit B to the Agreement, as if the lands covered by the easement granted to NANA by this section had been conveyed to NANA pursuant to Paragraph A(1) of the Agreement.

"(2) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the National Park Service, shall monitor the construction, operation, maintenance, expansion and reclamation of the transportation system, as provided in the Agreement. Any complaint by any person or entity that any aspect of the construction, operation, maintenance, expansion or reclamation of the portion of the transportation system on the lands subject to the easement granted to NANA by this section is not in accordance with the terms and conditions specified in the Agreement shall be made to the Secretary in writing. The Secretary shall review any such complaint and shall provide to NANA or it successors or assigns and to the complainant a decision in writing on the complaint within 90 days of receipt thereof. If the Secretary determines that the activity made the subject of a complaint is not in accordance with the terms specified in the Agreement, and NANA or its successors or assigns disagrees with that determination, the dispute shall be resolved according to the procedures established in Exhibit B to the Agreement.

"(i) The Secretary shall make available to NANA and its successors and assigns the right to use sand, gravel and related construction materials located in Sections 23, 24, 25, 26, 35 and 36 of Township 26 North, Range 24 West, Kateel River Meridian, Alaska, if the Secretary determines either (1) that use of such sand, gravel or related construction material is necessary because there is no other sand, gravel or related construction material reasonably available for the construction, operation, maintenance, expansion or reclamation of the transportation system; or (2) that use of such sand, gravel or related construction material is necessary in order to construct, operate, maintain, expand, or reclaim the transportation system in an environmentally sound manner, consistent with the requirements of Exhibit B of the Agreement. The right to use such sand, gravel and related construction material shall be subject to the terms and conditions of Paragraph A of Exhibit B of the Agreement and such other reasonable terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(j) Notwithstanding Paragraph D(23) of the Agreement, the Secretary shall not agree to any amendment to the Agreement without first consulting with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and shall transmit copies of the text of any amendment to the Agreement to those Committees at the time of his agreeing to any such amendment.

"SEC. 35. (a) The terms and conditions of this section are solely applicable to the lands described in paragraph A(1) of the Agreement, which is defined by section 34(a)(1) of this Act and modified by section 34, and shall not affect the relinquishment by NANA described in section B(1) of such Agreement.

"(b) NANA Regional Corporation, Inc. ('NANA'), may convey by quit-claim deed to the United States all of its interest in the surface and subsurface estate in any lands described in subsection (a) of this section, provided, however, NANA can relinquish only lands that are compact and contiguous to other public lands within the Krusenstern National Monument and, if the lands to be relinquished have been disturbed by NANA, the Secretary msuch first determine that such disturbance has not rendered the lands incompatible with Monument values. Whenever NANA executes a quit-claim deed pursuant to this section, it shall be entitled to designate and have conveyed to it any lands outside the boundaries of the Cape Krusenstern National Monument and any other conservation system unit, as established and defined by the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (Public Law 96-487; 94 Stat. 2371, et. seq.), covered by any of its pending selection applications filed under the entitlement provisions of either section 12(b), (12(c) or 14(h)(8) of the Act, as amended. Lands conveyed to NANA pursuant to this subsection shall be of a like estate and equal in acreage to that conveyed by NANA to the United States. The lands conveyed to NANA pursuant to this subsection shall be in exchange for the lands conveyed by NANA to the United States and there shall be no change in the charges previously made to NANA's land entitlements with respect to the lands conveyed by NANA to the United States. Lands received by NANA pursuant to this subsection are Settlement Act lands.

"(c) NANA may relinquish any interest it has under selection applications filed pursuant to this Act, as amended, in the surface and subsurface estate in lands described in subsection (a) of this section by formally withdrawing such application pursuant to this section, provided, however, NANA can relinquish only interests in lands that are compact and contiguous to other public lands within the Krusenstern National Monument and, if the lands have been disturbed by NANA, the Secretary must first determine that such disturbance has not rendered the lands incompatible with Monument values. Whenever NANA formally withdraws a selection application pursuant to this section, it shall be entitled to designate and have conveyed to it lands outside the boundaries of Cape Krusenstern National Monument and any other conservation system unit, as established and defined by the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (Public Law 96-487; 94 Stat. 2371, et. seq.) pursuant to any of its pending selection applications filed under either section 12(b), 12(c) or 14(h)(8) of this Act. Lands conveyed to NANA under this subsection shall be of a like estate and equal in acreage to the interest which NANA relinquished, and when the lands are conveyed to NANA, the conveyance shall be charged against the same entitlement of NANA as if the lands had been conveyed pursuant to the relinquished selection applications. Lands received by NANA pursuant to this subsection are Settlement Act lands.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect only until December 18, 1991.

"(e) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to alter or amend in any way NANA's selection rights or to increase or diminish NANA's total entitlement to lands pursuant to this Act.".

Mr. SEIBERLING (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment to the House amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] for the purpose of explaining the legislation.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill granting a right-of-way across the Cape Krusenstern National Monument in Alaska, to a regional corporation organized under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. The purpose of the right-of-way is to allow construction of a road connecting the so-called Red Dog mineral area to a port site on the Chukchi Sea.

In July, the House passed the bill, after amending it in a number of respects. One of the provisions in the House version would have given the Regional Native Corp. an incentive to trade out its inholdings not only in the Cape Krusenstern National Monument but also in other conservation areas in that part of Alaska.

The Senate has now returned the bill to us with that language modified so that it applies only to certain lands within the Cape Krusenstern unit. However, on balance, the Senate version is acceptable, in my opinion, and so I am proposing that we concur and thus clear the bill for the President.

My readiness to take this position is based on assurances that I have received that the Native Corp. is in fact committed to transferring those lands into Federal ownership and that nothing in the Senate version precludes the trading out of inholdings in other areas under the procedures of existing law. Reduction of inholdings remains an important priority, which we trust will be vigorously pursued with regard to all conservation system units throughout Alaska.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD at this point a letter from the NANA Regional Corp., Inc., regarding S. 444:

NANA REGIONAL CORP., INC.,
Kotzebue, AK, September 9, 1985.

Re S. 444.

Hon. JOHN SEIBERLING,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Public Lands of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SEIBERLING: You have requested, because of a Senate amendment to S. 444, as passed by the House of Representatives, additional information on NANA's intentions with respect to the lands that it would receive in the Cape Krusenstern National Monument pursuant to S. 444 and designated as "A-1" lands. NANA is committed to using the provisions of S. 444 to transfer ownership of those lands to the United States. However, final approval of the decision to transfer the lands must come from the people of the Village of Noatak, who initially made the determination as part of the proposed land exchange to accept the "A-1" lands in exchange for other selections they had made within the Monument.

We will take the issue to the people of Noatak to determine their choice in this matter as soon as we can convene a meeting this Fall, and NANA's management is prepared to recommend to the shareholders of Noatak that the "A-1" lands be transferred to the United States. In addition, management does not believe it will be a difficult problem to identify alternate lands that would be acceptable to the people of Noatak.

However, it is essential that the legislation be enacted prior to our meeting with the people of Noatak because of financing and development schedules that must be met if construction of the transportation system is to commence when planned.

NANA and its shareholders appreciate your efforts on their behalf.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. SCHAEFFER, Jr.,
President,
NANA Regional Corporation, Inc.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to compliment the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, and all the parties involved in this legislation. It has been a long road. I say that not with tongue in cheek. But we have accomplished something through the cooperation and the negotiation between the Federal Government, the Interior Department, the NANA Regional Corp. and the Congress itself. This is a landmark piece of legislation to implement part of the act that was passed in 1980 and 1971. Again I compliment the gentleman and urge the acceptance of the legislation.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, let me also add that I think the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] has played a very constructive role in this. There is not total unanimity on the part of all of the conservation organizations. Although they are divided, some support this solution and some do not. In my opinion, this is a fair solution which protects the Cape Krusenstern National Monument by removing major inholdings inside the monument, it protects the environment with adequate conditions in the legislation, and at the same time helps the North Alaskan Native Regional Corp. to start developing its economic resources, which is very important to the people in that organization. It is an outstanding Native association, with outstanding leadership, and I think they have been very cooperative with the Congress on conservation and other matters and, on the whole, this is an excellent resolution to a multiplicity of problems.

For that reason, I strongly support the bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just considered, and that I be allowed to include extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION REFORM, A TOP PRIORITY

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, we've spent much of the last several months arguing about the deficit, tax reform, Federal spending, and South Africa. But after spending a month in my home district in southern California, I am convinced that we must make immigration reform a top priority for the remainder of this legislative session.

In an editorial published August 29, the San Diego Union noted the great number of undocumented aliens living in hovels—actually eating and sleeping in holes in the ground—in San Diego County. This is becoming a major problem for public safety as well as public health in my district and throughout southern California.

The Border Patrol is unable to perform their function of protecting people because they are greatly undermanned. Our local jurisdictions are similarly unequipped to deal with this flood of people.

We need immigration reform, and we need it today—and we should be just as concerned about the rights and interests of our people as well as the agricultural interests that will be inevitably affected by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I include the San Diego Union's August 29 editorial in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the San Diego Union, Aug. 29, 1985]

TAKE NOTE, CONGRESS

There is nothing like personal experience to drive home a truth that might otherwise remain elusive. Accordingly, we have two suggestions for any member of Congress who doubts the urgent need for reform of this country's immigration laws:

First, spend one night with the Border Patrol along the sector of the San Ysidro port of entry.

Second, spend five minutes in any of the burrows—that's right, holes in the ground—that house an increasing number of undocumental aliens employed in agriculture here in San Diego County.

At the border, our visiting member of Congress would find a relative handful of Border Patrol agents trying desperately to stop the 1,000 or more aliens who attempt to enter the United States illegally in the San Ysidro sector on an average night. During a typical weekend, the figure may be 5,000.

The Border Patrol estimates that it apprehends at most half of those entering the United States illegally along this country's 1,800-mile border with Mexico. Most are Mexican nationals. But many are from the strife-ridden countries of Central America or even from such distant places as mainland China.

Odds are reasonably good that, if the congressman risked accompanying agents through the dark into the border canyons and ravines, he might glimpse something of the violence of an international frontier out of control. Perhaps he would witness one of the routine robberies and shootings by the border bandits who prey on aliens trying to cross into the United States. Or perhaps he might stumble in the dark over a rape victim, or an alien beaten and left for dead.

Exaggeration? Visit the border here and see for yourself, congressman.

And after you spend that harrowing night on the border, take in a few of the migrant camps that dot the agricultural areas of San Diego County. You will find some of the migrants living in hovels fashioned of cardboard and the thin plastic sheeting of trash bags. The less fortunate will be sheltering in holes burrowed into the earth. Border Patrol agents call them spider holes. Some are hardly bigger than graves, which is what they sometimes become when a candle consumes the oxygen or ignites clothing and cardboard.

Other hazards include cave-ins, suffocation, lice and other vermin, not to mention the demoralization that must sooner or later attend living as an animal in the ground.

Can it be that in the United States of American in 1985 some of the men and women and even children who help harvest this nation's agricultural abundance live in holes in the ground? It can be and it is, as our reporter Lisa Petrillo and photographer Bill Romero documented in last Monday's San Diego Union.

Now, more members of Congress must see all this for themselves. Immigration reform, including a proper guest-worker program, will remain only a dream unless Congress can at last be stirred to action. An adequate guest-worker program would legalize migrant labor and wipe away the shame of the spider holes and the exploitation they symbolize. That, and a greatly reinforced Border Patrol, could restore a semblance of order along a chaotic, dangerous border.

For two consecutive sessions, Congress has failed to pass the comprehensive immigration reform measure known as the Simpson-Mazzoli bill. A modified version is pending before Congress again. Let those inclined toward apathy or opposition visit here before they vote.

INTRODUCTION OF TWO BILLS TO BENEFIT RURAL AMERICA

(Mr. STAGGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced two bills this week of importance to rural America.

First, I have introduced legislation that will amend the rural health clinics provision of the Social Security Act to help ensure that psychologist's services are available to older Americans in rural areas. Available research indicates that the rural America is underserved in the mental health service system.

Second, my colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] has joined me in introducing a bill to strengthen the Veterans' Educational Assistance Act of 1984 by amending chapter 30, title 38 to include educational assistance for apprenticeship and other on-the-job training. These programs are particularly important to veterans living in rural areas who might not have a college nearby or are not inclined to continue their training through educational institutions.

I urge my colleagues to support the speedy passage of these bills.

Mr. Speaker, I include the text of these proposals for printing in the RECORD as follows:

H.R. 3281

A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide that services provided by a clinical psychologist in a rural health clinic need not be provided under the direct supervision of a physician in order to qualify for payment under the medicare and medicaid programs

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(aa) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(aa)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking out "physician assistant or by a nurse practitioner" and inserting in lieu thereof "physician assistant, nurse practitioner, or clinical psychologist", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'clinical psychologist' means an individual who—

"(A) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which he so practices;

"(B) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual who was licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology which the Secretary deems appropriate; and

"(C) possesses 2 years of supervised experience in health service, at least 1 year of which is post-degree.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to services furnished on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

H.R. 3282

A bill to amend chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, to provide for educational assistance for apprenticeship or other onjob training under the new GI bill educational assistance program

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE TO INCLUDE APPRENTICESHIP.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1402 of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) The term 'program of education'—

"(A) has the meaning given such term in section 1652(b) of this title; and

"(B) includes a full-time program of apprenticeship or of other onjob training approved as provided in section 1787(a) of this title."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7) The term 'training establishment' has the meaning given such term in section 1652(e) of this title.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 1432 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) In any month in which an individual pursuing a program of education consisting of a program of apprenticeship or other onjob training fails to complete one hundred and twenty hours of training, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this chapter to the individual shall be limited to the same proportion of the applicable full-time rate as the number of hours worked during such month, rounded to the nearest eight hours, bears to one hundred and twenty hours.".

(2) The heading of such section is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1432. Limitations on educational assistance for certain individuals".

(3) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 30 is amended to read as follows:

"1432. Limitations on educational assistance for certain individuals.".

(4) Section 1434(b)(2) of such title is amended by inserting "or training establishment, as the case may be," after "educational institution".

DESIGNATING THE ROSE AS THE NATIONAL FLORAL EMBLEM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, today I have the honor of joining with the other Members of the Louisiana delegation, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] in introducing a joint resolution to designate the rose as the national floral emblem of the United States.

The rose has embellished our country with its beauty and perfume for centuries. It has been said that "when love first came to the Earth, the spring spread rosebuds to receive him," I understand that fossilized roses have been found in Colorado and Oregon which date back as far as 40 million years. The breeding and hybridizing of roses, which our first President, George Washington started, is a tradition that still flourishes in our country. In fact, one of the varieties he developed, the Mary Washington Rose, is still enjoyed today in gardens across the Nation.

The rose has been selected to decorate the White House garden where many notable occasions have taken place, innumerable American landmarks and memorials, and three First Ladies have roses named in their honor.

No flower has inspired more poetry and music that the rose, and I understand that the rose has been the victor in every survey designed to determine the favorite flower of the American public.

I believe it is time to make official the position of honor that the rose has long enjoyed in our culture. I believe it is time to make the rose our national floral emblem.

I am including for the RECORD at this point the text of the resolution:

H.J. RES. 385

Joint Resolution to designate the rose as the national floral emblem

Whereas the study of fossils has shown that the rose has been a native wild flower in America for over thirty-five million years;

Whereas the rose is grown today in every State;

Whereas the rose has long represented love, friendship, peace, and the devotion of the American people to their country;

Whereas the rose has been cultivated and grown in gardens for over five thousand years and is referred to in both the Old and New Testaments;

Whereas the rose has for many years been the favorite flower of the American people, has captivated the affection of human kind, and has been revered and renowned in art, music, and literature;

Whereas our first President was also our first rose breeder, one of his varieties being named after his mother and still being grown today; and

Whereas the United States is without a national flower: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the flower commonly known as the rose is designated and adopted as the national floral emblem of the United States of America, and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to declare such fact by proclamation.

WOODS HOLE SCIENTISTS DISCOVER TITANIC WRECK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, a little after 2 a.m. early on the morning of April 15, 1912, the "unsinkable" R.M.S. Titanic—on her maiden voyage—slipped below the icy cold waters of the North Atlantic. Seventy-three years later, also a little after 2 a.m., on the morning of September 1, 1985, a joint French-American team discovered the wreck of the great liner. The American team was led by Dr. Robert Ballard of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. Dr. Ballard heads the Deep Submergence Laboratory at Woods Hole and is recognized throughout the world for his outstanding work in oceanography.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, the French Institute for Research and Exploration of the Sea, and Dr. Ballard for opening a new era in underwater exploration. The Titanic was first photographed by the new deep-towed sonar video camera system [ARGO] which was developed by the Institution's deep submergence laboratory. The vehicle was funded by a $2.8-million grant provided by the Office of Naval Research.

It is expected that following this year of sea trials, ARGO will have its first scientific application in December. At that time, Dr. Ballard will survey a 120-mile section of the East Pacific Rise—which is a submarine ridge between San Diego and Manzanillo, Mexico. Since the first efforts to study this large geological underwater feature were begun in 1973, the scientists have seen about 120 miles of the ridge system. Incredibly, the ARGO survey in December will equal the previous 12 years of work in just 20 days.

Much of this important work in oceanography is funded by the National Science Foundation through grants to Woods Hole and other American oceanographic institutions. Too often the efforts to learn more about life in our oceans is overshadowed by U.S. achievements in space. But the oceans hold most of the clues to the evolution and development of our planet, and the NSF support of oceanic exploration is vital to the continuation of that research.

I think we can all share in the excitement of having found the Titanic—but as Dr. Ballard so eloquently said, in finding the great liner it also made us aware of the significance of the Titanic as a maritime disaster. Once the excitement of the discovery was behind them, it was fitting that Dr. Ballard and his colleagues held a brief memorial service on the fantail of the research vessel Knorr for the 1,522 who perished.

And as many of you here may have read, it is Dr. Ballard's hope that the site of the Titanic sinking shall remain forever undisturbed as a memorial to those 1,500 souls that lost their life on that April night 73 years ago. That would be my hope, too, and I would urge all involved in this great adventure to make every effort to insure that the Titanic does not fall victim to a second tragedy—and that would be salvage rape for profit of the ship's cargo, goods, and personal effects.

Once again I want to congratulate Dr. Ballard, the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution and the entire scientific community on the discovery of the Titanic. It is a great accomplishment that will help keep this Nation in the forefront of basic research undertaken in the deepest waters of the oceans.

HIGH HOLIDAYS 5746

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on the evening of September 15, the first day in the autumn month of Tishri, 5746, under the Jewish Calendar, Jews all over the world, will begin the new year with the celebration of Rosh Hashanah, the Day of Judgment.

According to Jewish tradition, on Rosh Hashanah, God remembers all of his creatures and judges humankind, and their destinies are inscribed in the Book of Life. This is a joyous, but solemn, holy day of deep religious significance and the start of a 10-day period of penitence, the Days of Awe, culminating in Yom Kippur the holiest day of the year.

The previous month, the Hebrew month of Elul, is seen by Jews as a time for introspection and meditation in preparation for the repentance and renewal of the new year. It is customary to visit the graves of relatives and teachers, to remember the sanctity of lives, and to gain inspiration for the coming year. Penitential prayers, selikot, are recited at midnight on the Saturday before Rosh Hashanah, and continue for at least 4 days as the tenor of the high holiday period begins to intensify. It is also customary to send friends and relatives cards containing special wishes for a new year of good will, peace, and happiness.

On Rosh Hashanah, the highlight of the synagogue service is the blowing of the Shofar, or ram's horn, whose sound is meant to awaken man's conscience, to renew his faith, to return him to God, and to summon all Jews to self-examination and repentance.

After services, families return to their homes to light festival candles. A holiday meal is served, including a round loaf of bread and apples dipped in honey to symbolize the hope for a sweet new year. The next day is devoted to prayer and self-reflection in the synagogue. Reform and Israeli Jews celebrate Rosh Hashanah for 1 day from sundown to sundown, while Orthodox and Conservative Jews observe this holiday for 2 days.

For 10 days, beginning with Rosh Hashanah, and ending with Yom Kippur, all Jews make a concentrated effort at introspection and reconciliation. It is customary for Jews to ask forgiveness of other people they have slighted or hurt during the previous year. Through this direct confrontation with other persons, they approach forgiveness and reconciliation with others. Jews search their souls and repent for their sins, and ask forgiveness. Their deeds and fate are then weighed in the balance by God on the last day.

Beginning on the 10th evening, Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, Jews fast until the next sundown. Most of this time is spent in the synagogue, repenting, and asking pardon from God and from their fellow men. In turn, they freely forgive their neighbors. At the end of the day, the Shofar is blown one last time, and with a cleansed heart, all Jews look forward to a good new life for the following year, and return to their homes for a hearty break-the-fast dinner.

During these holiest of days, I extend my greeting and best wishes for a happy, healthy, and prosperous new year to my many constituents and friends of the Jewish faith who reside in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent. "May you be inscribed in the Book of Life." I also hope and pray that the new year brings an end to the persecution of hundreds of thousands of Jews living under Communist oppression, who are prohibited from observing these most holy days, so they too may worship in religious freedom, "next year in Jerusalem."

THE ISSUE OF VIETNAMESE INVOLVEMENT IN CLANDESTINE INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY TRANSFER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time to discuss a problem which I believe is significant but obscure to the American public: The issue of Vietnamese involvement in clandestine international currency transfer. In fact, this is my second in a series of special orders that I plan to conduct with respect to the issue. I would encourage all Members to review my previous statement on the matter which can be found in the May 15, 1985, CONGRESSION RECORD.

By way of background, the Office of Foreign Assets Control, through section 505.565 of the Foreign Assets Control Regulations, allows the transfer of not more than $300 in any consecutive 3-month period to any one payee in Vietnam or $12,000 per year. An additional one-time transfer of $750 is permitted for the purpose of enabling the payee to emigrate from Vietnam. Our Government gave this permission because we believed that most recipients had direct or indirect connections with the U.S. Government or the deposed Government of South Vietnam.

By implementing this program, we have attempted in good faith to continue a longstanding tradition to assist those in distress in other countries. There appears to be, however, overwhelming evidence that suggests that limitations are rigorously being imposed on people with pro-American backgrounds by the present Vietnamese regime. That government is making it enormously difficult for them to maintain even minimal standards under the current economic conditions in the SRVN.

Furthermore, the deplorable situation in SRVN, quite interestingly, goes well beyond its borders. There is documented evidence that indicates the SRVN is picking the pockets of Vietnamese refugees here in America, and other nations.

One may ask, What compels the SRVN to exploit Vietnamese outside their borders? As far back as the early 1950's, a noted Chinese economist from Stanford University named Yuan-Li Wu wrote:

> Governments that have national residents overseas may resort to blackmailing to augment supplies of exchange. Unlike the measures of open warfare and economic pressure • • • there are other methods that are effective as long as their real purpose is disguised. Once their intent is bared, they cease to be of any value to their perpetrator, inasmuch as they can be easily dealt with even if their effect cannot be nullified immediately. They are the methods of economic warfare. • • •

That passage from Dr. Wu's book, "Economic Warfare," a standard in its field for over three decades,

According to some Asian experts, Federal law enforcement officers and Senate investigators, this definition of covert economic warfare portrays the real life dilemma of many of the 450,000 Vietnamese refugees in this country, most residing in California, Virginia, Texas, and Louisiana. According to Treasury experts, approximately $200 million a year intended for relatives in Vietnam is sent through banks and storefront operators, contributing to a well-organized underground economy in Vietnam.

What is so devastating is the fact that most of the currency does not reach its intented destination; instead, it ends up in the SRVN's treasury. Vietnamese refugees in this country are victimized by a sophisticated manipulation scheme directed against them by the SRVN.

In June 1984, the Senate Banking Committee's Subcommittee on Financial Institutions heard testimony from Vietnamese refugees; and experts revealed that coerced appeals for money from individuals residing in the United States is not uncommon. During the 1984 hearing, the witnesses revealed a startling story that shows that:

In 1981, SRVN Government authorities created an organized and efficient exploitation system "to exhaust the foreign exchange capabilities of overseas Vietnamese."

This exploitation system targets a list of all individuals in Vietnam who have relatives in the United States. Vietnamese cadremen periodically contact people living in Vietnam and encourage them to write to their relatives to request money.

To transfer the money, a network of underground currency collection centers have been established in the United States. In response to orchestrated appeals, Vietnamese refugees take currency to the centers. The U.S. currency is consolidated at periodic intervals and smuggled out of the United States to the state bank of Vietnam. The intended recipients are given a small amount of Vietnamese currency which is immediately subject to regressive taxation or outright confiscation.

In many American cities, there are sizable Vietnamese communities which are vulnerable to these appeals. Some 13 collection centers from Los Angeles to New Orleans and Arlington, VA, reportedly are funneling an estimated $18 million per month to the SRVN.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have only scratched the surface of this insidious exploitation scheme. The need to bring this serious problem to a greater level of public attention is long overdue. In fact, I have written Chairman SOLARZ of the Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs to encourage him to investigate this matter.

We simply cannot continue to permit millions of dollars to leave this country only to contribute to a clandestine currency transfer network which:

Is unregulated;

Invites criminal elements;

Presents our law enforcement officers with a complicated system of deception.

I firmly believe that Vietnamese refugees in this country should be given the opportunity to have an adequate system that will provide for the transfer of a reasonable level of funds to their family, without contributing to a regime they despise so much.

Mr. Speaker, the point here is if we do not extend some sort of protection to Vietnamese refugees in this country, then we will continue to give them no choice other than to entrust their money to storefront and backroom operators who skim off a substantial percentage of the funds, but may also be acting in the interest of hostile foreign power. We must begin some steps to bring about a system that can protect them from shadowy underground practices designed solely to bolster the SRVN's insatiable need for substantial hard currency.

H.R. 816; "THE VIETNAM HUMANITARIAN REMITTANCES FUND"

My legislation, H.R. 816—which establishes a self-supporting fund—proposes that there be established in the Treasury of the United States the "Vietnam humanitarian remittances fund," consisting solely of moneys paid by Vietnamese refugees who wish to send such sums to their relatives in Vietnam.

Upon implementation of the legislation, the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue notes drawn on amounts held in the fund which are payable to the designated individual recipient in Vietnam.

No note thus issued may be redeemed out of the Treasury unless:

It is accompanied by a declaration from the State Bank of Vietnam which attests to the amount of funds actually received by the designated recipient;

That the recipient has actual use of all the funds which were sent;

That no duress was employed in soliciting the funds or in obtaining the recipients signature;

Or if evidence exists of special taxation or denial of human rights imposed on the recipient in connection with the redemption of the note.

One of the most important aspects of H.R. 816 is that it makes such clandestine money transfer unlawful, and suggests that the administration seek to negotiate with SRVN for random monitoring of our humanitarian remittances program by either the United States or a multilateral team of inspectors.

My legislation proposes that in the event inspection teams report a pattern or practice of abuse of the procedures thus established for the sending humanitarian remittances to Vietnam, all such remittances will be curtailed.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 816 does not intend to redirect our current foreign policy direction with respect to Vietnam. The legislation that I have introduced suggests that we demonstrate a commitment to restoring the integrity of humanitarian assistance for our new neighbors in this country who wish to send currency to their relatives in Vietnam. The principles of equity require nothing less.

In summary, H.R. 816, as proposed, would require the active cooperation of the Government of the SRVN in several areas. A good faith agreement between the United States and the SRVN, as provided for in section 3(a), would be the basis of a system set up to facilitate the transfer of currency for humanitarian purposes from residents and citizens of the United States to nationals residing in Vietnam. The bill provides various mechanisms for implementing the agreement, including creating a "fund" within the United States Treasury Department, sending a team of United States or multilateral inspectors to Vietnam to verify the regularity of the proposed transfer procedures, and establishing a time limit on the transfer of funds to expedite transaction.

Mr. Speaker, there are some who have suggested that this system will not work because we need the active cooperation of the SRVN. I can certainly appreciate their concerns. It is my belief, however, that if the Vietnamese Government does not need hard currency, and that currency can only be redeemed in this manner, then there may be tremendous incentive for them to cooperate with us. While I have no illusions that this serious problem will be rectified overnight, my legislation may just be a starting point in recognizing the need to restore the integrity of humanitarian assistance for people in this country who desire to send currency to their relatives in Vietnam.

MARCH 1985 CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE ANALYSIS OF H.R. 816

In March of this year, I requested the Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division of the Congressional Research Service [CRS] to prepare an analysis of H.R. 816.

The 1985 CRS report determined that there could potentially be four situations in which the SRVN Government might be willing to enter into an agreement with the United States regarding new currency transfer mechanisms. Such areas include:

(1) If consent to a regulated system was linked to economic aid or political recognition from the United States; (it must be noted, however, that the United States is extremely unlikely to provide any aid, or take any steps toward normalization of relations, so long as the Vietnamese continue to occupy Cambodia).

(2) If remittances fall off sharply due to: (a) discouragement on the part of remitters in the United States over whether the intended recipient was receiving any, or an unacceptably low portion of the remittance; (b) a change in U.S. regulations which would make currency transfer illegal, and effective enforcement of this regulation; and (c) effective U.S. action against clandestine means of transferring currency. Should any of these contingencies occur the Vietnamese might look at a regulated transfer system as a way to stabilize the flow of currency into Vietnam.

(3) The Vietnamese could enter into an agreement for the sake of garnering favorable world opinion and then either ignore or abuse the procedures proscribed in the bill.

(4) If, according to Hanoi's calculation, such a system would increase the amount of currency coming into the country.

The March 1985 report also revealed that there may be several reasons why the Vietnamese might not agree to the type of mechanism envisioned in H.R. 816.

Vietnam could flatly refuse to the agreement on the grounds that it violates Vietnam's sovereignty. The Vietnamese Government may not give inspection teams carte blanche to carry out oversight activities. Hardliners within the SRVN's politburo could perceive the proposed mechanisms as an American attempt to dictate Vietnamese internal policies.

Although the Vietnamese are anxious to acquire hard currency to bolster their depleted foreign reserves, the overt transfer of funds on a regular basis to certain families within Vietnam could be disruptive to the socialist ideal by creating a class of remittance people and possibly spawning discontent at the disparities of wealth such a system might create. CRS said further that, "Factionalism within the Vietnamese politburo over this matter and the larger issue of United States-Vietnamese relations could either produce a stalemate or tip the balance to hardline forces who want to remain isolated from the West."

CRS also shed light other possible disincentives that "due to the reportedly thorough system the Vietnamese have instituted for exploiting the remittances entering Vietnam, they have little reason to change the system, particularly as a result of an American request. Any regulated system with ceilings on the amount of funds which can be transferred could reduce the amount of money entering Vietnam, and more importantly, the possibility for the Vietnamese Government to 'benefit' from the remittance."

Mr. Speaker, I am the first to agree that the methods of abusing the system that is set forth in my legislation could happen. There is always the likelihood that inspection teams could be easily manipulated as it is highly unlikely that their travel would be unrestricted, Presumably, the teams would always be escorted by Vietnamese officials. Peasants could still be intimidated by overly zealous local cadres, as has reportedly occurred in many cases, and made to lie about the money they received. There is always that chance that bank officials may be subject to manipulation.

I do believe in purely humanitarian terms; however, my proposal could be an important starting point that may increase the odds for Vietnamese citizens and residents in the United States to be assured that their loved ones in Vietnam would be receiving the full amount of the remittance sent.

Mr. Speaker, it is tragic to hear a refugee's lament that, when he sends $100 to his wife, she will actually get very little of it. Yet he keeps sending the money because, even it she gets to keep $10, that is of some assistance. Or to hear a refugee's sad story that his 9-year-old daughter, gravely ill with rheumatic fever, receives a cable from his wife for money, but the little girl died 4 days later before the money arrived.

It is obvious to me that the need to have a vigorous discussion on the scope and nature of this problem and what we can do to remedy it is greater than ever. In fact, my proposal has an expedited procedure for transferring currency. The sad story I told about the little girl could have been averted if we had some expedited means of transferring currency for humanitarian purposes.

Such a system may also reduce or eliminate the current widespread practice of clandestine transfer, which by all accounts benefit underworld figures operating in the United States and abroad. It is obviously in the broader interest of the United States not to allow an antagonistic Vietnamese Government to be enriched by American dollars now allegedly being siphoned off under current remittance methods.

A recent editorial by the Orange County Register, a newspaper in my district, agreed that I have identified a serious problem within the Vietnamese refugee communities in Orange County and other parts of the country, specifically Virginia and Texas. The Register through its own investigative work reveals that:

> There is good evidence that the Socialist Republic of Vietnam government authorities have put together an organized program to "squeeze" money from Vietnamese living in the United States. The program is in part designed to increase the Government's supplies of foreign currency, and to deplete the resources of refugees. A more cynical bit of of exploitation is difficult to imagine.

The editorial charged that I "seek to remedy to this problem with a piece of legislation."

The editorial concluded that:

> Lungren is to be commended for identifying this problem and seeking to publicize it. If anybody in the Vietnamese refugee community was unaware of this shameful operation, they should be apprised of it. However, Lungren should be content with publicizing it and permitting the ingenuity of Vietnamese people in the United States to operate with a little more reliable information. No legislation is needed, and Lungren's proposal could well be harmful.

While I greatly appreciate the public service the Register has provided, it appears that what this editorial comes close to saying is that we should somehow throw up our hands, and accept the status quo. The editorial vaguely suggests that the man on the street will have to fend for himself, while we in this august body stand idly by and do nothing to help our new neighbors. I think it is absurd to somehow think that the "Rambo" approach to solve this problem is going to help anyone; especially the image of the United States.

The 1984 Senate Banking Subcommittee hearing mentioned earlier during my remarks identified the sum and substance of what this issue is all about. One of the major witnesses—whose identity had to be protected for fear that harm would come to his family still in Vietnam—stated:

> I myself go to church and I went to the church and asked my American friends how they feel about this. I asked my coworkers. I asked every single people who I had opportunity to meet. They are all confused. They say, "No, no. The problem, it no exists." I show them the evidence. I brought them to be where the underground currency is. I show them the paper how many refugees are here. They confused. They are confused. They say, "Well, it not exist. If it exist, our government will know it. Our big country, our powerful country will know it." But nobody acts. And the money keep losing. The Communist are stealing. The Vietnam Government is stealing from our pocket.

Mr. Speaker, based on information that has come from a variety of sources, one can only conclude that it is clear that the Vietnamese politburo is the controlling force when it comes to determining what direction will be taken in collection of currency overseas. Some Asian experts believe the Vietnamese Communists Party's internal security apparatus carefully organizes individuals in Vietnam who have relatives residing abroad into small, easily monitored groups.

As previously mentioned, at periodic intervals, these groups are compelled to write relatives overseas requesting sums of money under a variety of pretexts, some contrived, some legitimate. In response to these appeals for assistance, overseas family members take their money either to banks or to underground collection centers which operate in the United States under the disguise of commercial enterprises.

These Vietnamese fronts direct the currency they collect through Vietnamese fronts in third countries, typically Canada or France, from which they are sent back to the State Bank of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam.

Mr. Speaker, it is very important to understand that the SRVN's overseas currency scheme is not limited to the United States. On July 13, 1985 the Hamilton Spectator, a Canadian newspaper, ran a series of indepth articles indicating that:

Vietnamese immigrants are being bled by a $140 million a year currency collection scheme orchestrated by the Vietnamese Government and centered in Montreal.

The Hamilton Spectator investigations revealed that "most of the 25,000 Vietnamese in Canada—including about 4,000 in the Hamilton-Burlington area—who send prescription drugs, sundries, and money back to assist relatives in Vietnam are coerced by the Vietnamese Government to ship the parcels through a Montreal company which has a favored relationship with the Communist regime from which the refugees fled."

A 3-month investigation into the Canadian branch of the currency collection operation by the Hamilton Spectator has revealed:

A cluster of companies on Beaudry Street in Montreal act as the hub of the Canadian currency collection operation.

One of the Montreal companies, Laser Express, is the only Canadian company with a contractual relationship with Vietnamese customs.

Vinamedic, another Montreal company, is the only purchasing agent for the Vietnamese Government in Canada.

Both companies are connected to each other and another company, the Union Generale Des Vietnamien au Canada—a Montreal-based pro-Communist group—by intertwined directorships and land sales. Company officials deny the relationships.

A Carleton University political science professor says the Montreal Companies Act collectively as an unofficial Vietnamese Embassy. The Vietnamese Embassy in Ottawa closed in 1981.

A Toronto company, Transsaigon Co.—owned by a member of the Union General—ships parcels to Vietnam through laser express. The company has satellites in Edmunton, Windsor, and other parts of Canada. The owner denies that he deals with the Vietnamese Government.

The Federal Department of Employment and Immigration, 4 months ago, gave the Union Generale a 5-month $20,000 grant.

The Department of External Affairs and the Quebec Order of Pharmacists were both unaware of the companies' activists and activities until contacted by the Hamilton Spectator.

The value of money and goods shipped through Montreal is nearly 100 times higher than the $19 million statistics Canada estimates that Canada exported to Vietnam last year.

What the Hamilton Spectator revealed is that refugees who attempt to send money, medicine, and packages face a difficult task. Much of the money is siphoned off in taxes by the Vietnamese Government controlled savings accounts. Some of the drugs may be seized. Most of the goods that do get to designated recipients will be sold on the black market. The majority of the money that is sent back flows into the State Bank of the Socialist Vietnam through wire transfers, couriers and commercial credit. If a refugee sends money through the mail it is often stolen or lost in Vietnam. It can take as long as 3 months for a letter to get to Vietnam from Canada.

The articles also illustrated that:

If the money is sent through Canadian banks it can take up to 8 months to get to Vietnam and the Vietnamese Government only gives the Vietnamese relations a portion of the funds at an exchange rate 10 times lower than that offered through the Montreal operation. The rest of the money is kept, by the government, in an account that the Vietnamese need government permission to withdraw from.

Mr. Speaker, what the Hamilton Spectator uncovered is the fact that the SRVN is resorting to tactics against people who are basically defenseless. Many refugees say they feel guilty about sending money by any route through which they believe the SRVN is benefiting. But each method by which they can send money or other essentials is fraught with problems. When a money order is sent through a local bank to Vietnam's Foreign Trade Bank, the rate of exchange of Vietnamese dong to the dollar is only about half the rate of other transfer methods, refugees say. Current evidence reveals that:

Vietnamese who send money are forced to deal in U.S. funds and pay a service charge as high as 26 percent of the amount they wish to send;

In Vietnam the packages and mail are heavily taxed, pilfered and censored by the governments;

Packages that arrive at Tan Sam Nhat Airport in Ho Chi Minh City are swaddled in red tape and subject to surcharges, taxes, and theft.

Mr. Speaker, I hope all Members of this body will take the time to understand the seriousness of the issue discussed this evening. I am not necessarily certain that my legislation is in fact the appropriate response to the problem which I have outlined. There is still plenty of doubt in my mind about the extent and nature of the problem.

I do believe, however, that if some of these truly alarming stories have any ring of truth, they represent a violation of human rights that go beyond the standards of decent behavior on a very broad scale. I urge all my colleagues to study not ony the methodology contained in my legislation, but also take some time and explore the issue for yourself. Talk to law enforcement officers. Most importantly, discuss this issue with leaders in the Vietnamese communities. All of us owe it to ourselves to discover whether or not the Socialist Republic of Vietnam's controlled economic exploitation scheme actually exists. Most importantly, we should try to learn just how it effects the lives of Vietnamese refugees here in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we are a little bit more aware of this problem in my part of the country than in others because we have such a large number of these Southeast Asian refugees, and particularly these Vietnamese refugees, but in fact it is a national problem. It is the height of irony, it is actually the height of tragedy that the very same Vietnamese Government which drove these people from their homeland, which required these people to exit in some of the most dangerous ways to leave their homeland to try to seek a little peace in the United States and elsewhere, should now be taking advantage of these people who now, having reached freedom, are attempting to do nothing more than assist their relatives and their friends who are left back in Vietnam.

As I said, I am not certain that my proposal is the best proposal or the only proposal, but I am putting that proposal out on the table so we can see whether or not it is possible for us to create a set of conditions to allow the Vietnamese who live within our midst to do what any of us would want to do, and that is to help our neighbors, help our families, and help our friends who are left back in their homeland and who are suffering because of the activities of the government that required us to leave.

Mr. Speaker, I ask, can we not try to create a set of circumstances which allows them to have some comfort in the thought that what they are doing is not in vain?

THE LESSONS OF GRENADA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, tonight I am going to renew talking about the real news and what is happening around the world. The concerns we have to face with the war against freedom being waged by the Soviet Union and its Communist allies. I want to focus on two major areas. One is the Gorbachev propaganda offensive, trying to set the stage for Geneva. It is an attempt to create an environment in which there will be more pressure on President Reagan to appease the Soviet Union than there has been in any Western leader since Neville Chamberlain went to Munich in 1938.

In addition to talking about the Gorbachev offensive and what I think is the correct American response to that propaganda offensive, I want to talk about recent developments in Central America and in particular the ways in which the Nicaraguan Communists are threatening Costa Rica. I also want to talk about the ways in which as the El Salvadoran Communists find they are unable to win, they are reverting to terrorism in their efforts to defeat the Government of El Salvador.

Let me first talk about the Gorbachev peace offensive. The fact is that Marxist-Leninist parties, in particular led by Lenin's own writings, are very oriented to psychological, intellectual warfare. They think that words are very, very important. One of the reasons why in most Communist countries there is a dramatic increase in education as soon as a Communist government takes over is because they regard education as the key to brainwashing the population. They believe that brainwashing that teaches people the right words is the key to controlling people in the long run. So it is natural for a Communist government to think that a psychological, political offensive is a part of warfare. Indeed, unlike the West, if you study Leninist warfare or Soviet warfare manuals, they have an entire section on psychological, political, intellectual warfare, in which they have invested very heavily and in which they train a great number of people.

In the past I have cited from the Grenada documents, documents which were captured when we liberated the island of Grenada, documents that are based on a Communist government and a Communist party in Grenada. In those documents I have quoted examples of the very serious planning that goes into a Communist government trying to mislead both the American people and the American news media and the careful planning which goes into propagandizing their own people.

It is clear from the Grenada documents that there is a serious long-term Communist effort to understand the American news media and to know how to manipulate it. An effort to understand American church groups and to know how to manipulate them.

In that setting, I think the Gorbachev offensive is part of a long pattern of Soviet willingness to lie and deceive in order to try to communicate their values.

In the recent Time magazine interview with Gorbachev, there were two fascinating examples of the Soviet modern techniques of manipulation. The funnier of the two was a line where Gorbachev was quoted as saying, "God in His infinite wisdom." I found it fascinating. Here you have the leader of the Communist government, an avowedly atheist movement, a man whose wife teaches Marxist philosophy at the University of Moscow, cheerfully for purposes of Western newsmen citing God. A God which technically he cannot believe exists if he believes the teachings of Lenin, but because he knows that we feel comfortable with people who cite God, he is perfectly willing to make us feel more comfortable.

Second, we had in the very same interview a reference which Gorbachev said, "We would never start a war." Unfortunately, no one on the Time magazine editorial board saw fit to say to him, "What about Afghanistan, where you are currently fighting a war? What about Czechoslovakia, which you invaded in 1968? What about Hungary, which you invaded in 1956? What about the occupation of the army in Poland?"

Instead, they passed over it, allowing a Communist leader with a totally straight face to say to them, "We, of course, would never start a war. I promise you that."

One has to wonder how naive you must think Americans are if you can get away with that kind of bald-faced lie, since he is in the middle of fighting a war in Afghanistan.

The pattern of this offensive is very simple. We know from a variety of works, of which possibly John Barron's books on the KGB are the best. Shevchenko's work on "Fleeing From Moscow" as a Soviet senior official telling us the inside story is helpful and there have been a number of other studies.

We know from these works that the Soviet Government systematically and consistently goes after the penetration of Western news media.

A recent novel, "The Spike," is another example of that. Its coauthor is Arnaud de Borchgrave, the editor of the Washington Times, a former senior columnist for Newsweek magazine.

As you study these books, whether they are fiction or nonfiction, you learn that the KGB, the Soviet secret police, spends a great deal of money bribing some reporters, influencing some editors, establishing some academic centers, setting up a framework of thought.

It is I think fair to say that not since Adolf Hitler manipulated the Western news media in the late 1930's have we seen an offensive designed to convince, manipulate and dupe Western people as sophisticated as Gorbachev's current offensive.

What then should the correct American answer be? When the New York Times prints an ad paid for by the Soviet Embassy, as it did recently, should we censor that ad? I do not think so. When Gorbachev offers to be interviewed, should we stop the interview? I do not think so.

It would be helpful if the newsmen were a little more tough minded, if they asked better questions, if they were more aggressive in cross-examination. But basically, if we are going to be a free society, we have to allow people who are going to lie to us to tell their lies out in the open. And then we have to hope that our intellectuals, our news media, our politicians, our citizens, will pay attention and learn who is telling the truth and who is lying.

Rather than talk about censorship, I would like to suggest just the opposite. We have an opportunity in the third week of October to lay out for the entire world to see who the Communists are and what the system is. Rather than arguing with Gorbachev as a person or discussing whether or not his wife dresses well, it seems to me far more appropriate for us to look at the underlying question of the nature of the Soviet system, the nature of the Communist government.

I think there is no better time to do that than the third week of October, which is the second anniversary of the liberation of Grenada.

I think it is important for two reasons. First of all, the liberation of Grenada was the first time that a Communist government was overthrown and people regained their freedom. In that sense the experience of the Grenadian people, now free, now with a free market, now with a democracy, now with a free press, now with freedom of religion, the lesson of Grenada in ceasing to be Communists offers hope to people all over the world. It offers hope to the Afghan freedom fighters. It offers hope to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. It offers hope to the Angolan freedom fighters. It offers hope to people in Poland, in the Ukraine, in Estonia, in Latvia, in Lithuania, and throughout the Soviet Union.

Second, in liberating Grenada and saving some 800 American students from possibly becoming hostages, we also captured 35,000 pounds of Communist documents, the records of the Communist government, the records of the Communist Party. So we know a great deal about Grenada.

Unfortunately, because the American intellectual community is largely leftwing, because it does not want to learn about communism, because it does not want to study the Soviet Union in reality, very little has been done with those documents. Only a few books have been written, of which the most notable was edited by Romerstein and Ledeen and published by the State Department as the Grenada Documents. In addition, a book by Paul Seabury studies the Grenada Documents. But when one looks at all of the leftwing intellectual effort to discredit El Salvador, the Philippines, South Africa, Chile, and then you look and ask how many Ph.D.'s rush down to the National Archives to look at these documents? How many people have been busily studying and trying to tell us what we can learn about communism and the Grenada lesson? The answer, sadly, is very few.

Therefore, I think it is very, very important that we take the third week of October, the week of October 25, and we focus America on looking at the lessons of Grenada and asking ourselves, what do they tell us about today? What do we learn about communism in Grenada that teaches us about Gorbachev? Nothing could better prepare America for Geneva than to study the real nature of communism and look at the real lessons of the Grenada Documents.

That is why I urge my colleagues to cosponsor House Resolution 313, which Congressman IKE SKELTON of Missouri and I have introduced as a bipartisan resolution. It already has over 165 cosponsors. And it is designed to make the week of October 25 a week in which high schools, colleges, Sunday schools, synagogue classes, civic clubs, veterans groups, everyone who has an interest in understanding the world we live in and the nature of communism, might look at the lessons of Grenada. That is why I would urge every citizen to look at their own civic clubs, their own classes, their own opportunities to study the lessons of Grenada. I think it helps to get the local news media to ask the question, what have we learned about communism? By getting editorial writers before they interview Gorbachev to study the way in which Lenin has practiced the art of lying to Western news media, to look at the lessons of disinformation and deception as practiced by the Soviet Union, I think that helps all of us.

So I would urge all of my colleagues to cosponsor House Joint Resolution 313 and help us make the week of October 25 a week to learn the lessons of the Grenada Documents.

I would also urge every group around America that is interested in and concerned about communism or about the survival of freedom to take the opportunity that week to study the lessons of Grenada.

I would urge those citizens whose Congressmen have not yet cosponsored that resolution to contact their Congressmen and ask them to cosponsor House Joint Resolution 313.

In addition to handling propaganda as it relates to the Soviet Union, I think it is also interesting to look at what has been happening around the world that the American news media does not cover very aggressively.

There is a tendency in the American news media if an American ally does something to put it on page 1, and if a Soviet puppet does something to either not print it at all or put it on page 30.

Therefore, I have asked that we put together some major events and on a weekly basis on Thursday I am going to try to link together different news stories you may not have seen. I'm going to show how they relate to the war against freedom being waged by the Soviet Union and its Communist empire. Here are some examples.

First, the Communists have been linked in Nicaragua to 700 Costa Ricans training in Cuba. At least 700 Costa Ricans linked to leftist groups have received military training in Cuba with assistance from the Communist Sandinista government of Nicaragua, according to Costa Rican Deputy Minister Johnny Campos.

Notice that this is not a citation from an American source. This is the Deputy Security Minister of Costa Rica. He said in a recent interview in La Nacion:

> Campos broached the magnitude of local and foreign espionage in his country. He also stated that this training had been going on for 4 years. He divided the espionage activities into three groups which included the involvement of the Ortega-led Communist government of Nicaragua. The Deputy Minister described the situation as dangerous and he is very concerned about it.

An example of what has been happening around the world: The Communist terrorists in El Salvador are changing their behavior. According to Radio Venceremos, the Communists in El Salvador have again bragged about their sabotage activities.

For example, over the Fourth of July weekend, the Communist guerrillas "carried out important sabotage against power lines in this central area of the country. These power outages affected San Salvador and large parts of Central El Salvador."

The broadcast also went on to boast that "on July 5, guerrilla units of the Julio Armando Climaca Detachment downed three high voltage power pylons in (Las Gorritas) Canton, San Jorges jurisdiction, San Miguel Department.

"We continue with more activities to sabotage the war economy of Duarte's government. Sabotage is victory."

I think every American needs to look at that and ask themselves, these are Communist guerrillas. They claim that they are for the people, yet their strategy as they grow weaker and are unable to field a military unit is to engage in terror and in sabotage. Imagine the nature of a group which would say that sabotage is victory. Sabotage is destruction, the breaking up of the economy, the destroying of jobs, the wiping out of civilized amenities. Then when American reporters go to a major city and the power goes out because the guerrillas have successfully sabotaged the power lines, instead of reporting on guerrilla brutality, on the senselessness of their campaign, of their unwillingness to vote, instead the reporter talks about how weak the government is.

Let me suggest that if we had guerrillas trying to knock out power lines around Washington, we could appreciate better the challenge to President Duarte. Not only his daughter kidnaped by terrorists, but he is faced with a guerrilla movement which, as it loses the main war against his army, reverts more and more to terrorist tactics and to guerrilla warfare.

To the south of Nicaragua, Costa Rica finds itself increasingly in difficulty. For example, Costa Rican President Luis Alberto Monge has said definitely that there will be no dialog between Costa Rica and the Communist regime of Nicaragua because the Communist regime has refused to apologize and give explanation for actions to Costa Rica concerning their aggressions directed against his government.

Monge referred to three separate incidents in which Nicaragua waged unprovoked attacks over its border into Costa Rica: The events at Las Crucitas on May 31, when two Costa Rican civil guardsmen died; the July 3 incident in the same area when Communist troops attacked the Costa Rican guardsmen who were trying to recover the body of one of the slain guardsmen; and the July 26 incident at Barra del Colorado, when three Communist air force planes entered Costa Rica's airspace and dropped bombs.

The point I want to make here is that of all of the countries in Central America, Costa Rica is the most peaceful, the most democratic, the most open.

Costa Rica disbanded its army in the late 1940's. It literally has no army anymore. It has been observed by one expert on Central America that Costa Rica is the greatest danger to Nicaragua precisely because it is a democratic country with a free market and a free press. That means that every possible younger Nicaraguan will flee to Costa Rica, just like in Western Europe we see people flee from East Germany to West Germany, from Czechoslovakia to Austria, from Hungary to Austria, and so forth.

The point this expert had made was that as long as Costa Rica is alive, as long as it is a free country, as long as it is a better place to live than Nicaragua, it will be an active threat to the Communist government of Nicaragua precisely because it drains away people.

Here we have the President of Costa Rica, a country which does not even have an army, reporting on three incidents in which the Communist government of Nicaragua entered Costa Rican territory. The Costa Ricans are concerned in part because, as they look to the north toward El Salvador, they have some sense of how a country can be torn to pieces by Communist guerrillas.

Communist guerrilla commander Joaquin Villalobos, in a statement concerning the increased terrorists' use of land mines and urban terrorism, has threatened more violence on the people of El Salvador.

"Our aim is to convert every road into a river of blood with mines * * * each stone into a mine and every helicopter into a coffin," Villalobos said in a recent rebel radio broadcast.

The Farabundo Marti Liberation Front [FMLN], the Communist terriorist organization bent on destroying the democratically elected government of President Duarte, is increasing its activities due to decreased support in their insurgency efforts over the past year.

"The subversives have planted a lot of mines in the last few months because they can no longer confront army units directly," said Maj. Omar Vaquerano, an infantry battalion commander. "The mines are a demonstration of the subversives' weakness."

The increase in the effectiveness of the government's efforts against the Communists' activities has broken up the terrorists into small pockets of subversives, taking much of their support base, supplied by the Masas.

The point I want to make is this: Here we have Communists in El Salvador saying that we are going to rely on sabotage. I quoted earlier, "sabotage is victory." They have said here, we have them saying their aim is to convert every road into a river of blood with mines, each stone into a mine and every helicopter into a coffin.

Imagine you were living in democratic Costa Rica, that you were looking up the road to El Salvador, that you saw that kind of bloody, viscious anticivilian guerrilla warfare, sabotage, and terrorism going on. You can appreciate why the Costa Rican Government, the most democratic, most open and decent government in Central America, is increasingly angry with the Nicaraguans, because it sees in Nicaragua a country which is supporting guerrilla warfare with Communists in El Salvador. A country which is itself a Communist dictatorship. And Costa Rica sees an increasing willingness to launch raids against them.

President Monge, in an August 13 letter to Daniel Ortega, the Communist dictator of Nicaragua, said that Costa Rica was a "peaceful people" and blamed "Nicaragua's warmongering attitude" for the border crisis.

Let me emphasize this. This is the President of Costa Rica, the neighbor of Nicaragua, a democratic country which does not even have an army. His attitude toward the Communist Government of Nicaragua, he said it was "a warmongering attitude."

This is not Ronald Reagan talking; this is not some rightwing Republican. This is the democratically elected, free President of Costa Rica.

He went on to say that we Costa Ricans "are a peaceful people and have never attacked anyone."

The Costa Rican President stated that if there is no peace in Nicaragua, then his nation is affected by this. "However," Monge stated, "Costa Rica is not responsible for Nicaragua's peace; Costa Rica cannot achieve or impose peace in Nicaragua."

In clear reference to the unprovoked border aggressions launched by the Marxist-Leninist regime, Monge said that—

> The various border incidents on Costa Rica's northern border, specifically the painful incident at Las Cructas and the violation of our national airspace by your government's military forces, can be protested as acts of aggression we will not tolerate and which, if repeated, will force us to defend ourselves. We demand a satisfactory explanation because these incidents are the result of Nicaragua's warmongering attitude and of the lack of peace in Nicaragua, which is an issue that your government cannot evade.

"Therefore, steps toward peace, both inside and outside Nicaragua, should be taken by your government," Monge said. He also stated that he considered Nicaragua's "international propaganda aimed at tarnishing Costa Rica's real position in relation to the Nicaraguan conflict unjust and ill-intentioned."

So again we have on August 13 the President of the democratic, demilitarized, free Costa Rica complaining, saying to the Nicaraguan Communists to "Let us alone, quit trying to provoke us."

Yet what happened?

On August 25, a Communist army patrol from Nicaragua was spotted by Civil Guard units inside Costa Rican territory in the Boca de San Carlos region, marking the third unprovoked border incident within a week against this democracy.

According to the Panama City ACAN report from the northern region of Costa Rica, the Sandinist People's Army [EPS] patrol fired at the civil guardsmen with their rifles and the civil guardsmen fired back.

Area residents told reporters that apparently the Communists had seized a farm but then abandoned it after the clash with the Costa Rican public forces.

Public Security Minister Benjamin Piza Carranza has explained that a police patrol discovered the Communist group in Costa Rican territory and, for this reason, obeyed the order to fire at them. Costa Rica has no standing army. He said that the Civil Guard remains on alert in the border area, which has been the site of recent unprovoked and illegal attacks launched by the Marxist-Leninist regime.

This is the third incursion the Communist forces have carried out on Costa Rican soil in 1 week, according to official reports issued by the government of President Luis Alberto Monge.

On August 22, five Communist aircraft violated Costa Rican airspace and fired shots, only 24 hours after the Costa Rican Government denounced an attack by the Nicaraguan Communist forces on the Boca de San Carlos police post.

These events have been unfolding during the Nicaraguan so-called peace dialog propaganda campaign.

In other words, where the Nicaraguans are publicly in interviews with American television, talking to American church groups, they pretend they favor peace. There are three times in 1 week in late August that the Nicaraguan Communists violated Costa Rica and attacked Costa Rica. In fact, things have gotten bad enough that Costa Rican Foreign Minister Carlos Jose Gutierrez said that the Inter-American Reciprocal Treaty [TIAR] might be requested if unprovoked Communist border attacks continue, citing that regime's "expansionist objectives" as a possible cause for these incidents.

"I think that, if these aggressions continue, we may resort to the TIAR. Costa Rica has not done so thus far because it believes the aggressions do not merit it," Gutierrez said in a telephone interview with Radio Cadena Nacional. Nevertheless, he noted that "their frequency and constant repetition might lead Costa Rica to resort to a step of that nature."

Gutierrez said that the Communist attacks on Costa Rica could have various explanations, among them that the Communist regime may be trying to intimidate the Costa Rican people. "This could be one of the reasons," he said. He explained that "perhaps the attacks seek to prevent Costa Ricans living in the border area from continuing to express support for the anti-Sandinists.

"Second, it might be that the attacks are the result of the arrogance of the Sandinist Army, which wants to show its military might to its neighbors," Gutierrez added. "We also think the attacks could be part of the expansionist objectives of the Nicaraguan Government, which does not hide its aggressive intentions with regard to the countries that border Nicaragua."

Let me make this point for all of our friends who belong to church groups that say why can there not be peace in Central America. Here he is, the foreign minister of Costa Rica, a country which is a democracy. A country which is free, a country which does not even have an army. All it has is a border patrol and a civil police, and now what is the foreign minister of Costa Rica saying? He said that the Government of Nicaragua has, and I quote: "Expanionist objectives," and "does not hide its aggressive intentions with regard to the countries that border Nicaragua."

In other words, the foreign minister of Costa Rica is trying to say to all of the world, you cannot deal with the Communist Government of Nicaragua because it is trying to expand itself. Nicaragua is an enemy to its neighbors, and it is supporting guerrilla war.

What do the people of Costa Rica think?

In a poll conducted by an affiliate of the international Gallup organization, it was found that 89 percent of the Costa Rican population consider the Marxist-Leninist regime of Nicaragua a threat to peace in the region.

The poll, which was published in the San Jose daily La Nacion, also found that 87 percent of the population have an unfavorable opinion of the Communist government. In addition, 63 percent said that neutrality ought not to apply if Nicaragua violated the Costa Rican sovereignty.

According to the results of the survey, most Costa Ricans approve of the way President Monge is handling the Nicaraguan crisis, but are displeased with the way the Contadora group is resolving the problems between the two nations. Also, 83 percent of the Costa Ricans polled said they were confident the United States would help defend Costa Rica if they were invaded.

On a similar subject, Oscar Aguilar, Presidential candidate of the National Union Party, has said that in view of the new Communist attacks against Costa Rican territory, which were confirmed by the Costa Rican Government, the country should break diplomatic ties with the Marxist-Leninist regime, if only temporarily. His statement, which was on San Jose Radio Reloj on August 22, also explained that "firmness does not mean aggression but that the country cannot continue to defend the national sovereignty with protest notes that no one pays attention to."

I think there are two messages here for Americans. First of all, the next time someone says to you: "But why do you think the Nicaraguan Communists are dangerous," ask them if 89 percent of the free people of Costa Rica are scared of their neighbor, should that not worry you. If the folks who are down there, who are natives, who are local, and who speak Spanish, who have friends in Nicaragua, if 89 percent of them are scared of the Communist next door, should not that be a sign to us that maybe they know more than the local politician or your local reporter who once spent 2 days there on a trip?

Second, what would our friends on the left do to save Costa Rica if, in fact, the Communists in Nicaragua are violating Costa Rican sovereignty? I have just indicated there were three times in 1 week in August that the Nicaraguan Communists were occupying part or acting on parts of Costa Rican territory. What would we do?

Are our neighbors, in fact, the Costa Ricans, right when 83 percent of them say we would help them if they were attacked by Communists, or are they wrong? I wonder. I wonder in this House how many of our more leftwing members would, in fact, find some excuse for explaining away Communist aggression, some way of indicating that it was really caused by Costa Rica, even though Costa Rica is unarmed, has no army, and could not attack anyone.

In fact, the Costa Rican Government is considering seriously breaking relations with Nicaragua.

Costa Rican Foreign Minister Carlos Jose Gutierrez has said that President Monge and his administration has not ruled out a break in relations with Nicaragua.

"On various occasions and in view of repeated attacks and violations of the Sandinist Army, we have been on the verge of breaking relations with Nicaragua but the situation has always been reconsidered," the foreign minister said. Government sources say that the possibility remains, considering recent territorial violations and the air attack August 21. "We now have to think of more drastic measures," Gutierrez said. He went on to say: "The conditions for signing the peace document do not exist," and added that the tension mentioned by Mexican Foreign Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda "is not the result of the position adopted by Costa Rica, which is willing to sign the document if it includes all the aspects necessary to achieve peace.

"It is not a matter of signing the peace document but of fulfilling all its provisions. If this is not done, the efforts would have been useless. Each country that signs the peace document must comply with its provisions. It is not a matter of simply signing the document so as to form part of a group of countries that will subsequently not comply with it," the foreign minister concluded.

I began tonight talking about the propaganda offensive of Gorbachev and of the Soviet Union and that there is a parallel propaganda offensive by the Nicaraguan Communists.

□ 1745

One of the comforting systematic natures of communism that does not seem to change over time, you can count on it, is that they can lie with a straight face. They can tell you they are for law and order while picking your pocket. So it is not at all uncommon for a Communist government like Nicaragua, in a peace offensive, have their President giving peace speeches while their army and air force are violating Costa Rican territory. Here we have the Costa Rican Government telling us about the event.

Again, the Costa Ricans are worried in part because of Nicaraguan Communist direct activity, and they are worried in part about what they see just up the road in El Salvador.

As recently as late August we have seen examples of the kind of Communist terrorism in El Salvador which frightens the democratic, disarmed country of Costa Rica.

According to an August 24 San Salvador La Prensa Grafica report, new acts of vandalism and terror have recently been carried out by subversive groups of the Communist FMLN-FDR terrorist insurgency organization.

On the highways to Santa Ana, Atiquizaya, Sesuntepeque, Tejutla, Usultan, Ilobasco, and other places the terrorist groups attacked buses, injuring at least 20 civilians.

In another unprovoked attack, official reports say that on August 23 the Communist extremists machinegunned a bus, truck, and pick-up truck in Delicias de Concepcion Canton, San Juan. According to the report, several passengers were wounded and all were taken to hospitals in that capital and Zacatecoluca.

As the Communist subversives were preparing to set the vehicle on fire, a military patrol arrived and the rebels immediately opened fire and fled from the army.

The Communist terrorists organization's goal is to overthrow the democratically elected government and replace it with a Marxist-Leninist regime similar to those currently in control in Cuba and Nicaragua.

Now, notice the style here. Now that the Communist guerrillas in El Salvador cannot stand up to the army, what do they do? They shoot the civilians, they machinegun a bus, they machinegun a pickup truck. This is the kind of banditry which can break down a free society but which is very hard for us to fight. Where are our friends on the left, those who are upset because the CIA mined Nicaraguan harbors; those who talked about atrocities from the right? Where is anyone from the left in this body standing up and saying it is wrong for Communist guerrillas to shoot innocent civilians? We have not heard a single person from the left in this House complaining about Communist guerrillas. Yet we recognize that there are all sorts of terrorists from the left who are engaged throughout Central America in trying to destroy pro-American and pro-Western governments.

There is one final point I would like to make tonight about events in Central America. And that is that there is some evidence that Nicaragua is working in concert with drug trafficking. There has been considerable evidence that Cuba works with drug traffickers. But there has been a recent report worth looking at in terms of the Nicaraguan Communists.

An agreement that allowed Colombian cocaine lords to process and ship narcotics through Nicaragua was described July 31 by a pilot working undercover for U.S. authorities.

Adler Barryman Seal described an April 8, 1984, meeting at the Colombian mountaintop home of Jorge Ochoa attended by several members of the Ochoa smuggling cartel:

"They had struck a deal with some [officials] in the Sandinista government in Nicaragua," Seal said. "We're not Communists. We don't agree with their philosophy, but they serve our means and we serve theirs—then they made gestures indicating money."

Seal, 45, said he was initially worried about being arrested if he landed in a plane full of cocaine in a Communist country, but he said he was assured that there would be no problems with Nicaraguan officials.

United States authorities concluded that the operation had at least the tacit approval of high-level Sandinista officials.

The point that I think really ties together drug trade, terrorism, the propaganda offensive, and Nicaragua's attacks on its neighbors in Costa Rica is that from a Communist standpoint all of this fits together. Gorbachev, as a Communist leader, sees the United States as the enemy. The Soviet Union and its Marxist-Leninist leaders are very open in saying that we are the enemy. Anyone who has studied the Grenada documents can find the then-Communist leader of Grenada, Maurice Bishop, saying in a secret speech:

> Of course we are Communists, of course this is a dictatorship, of course we are against the Americans, but if we told them the truth then they will know what we are doing. So we are going to lie to them.

It is amazing, since 1917 we have had an opportunity to study what Lenin wrote in creating the Soviet state, to study how Stalin behaved as a dictator, or to look at what now is almost 70 years of systematic warfare against the West.

It is remarkable to see them spy against us, to have Americans who are arrested as spies, to see West Germans who turn out to be spies, to recognize that the British are expelling spies right this very day, to see that all over the world Gorbachev is involved in country after country, in systematically spying to try to undermine the West.

Similarly, we see, as we look around the world, a Communist offensive. There are Russian troops in Afghanistan killing free Afghans this evening as I speak. There are Cuban troops in Ethiopia, in Angola, in Mozambique killing people who want to be free.

There is a Communist government in Nicaragua trying to impose a dictatorship on its people. There is a Communist army from Vietnam in Cambodia trying to impose a Communist government on its people. There is a Communist army holding down the people of Poland.

In the middle of all this, Gorbachev appears on the cover of Time magazine and explains that he is really a nice guy who is just misunderstood. In the middle of all this, we have a so-called peace offensive. Sometimes you have to ask yourself how naive is the American and European news media, how naive are our intellectual elite, how easy it seems to be for the Communists, almost by the flick of a wrist, to change and say: "Oh, please forget everything we are doing in Afghanistan, ignore the people we are killing, the men, women, and children who are being butchered, the villages that are being bombed, the atrocities that are being committed, we really mean well. Please ignore the spies that you are uncovering in your country that we send there. We really mean well. Why don't you come to Geneva and just talk to us in a pleasant way?"

I believe the President should go to Geneva. I agree with Winston Churchill who once said: "Jaw, jaw, jaw is better than war, war, war."

Still, we should recognize what is going on.

Neville Chamberlain went to Munich in 1938 thinking if you could appease a dictator somehow things would get better. Neville Chamberlain might have given up radar in order to make Adolph Hitler happy. And the British would have lost the battle of London.

The President has the 21st century equivalent of radar, the strategic defense initiative. It is vitally important that all of us in America, and in Europe, and in Japan, and all of the free countries recognize who is going to Geneva.

On the one side, there is a Communist empire, there is a man whose armies are currently trying to conquer Afghanistan, there is a man who is spying against all of us, who is supporting terrorism and who represents the dark forces of the secret police, the Gulag Archipelago and the concentration camps of political prisoners. That is Gorbachev.

We should recognize that, we should remember it, and we should go to those negotiations starting with a question, since this is a man who will lie with a straight face, who will quote God even though he is an atheistic Communist, who would tell us he would never start a war even while he has 120,000 troops fighting in Afghanistan. Let us be clear what is happening.

It is vitally important the American President talk with the Communist leader. It is equally important that the American President not try to appease the Communist leader. If we can reach reasonable agreements that are enforceable, that is worth doing. I hope that on the week of October 25, we will study the lessons of the Grenada documents and we will celebrate, for free people everywhere and people who would like to be free everywhere, the fact that for the first time a Communist nation has become free again. As we look at the lessons of that second anniversary, it is my hope that across America and through the U.S. Information Agency across the world, the people who are free will be able to look once again at the lessons of communism and the nature of communism and what really was happening in Grenada, and that that will give us a much more sober, a much more realistic, a much more reasonable balance as we move toward Geneva.

It is vitally important that Geneva occur, but it is equally important that Geneva not become another Munich.

While Ronald Reagan is a Churchillian figure, a man of great resolution, a man who understands communism, a man who, as a former labor union president, knows how to negotiate, it is very important that he not have Neville Chamberlain's style news media, Neville Chamberlain's style elite, Neville Chamberlain's style advisers, Neville Chamberlain's pressure from his own public to make unwise concessions. By asking your Congressman to cosponsor House Joint Resolution 313, to help us look at the lessons of the Grenada documents, by asking your civic club, your Sunday school, or your synagogue group, your high school, or college class to take time that week to look at the lessons of Grenada, I think it is possible to educate ourselves, and I think that in the long run an educated, free people will survive despite the threats of dictatorship and that we can achieve peace through knowledge and through information.

I thank the Speaker.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks and to include therein extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 7, which was considered today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

KIDNAPING OF PRESIDENT DUARTE'S DAUGHTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak today about Mrs. Ines Guadalupe Duarte Duran, the eldest daughter of El Salvador's President, Jose Napoleon Duarte. Both Mrs. Duran and a female friend were kidnaped yesterday and in the process, a young man guarding Mrs. Duran was murdered.

No guerrilla group or organization has yet to claim responsibility for the kidnaping. The clandestine rebel radio station, Radio Venceremos, did not mention the kidnaping during its September 10 broadcast.

However, it seems to me that this is another signal that urban warfare in El Salvador is a reality and the Communist guerrillas mean what they say.

The June 19, 1985, murder of four U.S. marines in the city of San Salvador is still fresh on our minds. Only three of the suspected rebels responsible for this attack have been apprehended to date. Shortly after this murder, the Communists announced they would continue to hunt down Salvadoran and American officials in the cities.

The clandestine radio station of the Marxist-led insurgents, Radio Venceremos, announced yesterday, September 11, 1985, that their goal to "annihilate American advisers" in El Salvador is still a very high priority.

It is crystal clear to anyone who pays attention and who keeps his eyes and ears open as to what kind of criminal we are dealing with in El Salvador and Central America. The Salvadoran intelligence forces recently reported that they have received information that Salvadoran and American officials remain the targets of the Communist rebels.

The crimes and threats of the Communist rebels in El Salvador are not merely directed at the Duarte government or American advisers or officials. These acts are designed to intimidate the Salvadoran population and destabilize that country in order to allow the Communists to abort democracy in El Salvador and Central America as a whole. We must not make any mistake about the actual purposes involved in this series of terrorist acts that they are now engaged in.

As the speaker before me made the point in his presentation, the rebel forces at this time in Central America are conducting terrorist activities in order to bring about a change in the freedom that does exist in the few countries around the area where they now hold control in Nicaragua. The United States, as a result, in order to protect its own citizens and in order to protect the officials of the democratic countries in Central America, especially in El Salvador, and in order to protect the glimmering hope of democracy that is flaming now in those areas down there, the American Government, the United States, us, this Congress must expedite the money, materials, and support already authorized to El Salvador to counter the Communist urban offensive going on. Just before the August recess, we passed a Foreign Assistance Act that contained authority for the United States to provide training and equipment to the police and internal security forces of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica. The President subsequently signed this act into law.

It is now our duty to see to it that El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica obtain a first-class police force by whatever means of assistance and training that we can possibly give them.

□ 1800

If that means, and I think it does, appropriations and additional funding by this Congress, we need to proceed now, because it is only with that kind of training that we are going to have the kind of police, the kind of internal security forces in the cities of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica that can combat this new urban guerrilla terrorism that the Communists are conducting.

It is only in this manner that we can prevent future murders like those of the four marines involved, just a month or so ago, and the kidnaping of Mrs. Duran, the daughter of President Duarte just the day before yesterday.

Now let me say in this connection that these may not be the only funds that we need. We have to look at what we have just recently done, but we also have to look at new funding levels not only for the question of training these police forces, but for the security and economic concerns in El Salvador itself if it is to survive as a democracy.

As we go through the process of the continuing resolution, and looking at the next year's money cycle, it is absolutely incumbent upon this Congress to appropriate whatever additional moneys are necessary to protect the men and women, the Salvadoran and Americans, who are struggling together each day to keep democracy alive in this part of our free world, however small it may be.

I submit to my colleagues and to the American people that we can do no less for democracy and for the future of freedom in this country and in Central America.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mr. SEIBERLING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, on September 4, the House approved H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act, by an overwhelming vote of 260 to 96.

I was absent on business last week. As a cosponsor of H.R. 10, I strongly support the continuation of the Economic Development Administration. Had I been present during rollcall vote No. 292, I would have voted "Aye."

INTRODUCTION OF A NEVADA WILDERNESS BILL

(Mr. SEIBERLING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, today, with our colleagues, JIM WEAVER, PETER KOSTMAYER, and BUDDY DARDEN, I am introducing legislation to designate 18 outstanding Forest Service roadless areas in the State of Nevada as wilderness.

Nevada is one of the few remaining Western States for which we have not yet passed legislation in response to the Forest Service's 1979 RARE II wilderness study and recommendations. Those recommendations were made to help the Congress settle the allocation of presently undeveloped lands between wilderness and other multiple uses. Without legislation, all development plans on more than 3.6 million acres of roadless lands in Nevada's National Forests will be under a cloud of uncertainty.

In July of this year, the cosponsors of the bill and I, with members of the Nevada congressional delegation, had the privilege of participating in a 4-day tour by helicopter of Nevada's national forests with Forest Service staff and representatives of the Nevada State government. We met and talked with ranchers, miners, outfitters, representatives of the oil and gas industry, and conservationists at locations across the State, and visited many of the roadless areas that local conservationists have proposed for protection as wilderness. All of us on the trip were impressed—and surprised—by the beauty and diversity of Nevada's mountains.

Nevada's forests are unique islands in the Great Basin desert. High above the desert valleys, they catch the rain, snow, and cool air that makes these verdant mountains such a stunning contrast to the desert below. Once designated wilderness and given national recognition, the areas in our bill, which are widely distributed across the State, will forever change the popular impression that Nevada is just a desert wasteland.

Each of the areas in my bill would make superlative additions to the National Wilderness Preservation System. They include:

Arc Dome in central Nevada's Toiyabe Range. Arc Dome's glacial cirques and alpine ridges are home to desert bighorn sheep. Each year, more hikers use the trails up the side canyons and along the crest of the range. From that trail, you can look out over range after mountain range receding in the distance.

Table Mountain, the heights of the Monitor Range, is home to a thriving elk herd which inhabits some of the most beautiful aspen forest I have ever seen. To my knowledge, based on personal inspections over the years of the vast majority of lands in the National Wilderness Preservation System, there is no area currently in the system which is anything like Table Mountain in terms of terrain, forest cover, and size. Aspens and meadows cover an immense 10,000-foot-high rolling tableland, most of which would be protected as wilderness by our bill. At least four commercial outfitters depend on this area for their livelihood, taking campers and hunters into this beautiful area.

The Quinn Canyon Range was recommended for wilderness by the Forest Service in RARE II because of its spectacularly scenic cliffs and the rugged topography and remoteness that have protected its wilderness character. After our visit, I heartily concur with that judgment.

The South Snake Range, including the Wheeler Peak area in eastern Nevada, was recommended as the site for a Great Basin National Park by the Park Service 30 years ago. Its stunning mountain peaks, lakes, and forests, and the only year-round glacier that remains in the Great Basin from the last ice age, would be protected as wilderness by our bill. We recommend wilderness rather than a park proposal because of local ranchers' desire that livestock grazing be allowed to continue in the area—which wilderness will allow.

The Ruby Mountains, some 15 miles southeast of Elko. The Rubies are one of the most scenically spectacular areas in the entire Nation, and I cannot conceive of a Nevada wilderness bill that did not include them. The Nevada Mining Association has no objection to their designation as wilderness, and the Forest Service has twice proposed them for wilderness. We think they should be wilderness, and have drawn the largest boundary we could to protect as much of this range as is still roadless and undeveloped.

Jarbidge Additions. Our bill adds the drainages on the northeast side to the existing wilderness. We landed at the edge of this area, and virtually everyone in attendance at our informal meeting, including local ranchers, agreed that the area should be in wilderness.

Elk Mountain. Located east of the Jarbidge Additions, this proposal is strongly supported by Nevada sportsmen, who hope that elk will ultimately be reintroduced in the area. The boundary we are proposing has been drawn to exclude several vehicle tracks that are used for hunting and ranching purposes.

Santa Rosa. This desert range north of Winnemucca contains numerous trout streams and forest groves which provide excellent fishing and hunting opportunities. The area also supports a large population of golden eagles and excellent habitat for a mule deer. Our tour of the area convinced us that its unique ecosystems and isolated location in north-central Nevada speak strongly for wilderness designation.

Mount Rose. Over the years, our committee has made a conscious effort to designate wilderness in close proximity to major metropolitan areas, when possible, so that urban residents will be able to continue to enjoy the benefits of nearby primitive recreation. Mount Rose forms part of the scenic backdrop for the city of Reno, and is a spectacular and deserving wilderness candidate.

In total, our bill would protect 1.4 million acres, or about one-third of the still-wild roadless lands in Nevada's National Forests—and would release the remaining 2.2 million acres for multiple-use management. Even with the addition of these 19 areas, Nevada would have less land protected in the National Wilderness Preservation System than any other western State except Utah—which, while it only has 780,000 acres of wilderness, also has 860,000 acres protected in National Parks and Monuments.

The colleagues who are cosponsoring this legislation with me are all on the Public Lands Subcommittee and were on our field trip to Nevada. They, like me, came back convinced that these areas deserve protection as wilderness, and that this bill would strike a fair balance between preservation and development, while assuring that Nevada's national forest lands are adequately represented in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

SENATE—Thursday, September 12, 1985

(Legislative day of Monday, September 9, 1985)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Almighty, God, Supreme Lord of the universe, Sovereign Ruler of history and nations, at this critical time we are grateful for the uncommon good sense of our Founding Fathers. Coming as they did from a continent of divided, autonomous, sovereign, often warring states, they envisioned one nation of 13 plus autonomous, cooperative colonies forged as one United States. With profound gratitude we thank Thee for their wisdom which crafted a document, still relevant and taken seriously after more than 200 years, which provided for, produced and perpetuated such a nation.

Gracious Father, revive in our leadership that good sense, that vision and the wisdom to emulate that extraordinary public stewardship. Give them courage and the will to risk lives, fortunes, and sacred honor to preserve and protect such a union. Gracious God, help the Senators to realize what incredible power they wield when united, and how pathetically impotent the Senate is when fragmented. Infuse them with the strong will to unitedness. In His name whose mission in history was the ultimate unity of all things. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished acting majority leader is recognized.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President pro tempore, I thank you.

SCHEDULE

Mr. SIMPSON. There will be time for the two leaders under the standing order of 10 minutes each. There are special orders in favor of the following Senators for not to exceed 15 minutes each: Senator COHEN and Senator PROXMIRE.

There will be routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

At 12 noon, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 1200, the immigration bill. Rollcall votes can be expected.

At 2:30 by unanimous consent of the Senate, the Senate will vote on the cloture motion to proceed to the anti-apartheid conference report—revisited—with a mandatory quorum under rule XXII being waived. At that time, the immigration bill will be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

I advise that rollcall votes can be expected throughout the day's session and there is a possibility of a later session this evening in order that we might try to complete action on the immigration bill. That is not evidence of any zeal on my part because I think now that the bill is laid down—and with the schedule we have—it is obvious we are going to have to process it one way or the other—either today or tomorrow—because certainly as we get into next week, with Superfund, the farm bill, appropriations, reconciliation, and things that will take a great deal of time, there will be little other window of opportunity there.

So that is the expressed wish. For those who want to get back to their districts tomorrow, we can conclude this today, and certainly will do so by tomorrow.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I see Senator COHEN is here for his special order. Our colleague from Ohio has asked me to yield just several minutes to him in commemoration of something that would stir your bosom, and that is baseball and Pete Rose.

So with that, if I may yield to my colleague from Ohio, I do yield from my time for that purpose. I yield as much time as may be required as long as I remain a cosponsor of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KASTEN). The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. GLENN. The acting majority leader will indeed be a cosponsor. I appreciate that very much, and I appreciate the Senator yielding time for that purpose. I appreciate the Senator from Maine yielding his position on the calendar this morning.

This will not take very long.

TRIBUTE TO PETE ROSE

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 61) to commend Pete Rose on becoming the all-time major league leader in base hits.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. GLENN. I indicate, Mr. President, that this has been cleared for action on the floor this morning by unanimous consent, I believe.

Mr. President, today I take great pleasure in introducing a Senate concurrent resolution which recognizes a great baseball achiever and an incredible baseball achievement. Last night, Ohio native and Cincinnati Red, Pete Rose, became the all-time major league leader in base hits by surpassing a baseball record that had long been considered unbreakable: Ty Cobb's record of 4,191 hits.

Now Ty Cobb was a great ballplayer—and since he played for the Detroit Tigers, I know my colleagues from Michigan are surely proud of him. But we in the Buckeye State are equally proud of Pete—and I know I speak for all of us when I say that while baseball fans in Detroit may have had the Georgia Peach, baseball fans in Ohio are delighted that we have the Cincinnati Rose.

Pete Rose epitomizes the great American athletic tradition of commitment to excellence. Through his dedication to constant improvement, his head-first-style hustle, and his incredible desire to succeed, he has transformed himself from a young, promising prospect with supposedly average God-given abilities to one of major league baseball's alltime best players.

Pete holds so many records that I am sure the Hall of Fame in Cooperstown could devote a whole wing to documenting them. While I will not attempt to do that here, I would like to mention several records that particularly impress me. Besides being the newly crowned leader in hits, this current manager/first baseman of the Cincinnati Reds holds alltime major league records that include the most games played, the most singles, the most hits by a switchhitter, the most total bases by a switchhitter, and the most seasons with 200 or more hits. And, true to form, Charlie Hustle, as he is known, has played in the most winning games.

With these records in mind, most knowledgeable baseball people believe that he will be a first-ballot inductee into the Hall of Fame. In fact, it is even within the realm of the possible that he will become the first player to be unanimously chosen to enter this place of baseball honor. However, before he can qualify for the Hall of Fame, he must retire and, I must say, I have my doubts. The more I see and hear about Pete, the more I have come to believe that he will be able to play as long as he is able to hold a bat in his hand. To me, as senior Democratic member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, he serves as a wonderful reminder that age has little to do with productivity.

Even if he eventually does retire, it is my understanding that his sons, Pete Junior and Ty, appropriately, might well carry on the Rose baseball tradition. It is with great pleasure that I recognize Pete Rose for the latest and greatest of his accomplishments. I am also delighted to say that Senator METZENBAUM is joining me in offering this resolution, and that our colleague from Ohio, Congressman TOM LUKEN, is introducing it in the House of Representatives. I hope all our colleagues will join us in paying tribute to this true baseball giant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 61) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. CON. RES. 61

TO COMMEND PETE ROSE ON BECOMING THE ALL-TIME MAJOR LEAGUE LEADER IN BASE HITS

Whereas Peter Edward Rose has become the all-time leader in base hits in the history of the American pastime, Major League Baseball, by surpassing the record of four thousand one hundred and ninety-one of the great Ty Cobb;

Whereas Pete Rose has played in more winning games than any other player in Major League history;

Whereas Pete Rose won three National League batting titles in 1968, 1969, and 1973;

Whereas Pete Rose was named National League Rookie of the Year in 1963, National League Most Valuable Player in 1973, and the World Series Most Valuable Player in 1975;

Whereas Pete Rose was named the National League Player of the Decade for the period 1970 through 1979 by the "The Sporting News";

Whereas Pete Rose has been named to the National League All-Star Team sixteen times, including ten straight years (1973 through 1982), and has started at five different positions in All-Star games;

Whereas Pete Rose has played in seven National League Championship Series and six World Series; and

Whereas Pete Rose holds all-time Major League records for most games played; for most at-bats; for most singles; for most hits by a switch-hitter; for most total bases by a switch-hitter; for most seasons of two hundred or more hits; for most seasons of one hundred and fifty or more games; and for highest fielding percentage by an outfielder for one thousand or more games: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress to commend Peter Edward Rose on the achievement of becoming the all-time Major League leader in base hits and to recognize all the accomplishments and the inspirational manner in which Pete Rose has played the game of baseball, the National Pastime.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to Peter Edward Rose.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

RESERVATION OF MINORITY LEADER'S TIME

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BYRD's leadership time be reserved for his use until later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN].

COMMENDING THE PRESIDENT ON HIS PROMOTION OF MITCHELL DANIELS, JR.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I rise at this time to commend the President on his decision to appoint Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr., as his new Assistant for Political and Intergovernmental Affairs. Mitch will succeed Ed Rollins, who will be departing this fall.

Just last April, Mitch began his tenure at the White House as Deputy Assistant to the President and Director of the Office of Intergovernmental Affairs. His quick ascendancy is a fine testament to this young man's outstanding abilities and talents.

Mitch Daniels, well known to Senators on both sides of the aisle, but particularly to majority Members, initially came to Washington in 1977. Working as administrative assistant to Senator DICK LUGAR, now our distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Mitch brought to Capitol Hill vast expertise as a municipal official and attorney in Indianapolis.

Born in Monongahela, PA, Mitch was educated at Princeton University and, in 1967, was honored as a Presidential scholar. Additionally, he holds law degrees from Indiana University School of Law and Georgetown University.

Even before this quick promotion, Mitch was noticed as someone who was progressing rapidly from one position of responsibility to another. Prior to joining the White House staff, Mitch's most recent position of achievement was that of executive director of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, where he served so brilliantly on behalf of the Senate majority. I personally am very appreciative to him for his great assistance to me during my 1984 campaign.

Because of his service as principal assistant and adviser to Senator LUGAR during his tenure as chairman of the Banking Committee's Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs, Mitch has brought to the White House a keen sensitivity to the needs and concerns of State and local officeholders. This depth of knowledge, coupled with the valuable insights he garnered not only during his service to the city of Indianapolis from his position on the mayor's staff but also since serving the President as his Intergovernmental Affairs lieutenant, uniquely qualify him for this new role of expanded authority.

I applaud his promotion to this position for which Mitch Daniels is exceptionally qualified. I wish him every success.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR COHEN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

SOVIET JEWRY CALL TO CONSCIENCE

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to once again join the congressional call to conscience in behalf of Soviet Jewry and others deprived of their basic human rights by the Soviet Government.

Consideration of this topic raises very difficult and perplexing questions, not only because of the human suffering involved, and the double standards which sometimes seem to characterize our policies where human rights issues are concerned, but also because the systematic human rights abuses perpetrated by the Soviet Government cast a dark shadow across the hope that negotiations between our two countries can reduce international tensions. We need to confront these issues squarely, for our own good, as well as that of the innumerable victims of religious and political persecution inside the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union claims that the issue of human rights is purely a domestic concern, and that the interest shown by the United States in Soviet human rights policies constitutes interference in its internal affairs. Whatever credence this argument might have had before 1975 was lost in that year, because the Soviet Union signed the Helsinki Final Act, which among other things, stipulates that the participating states will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, religion and belief. The Final Act also contains specific provisions for the reunification of families and favorable consideration of exit visas for persons deciding to marry a citizen from another participating state.

The evidence of Soviet violations of the Helsinki accords is unmistakable. Over the past 10 years the number of Soviet Jews allowed to emigrate fell from over 51,000 to 896 annually. Similarly precipitous declines in the emigration rates of Soviet citizens of Armenian and German nationality were recorded. It is estimated that there are over 400,000 Soviet citizens who have expressed an interest in emigrating from the Soviet Union.

Most of today's would-be emigrants are Jews seeking to emigrate to Israel. Many, perhaps most, of these would-be emigrants would like to be reunited with their families outside of the Soviet Union, but the Soviet Government refuses to abide by the commitment it made to "deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family * * *." Instead, applicants for exit visas are routinely deprived of their jobs, and are often subjected to other forms of official harassment, including the confiscation of personal property, and imprisonment on false charges.

At the same time, religious persecution of Jews inside the Soviet Union has increased. Numerous Jewish activists have been arrested, including 16 individuals whose only crime was the teaching of the Hebrew language. Rabbis are no longer being trained in the Soviet Union. Soviet authorities have curtailed the production of prayer shawls and other Jewish devotional articles. There has also been a distinct increase in anti-Semitic propaganda in the Soviet press, propaganda I have seen with my own eyes. This state-sponsored anti-Semitism has made a travesty of the promise the Soviets made in 1975 to "* * * respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice, alone or with others, religion or belief in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience."

The Soviets have also denied exit permission in over 20 cases of Soviet-American marriage, again despite a specific provision of the Final Act designed to protect the rights of such persons. Altogether, the human rights situation in the Soviet Union is worse today than it was 10 years ago when the Final Act of the Helsinki accords was signed.

Last year, while visiting the Soviet Union, I had the opportunity to meet with a prominent Jewish refusenik, Prof. Naum Meiman, and his wife, Inna. My acquaintance with Professor Meiman and his wife has given these grim statistics from the Soviet Union a human face, one I shall never forget.

The Meimans applied for an emigration visa in 1975, the year that the Final Act of the Helsinki accords was ratified. The Soviet Government's first response was to dismiss Professor Meiman from his position at the Institute for Theoretical and Experimental Physics in Moscow.

In the heady atmosphere following the ratification of the Final Act by the Soviet Government, Professor Meiman and 19 others formed the Moscow Helsinki Watch Group to monitor Soviet compliance of the humanitarian provisions of the Final Act. Today Professor Meiman is one of two members of this group who is not in prison, exile, or a work camp.

Professor Meiman has not gone unpunished for his participation in the Moscow Helsinki Group, however. Soviet officials have refused to allow his wife, who is slowly dying from cancer, to travel abroad to receive medical treatments which are not available in the Soviet Union. I find it difficult to imagine a more cruel or unfair punishment.

Mr. President, at the conclusion of a very long meeting with the Meimans, after a very painful discussion about what has happened to them since 1975, Mrs. Meiman said to me:

> You Americans, you are so free. You are always on the move. But for us, life is at a standstill.

Unfortunately, the Meimans predicament is shared by thousands of refuseniks and other victims of religious and political persecution in the Soviet Union.

If the magnitude of human rights violations in the Soviet Union is so great, why is there not a greater public outcry in this country? I think there are a number of reasons.

In part, it is because of the limited access accorded to Western media inside the Soviet bloc. I don't think there can be any doubt that television coverage of the war in Afghanistan, where Soviet human rights violations are most overt, would have a powerful and far-reaching effect on Western audiences.

In part, it is because most Americans do not feel responsible for, nor closely involved in, events in the Soviet Union. There is no accusation of U.S. complicity where Soviet human rights violations are concerned, as is often the case with countries that are large recipients of U.S. aid or active U.S. trading partners.

We also do not have a bitter history of religious and political persecution in this country, which might sensitize us to this issue in the same way that our national experience with racism has to that issue.

Over 2,000 years ago, Thucydides wrote:

> Men's indignation, it seems, is more excited by legal wrong than by violent wrong; the first looks like being cheated by an equal, the second like being compelled by a superior.

Perhaps this also helps to explain why Soviet human rights violations receive less attention than human rights violations in other parts of the world.

Some people feel fatalistic about the human rights situation in the Soviet Union. While aware that human rights violations occur, they believe that there is nothing that can be done about it.

The combination of these elements makes the task of mobilizing support for Soviet victims of religious and political persecution more difficult, but not less important.

At the outset, I mentioned that Soviet human rights violations raise a number of difficult and perplexing questions. One of the questions we must consider is the interaction between Soviet human rights violations and the response that they receive in the West.

The Final Act was never intended to be a purely symbolic gesture. Verifiable, concrete measures were to be implemented in the East in exchange for guarantees of increased security from the West. What will the Soviets conclude if we do not protest these human rights violations? That repression works? That even verifiable agreements with the United States can be violated with impunity?

The most perplexing question of all is how to proceed, given the delicate placement of this issue in the context of superpower relations. In his address commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords, Secretary of State George Shultz made it clear that it is not possible to compartmentalize different aspects of our relations with the Soviet Union. The Secretary made this manifest when he said:

> Security, economic ties, human rights, and contact among people are all equally important and related to each other. Peace encompasses the totality of our relations.

In this respect, Soviet human rights violations are truly a threat to all human rights.

What we must do for our own benefit, as well as that of the innumerable victims of Soviet human rights violations, is to continue to demonstrate the importance we attach to Soviet adherence to the principles of the Helsinki Final Act. We must remind the Soviets, calmly but persistently, that the difficult task of arriving at negotiated settlements to outstanding United States-Soviet problems is greatly compounded by their unwillingness to abide by the terms of agreements which have already been made. We must raise the issue of Soviet human rights violations time and time again in this forum and every other public forum we can find.

How can there be a peace between our countries that is worth the name, until we are persuaded that the Soviets are willing to respect fundamental human rights and to abide by the terms of the commitments that they have made? I urge my colleagues to bear this in mind in their consideration of United States-Soviet issues and in their meetings with Soviet officials.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

TIME FOR A BAN ON NUCLEAR TESTING

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, what is the prime reason why the time has come for the United States to negotiate a mutual, comprehensive, verifiable end to weapons testing? Is it because our country has twice solemnly promised to do exactly that in two treaties, each signed by the President of the United States, one of which has been ratified by the U.S. Senate? No. That is a compelling reason—but not the prime reason.

Is it because the restraint exercised by nonnuclear weapons states in accepting the nonproliferation policy espoused by countries that have nuclear weapons is based on the promise by the superpowers to negotiate effective arms control agreements—the heart of which is a ban on nuclear testing?

What, then, is the prime reason the United States should promptly negotiate an end to nuclear weapons testing? The answer appears in a recent New York Times article written by William J. Broad. The article does not report an appeal to stop nuclear testing. But a few minutes' reflection on the substance of the article should persuade any sane human being that the time has come to yell "Stop; no more," at the top of our lungs.

The headline of the article shouts: "U.S. Nuclear Weapon Development Continues at Furious Pace." The article reports a series of new nuclear weapon developments that make the weapons that have absorbed 99 percent of our attention seem like innocent Fourth of July fireworks. For example the supernuclear weapons laboratory at Livermore, CA, is working on the development of an antimatter bomb that dwarfs the atomic bomb and even the hydrogen bomb in almost infinite destructive power. The A-bomb and H-bomb explode only a tiny fraction less than 1 percent, of the potential energy when they are fired. But when the scientists perfect antimatter bombs, they set off a complete, 100-percent, liberation of energy that dwarfs in destructive power even the awesome hydrogen bomb.

Now, since the hydrogen bomb has for years been able to strike with millions of tons of TNT and since both superpowers have thousands of these monsters, what new threat do the antimatter bombs represent? The answer is that the antimatter bomb could, as William Broad points out, "be made extremely small yet retain great power." So what is new? What is new is that the antimatter bomb, once perfected, can be delivered very cheaply indeed. No 6,000-mile missile shot over the North Pole, no $200 million bomber necessary to carry it, no $1.8 billion Trident submarine necessary to slide invisibly and quietly along the bottom of the ocean and fire off-shore salvos. Each of these well-known nuclear delivery systems has its immense cost and at least some degree of vulnerability. But the antimatter bomb can, in the words of the New York Times article, "be made extremely small and yet retain great power." That means two things. This will be a weapon against which there is no defense. It does not have to move by bomber or submarine or missile. A lone individual can carry it, concealed on his person. A few such individuals could easily, quickly, and completely destroy our country.

Of course, some Senators will say, "Wait a cotton-pickin minute, PROXMIRE. You argue that the reason we should negotiate a ban on nuclear testing is because that testing will permit the perfection of an antimatter bomb that the United States is developing. Why wouldn't that antimatter supreme bomb be exactly what we need? Wouldn't it give us a big military advantage over the Soviet Union?"

The answer to that one is that, without exception, every advance this country has achieved in nuclear weapons has consistently been picked up by the U.S.S.R. within a very few years. Why should the antimatter bomb be any exception? It will not. So we should negotiate a mutual stop now. We should work with all our heart to make that ban on nuclear testing effective.

Once these antimatter bombs are developed, they will, within a few years, be cheap and then accessible for any fanatic dictator—in Syria, Libya, Iran, Iraq, North Korea—and on and on. Can we stop it? Yes. How? Here's how. Like any other new weapon system it will have to be tested. We can stop those tests now. We can negotiate a mutual, comprehensive and especially a verifiable ban on nuclear weapons testing. And we can devote the marvelous genius of our scientists not to the development of ever more destructive nuclear weapons but to the constant improvement of our verification capability to make certain that both sides comply with the ban on nuclear weapons testing.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I referred by William Broad in the New York Times be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. NUCLEAR WEAPON DEVELOPMENT CONTINUES AT FURIOUS PACE

(By William J. Broad)

NEW YORK, NY.—The military creativity that shook the earth 40 years ago with detonation of the atomic bomb is in the midst of a renaissance today.

According to weapon scientists and federal officials, new kinds of nuclear arms are being imagined, developed and tested at a furious pace.

Recent developments reflect an evolution away from the brute force of a huge explosion toward ways of harnessing nuclear explosions for specific tasks.

There are the often-described X-ray lasers in which a nuclear explosion is the power source for creation of deadly beams of radiation. There are much less talked about, more exotic, designs for anti-matter weapons to efficiently annihilate matter, and even brain bombs, whose purpose would be to confuse enemy minds.

While nuclear weaponry becomes almost unrecognizably sophisticated, the public imagination remains fixed on the original bombs and mushroom clouds. It is a gap that worries some opponents of the current quest for new arms.

"I find it alarming that so many people think the development of nuclear weapons is a limited field," said Theodore B. Taylor, formerly an atomic physicist at the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, birthplace of the bomb. "You can enhance or suppress literally dozens of classes of energy released by nuclear explosions."

The design of nuclear weapons is a secretive business. It occurs at government laboratories where documents are kept in safes, doors are equipped with combination locks, and fences are topped with barbed wire. The weapons themselves are detonated deep underground in carefully monitored tests at the government's nuclear test site in the Nevada desert.

No one advertises successes or failures. Nonetheless, a review of public documents and interviews with government scientists, federal officials, and weapon experts outside government reveals several distinct types of weapons tested or proposed in the nuclear era.

Atom Bombs. The first nuclear device was detonated July 16, 1945, in the darkness of the central New Mexico desert. Its force was equivalent to approximately 18,000 tons of TNT. That and the devices that devastated Hiroshima, Japan, on Aug. 6, 1945, and Nagasaki, Japan, three days later were all A-bombs, known as fission weapons, which split heavy atoms to liberate nuclear energy. The Hiroshima bomb was powered by uranium, though, and the Nagasaki bomb by plutonium.

Hydrogen Bombs. The next major step was the H-bomb, which derives its energy by fusing together isotopes of hydrogen to release more of the energy stored in the nucleus of the atom. (Fission splits an atom's nucleus into fragments; fusion forces nuclei together.)

The world's first H-bomb was exploded in 1952 in a test. The 10-megaton blast caused the Pacific isle of Elugelab, one mile in diameter, to disappear. The power was roughly a thousand times what hit Hiroshima. The bomb was also big, weighing a reported 62 tons.

But H-bombs soon became portable, to the point where they could be put on missiles. A "bomb" is dropped from an airplane, while a "warhead" is dispatched on a missile—but for security reasons the distinction is blurred, as it will be in what follows here.

Cobalt Bombs. In the 1950s, as designers of nuclear weapons pondered new possibilities, they talked of making bombs with enhanced radioactive fallout, known as residual radiation. All it took was wrapping an H-bomb with cobalt, a metallic element easily turned into its radioactive isotope, cobalt 60, when exposed to H-bomb radiation. It is not known whether cobalt bombs were ever made or stocked by any nation.

Neutron Bombs. A special type of H-bomb that did go into production is the neutron bomb, which emits "prompt" or momentary radiation. In the mid-1950s, work on the idea was spearheaded by Samuel T. Cohen, a Defense Department consultant. In normal fission, blast and heat make up the great bulk of the energy released, while flash radiation accounts for only 5%. Cohen's idea allowed a bomb to release 6 to 10 times as much neutron radiation, to kill tank crews by radiation.

X-Ray Warheads. In the late 1960s and early 1970s special nuclear warheads were developed that generate enhanced radiation in the X-ray portion of the electromagnetic spectrum, with the aim of knocking out distant enemy warheads. Rapid absorption of X-rays in the outer part of the warhead causes a mechanical effect something like a hammer blow, says Taylor. Enhanced X-ray warheads were fitted atop interceptors of the $5.7 billion Safeguard anti-ballistic missile system, built in North Dakota and eventually abandoned.

Reduced Residual Radiation Bombs. In the 1970s, scientists at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California developed a tactical warhead dramatically reducing fallout. Andre Gsponer, director of the Independent Scientific Research Institue, in Geneva, Switzerland, says the bomb also "exploits to the maximum the mechanical effect, which is decisive on the battlefield."

Anti-Satellite Weapons. Not all steps in the evolution of nuclear weaponry involve fundamental changes in materials and methods. Most involve refinements. For instance, according to the Livermore publication "Energy and Technology Review," the laboratory has designed and tested a lightweight, low-yield fission device that might serve as the warhead for an anti-satellite weapon.

THIRD GENERATION WEAPONS

A radical departure from A-bombs and H-bombs is a new generation of nuclear weapons that focuses the power of nuclear explosions, rather than letting the force escape in all directions. At the Livermore laboratory, a team of young scientists headed by Lowell L. Wood has pioneered these weapons.

X-Ray Lasers. The premier third-generation device is the X-ray laser, which channels the power of a nuclear explosion into laser rods that emit powerful bursts of concentrated radiation before the whole device is consumed in its nuclear fireball. Unlike regular X-rays, the radiation in an X-ray laser is "coherent": All its electromagnetic waves are in step with one another. According to the Livermore scientists, clusters of X-ray lasers could shoot beams of radiation across thousands of miles of space to stop an entire force of strategic Soviet missiles.

Skeptics say such X-ray lasers could be foiled by simple countermeasures. The weapons have reportedly been tested on at least four occasions in underground tests.

EMP Bombs. Less developed than X-ray lasers are third-generation weapons meant to create an enhanced electromagnetic pulse, or EMP. This powerful surge of electro magnetism can knock out computers and delicate electronics. It is produced by an nuclear weapon exploded above the Earth's atmosphere, its pulse blanketing the area below. For decades, military men in both East and West have struggled to protect critical equipment against this destructive power. According to the experts, the goal of current EMP research is to enhance the pulse to overcome such protection and sow chaos during war.

Microwave Weapons. Similar to EMP bombs, microwave weapons concentrate nuclear energy into a narrower band of frequencies of the electromagnetic spectrum, in order to try to knock out enemy missiles. If hit by a powerful pulse of energy, the delicate electronics of a missile might be ruined.

Particle Beam Weapons. Particle beam weapons focus on matter, trying to accelerate subatomic particles to nearly the speed of light. This may have promise for use in President Reagan's proposed missile defense known as "Star Wars."

Gamma-Ray Lasers. A futuristic device now said by scientists to be the focus of intense interest is the gamma-ray laser, which would send out powerful beams. Its coherent radiation would have a wavelength shorter than that of the X-ray lasers, thus more powerful.

Anti-Matter Bombs. According to Gsponer in Switzerland, the military's interest in anti-matter weapons stems from the great energy released when particles of anti-matter collide with those of matter. In the fission and fusion reactions of nuclear weapons, only a tiny fraction of matter is turned into energy, spectacular as this is. But reactions between matter and anti-matter produce a complete liberation of energy. If perfected, anti-matter bombs could be made extremely small yet retain great power.

Brain Bombs. According to John Nuckolls, head of physics at the Livermore laboratory, human beings suffer confusion and disorientation when subjected to long wavelength radiation of great strength. So physicists might one day find a way to direct and concentrate the power from nuclear weapons into this part of the electromagnetic spectrum, and produce a bomb that would leave an enemy stunned, unable to wage war.

With many of these 14 weapon concepts, especially the latter ones, it is unclear whether proposals have gotten to the development and testing stage. However, William Hoover, a retired Air Force major general who is assistant secretary for defense programs at the Department of Energy, said tests were being conducted not only of X-ray lasers but also of other third-generation weapons.

Weapon builders say it is important to know all the nuclear possibilities, if only to forestall the chance that the Soviets might come up with technical breakthroughs that could be used in a surprise attack. They note that the Russians do not talk about their nuclear weaponry.

Critics say it would be better to halt the nuclear arms race by negotiating a ban on testing such weapons. "It would help stop or slow down troublesome developments on the horizon," said Taylor.

MYTH OF THE DAY: THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DISPENSES EQUAL JUSTICE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the myth of the day is that justice is blind. Both Ronald Reagan and his Attorney General, Ed Meese, have announced that they believe in applying the law equally and toughly to all who violate it. Is that the fact? No. The fact is that, as administered by this administration, justice peeks under her blindfold to determine whether a criminal wears a suit and tie or dungarees and a ski mask. Three recent examples expose the President and Attorney General as Homers—and I mean like Homer, author of the Iliad and the Odyssey—that is, spinners of myths.

In a plea agreement with the Justice Department in May, E.F. Hutton pleaded guilty to defrauding some 400 banks of at least $8 million between 1980 and 1982. The company agreed to pay back the $8 million plus a fine and court costs totalling $2.75 million. In other words, the company was required to repay the money it stole plus roughly the amount it earned in interest on that money between 1980 and 1985.

No individuals were prosecuted, even though the Justice Department acknowledged that two identifiable individuals were responsible for the scheme "in a criminal sense." Mr. President, let us not forget, corporations do not commit crimes—people do. Imagine, if you will, the outrage that we would all feel if the Justice Department agreed to let an armed bank robber go free so long as he promised to repay the money he had stolen, plus any interest he had earned on it.

In a second recent episode, General Electric, the Nation's sixth largest defense contractor, pleaded guilty to defrauding the Air Force of some $800,000 by doctoring its books on the Minuteman missile project. What individual person was prosecuted? No one. No individuals were prosecuted. Who went to jail? No one. Nobody went to jail, as GE continued its trip around the defense monopoly board. Instead, the Government settled for $2 million in penalties. Was that a stiff penalty? Mr. President, GE turns a profit of $2 million every 8 hours.

Finally, in July, an internal Pentagon memorandum revealed that of 400 cases of suspected defense contractor fraud uncovered over the last 5 years, only 11 had resulted in prosecutions. In other words, Mr. President, defense contractor fraud does pay. It is one of the safest games in town. Even if the Pentagon catches you, there is less than a 3-percent chance you will be brought to justice. And, as the previous examples demonstrate, even if you are prosecuted, you will walk away free, with an undiminished profit forecast.

The lesson of these three incidents is that the Reagan administration has a double standard in law enforcement—one for its friends and fellow corporate board members and one for less privileged criminals, with whom it deals far more harshly. This double standard mocks the administration's tough talk on crime. Truly tough law enforcement requires that all of the guilty, whether rich or poor politically connected or alienated, receive equal treatment. Anything less breeds disrespect for the rule of law and increases lawlessness. Unfortunately, this administration has not learned this lesson; it continues to mistake myth for reality.

REPORT ON UGANDA

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, an article in the August 3 Economist reports that Lt. Gen. Tito Okello's overthrow of President Milton Obote may not end the tribal violence and warfare in Uganda.

President Obote won a rigged election in 1980 after President Nyerere of Tanzania ousted Idi Amin. Now, Obote has fled to Kenya.

The Economist points out that Obote's loss could be Uganda's gain. Amnesty International claims that Obote continued the killing and torture Amin had begun. Elliot Abrams, an Under Secretary of State, believes that more than 100,000 Ugandans have been killed in recent years in a genocidal campaign. According to Abrams, "large-scale civilian massacres, forced starvation, and impeded humanitarian relief operations" caused many of the deaths.

One can hope that General Okello's rise to power will end the mass killings, but the tribal rivalry that lay behind the earlier violence still exists.

Obote is a member of the Langi tribe. Although when he began his rule in 1980 foreign observers believed he would not favor any one tribe, he always favored the Langi.

Okello is a member of the Acholi tribe. He was President Obote's army chief, but the Acholi and the Langi disputed over promotions. The Acholi also complained that Obote used them as cannon fodder in the fight against guerrillas of the National Resistance Army.

We can hope that General Okello will reach out to peoples of the Acholi, the Langi, and the Baganda—a third important tribe, but a message on the state-run radio on the day after the coup left little room for hope. "Fellow Ugandans," a soldier said, "we are leaving no stone uncovered to recover the lives or bodies of Acholi officers." Only later did the announcer add "Acholi and other tribes' officers."

Mr. President, the violence in Uganda proves all the more upsetting when one considers its potential as a nation. While other parts of Africa starve because of drought, most of Uganda has abundant rain, freshwater lakes, and fertile soil. While many African countries lack educated people, the Bagandas are some of the best-educated people in Africa. While many African nations fear their neighbors, Uganda's problems are internal.

Mr. President, we have witnessed genocide after genocide in Uganda. We have seen a potentially great nation self-destruct in tribal violence. We have observed while hundreds of thousands of Ugandans have died.

I hope that General Okello changes this situation. He has promised to hold elections within a year and to revitilize the economy. I wish him well in his efforts.

But, Mr. President, if we had signed the Genocide Convention earlier, we could have changed the situation before General Okello felt compelled to overthrow Obote. Just warning Obote that we were considering accusing him of genocide might have improved the situation. Instead, we can only pray that General Okello will end the cycle of killing.

Mr. President, I implore the Senate to ratify the Genocide Convention so that we can work to stamp out all evidence of genocide.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

SOLIDARITY WITH THE SAKHAROV FAMILY

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I send a concurrent resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. I should state that it has been cleared by both the majority and minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 62) expressing solidarity with the Sakharov family in their efforts to exercise their rights of freedom of expression, of travel, and of communication, as guaranteed them under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the distinguished junior Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], I am pleased to submit this resolution and ask for its unanimous adoption by this body.

Mr. President, for the past 14 days there has been an individual standing on the corner of 16th and K Streets in Washington, DC, protesting the Soviet Government's treatment of his parents.

For 14 days, Alex Semyonov has been conducting a hunger strike to protest the Soviet Union's persecution of his parents, Dr. Andrei Sakharov and Dr. Elena Bonner.

All that Alex is asking is for the Soviet authorities to allow him to visit his parents. All that Alex is asking is for the Soviet authorities to allow his parents to communicate with him—to let him and other members of his family know how they are doing. Yet, for the past 6 months the Soviet Government has not allowed one word to be communicated by the Sakharovs to their loved ones in the West.

On Tuesday of this week, I met with Alex and his 88-year-old grandmother—Elena Bonner's mother. Many of my colleagues had a chance to visit with them both in the reception room off the Chamber. I know they were impressed, as was I, with the act of courage and concern that Alex was demonstrating on behalf of his parents—an act which no human being should be forced to undertake, but one which became necessary because of the inhumane action of the Soviet Government.

That is why we are offering this resolution condemning the Soviet Union's violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The resolution urges the President to protest, in the strongest possible terms and at the highest levels, the blatant and repeated violations of the Sakharov's rights by the Soviet authorities.

In addition, we call upon all other signatory nations of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to join in such protests.

Following my conversation with Alex and his grandmother, I sent the following letter to Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin. I would like to share with my colleagues what I said to the Ambassador:

Mr. Ambassador: Earlier today, I visited with the Sakharov's son, Alex Semyonov, who has entered his second week of a hunger strike near your embassy. I want to express my solidarity with his cause and his efforts to secure the release of his parents from internal exile and my hope that both will be allowed to come to the United States.

Your government has striven for decades to achieve international recognition as an equal among the nations of the world. Granted, the Soviet Union has built one of the greatest nuclear arsenals ever created by mankind. Yet, the treatment of your citizens does not send a message of strength to the world, but one of weakness.

I am a staunch supporter of arms control agreements between our two nations. However, a nation which cannot live at peace with its own citizens cast doubts on its willingness to live at peace with the rest of the world.

As long as the persecution of the Sakharovs and thousands of others of your countrymen continue, then the acceptance of the Soviet Union as an equal among the world community of nations will never be truly realized. I believe your government is making a tragic blunder with the continued concealment from the world community as to what has happened to the Sakharovs.

Therefore, I urge that you convey to Secretary General Mikhail Gorbachev my views and my hope that the Sakharovs be allowed to leave the Soviet Union and be reunited with their family in the United States.

Mr. President, it is my belief that we in the Senate and in Congress must take every opportunity available to us to impress upon the Soviet Union that this is not an internal matter that they can lightly ignore. Helsinki changed all that. After all, it was the Soviet Union which pressed for the agreement known as the Helsinki accords.

Having done so, and having pledged itself with the signatures of its own leadership to abide by all the elements of the Final Act, the Soviet Union forfeited any right to claim that the treatment of its own citizens was an internal matter. I believe it is imperative that we hold them accountable.

Mr. President, there may be differences in this body and with the administration on arms control matters, but we know that we are united on the issue of Soviet treatment of its own citizens. We are all united in our efforts to achieve the release of the Sakharovs.

I believe that this resolution, which has also been sponsored by my good friend, Congressman BARNEY FRANK, in the House, sends that message as strongly and as clearly as we can.

I urge the immediate adoption of this resolution.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of this joint resolution introduced by the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts. This resolution expresses the concern of the Congress and of the American people over the Kremlin's lawless treatment of Andrei Sakharov and his wife Elena Bonner. It calls upon the President to do all in his power to make the Soviet leaders aware of our outrage at the almost total isolation of the Sakharovs.

My attention was drawn once again to the Sakharovs' plight by the fast undertaken by Aleksei Semyonov, Elena Bonner's son. Impelled by fear that the Sakharovs may have disappeared—and by a desire to pressure the Soviets to give his family real access to them—Aleksei began his fast on September 1. Although officials from both the White House and the State Department have recently met with Aleksei to express concern and support for the Sakharovs, the Soviets continue to stonewall.

By now, the Sakharov family is all too familiar with protest hunger-strikes: in 1981, Elena Bonner and Andrei Sakharov got an exit visa for Liza Alekseeva, Aleksei's fiancee; last year, Andrei Sakharov began to fast in an attempt to gain permission for Elena Bonner to go West for glaucoma treatment.

In this regard, it is important to note that, in the 1970's, the Kremlin allowed Elena Bonner to go to Italy three times for her treatments, without hunger strikes. Now, the Sakharovs seem to have vanished. They did not even send greetings to Elena's mother, Ruf, on her 85th birthday.

The Sakharov case has been raised by our Government at all levels—including the highest—at every opportunity with the Soviets. As noted in this resolution, the Sakharovs' plight has been raised at various CSCE meetings. Yet the Soviets turn a deaf ear to all interventions for Andrei Sakharov, winner of the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize. it is, nevertheless, our moral duty to do all we can to make the Soviets understand that their Andrei Sakharov problem will not go away. The world will not forget Andrei Sakharov and Elena Bonner. Nor will the world forget the way the Kremlin has maltreated these brave and humane people.

I call upon my colleagues to join me in support of this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 62

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), Expressing solidarity with the Sakharov family in their efforts to exercise their rights of freedom of expression, of travel, and of communication, as guaranteed them under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Whereas, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights guarantees to all the rights of freedom of thought, conscience, religion, opinion and expression;

Whereas, this same Declaration states that "no one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention, or exile;" and that "no one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence;"

Whereas, the Declaration further states that "everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State," and that "everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country;"

Whereas, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides that "everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence," and that "everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own," and that "no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter his own country;"

Whereas, the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe provided that each of the "participating states will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought (and) conscience . . . for all," and recognized that all human rights "derive from the inherent dignity of the human person;"

Whereas, this same Act pledged that the participating states would "deal in a positive and a humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family, with special attention being given to requests of an urgent character—such as requests submitted by persons who are ill or old;"

Whereas, the Act further commits participating states "to facilitate wider travel by their citizens for personal or professional reasons;"

Whereas, the Act specifically affirms the "right of the individual to know and act upon his rights and duties" under the agreement and affirms the positive role individuals play in the implementation of the Act;

Whereas, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics signed the Final Act of the Conference on Cooperation and Security in Europe, is a party to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and has ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

Whereas, Nobel Laureate Andrei Sakharov, who, exercising his right as an individual to monitor compliance with the Final Act, had become a leader of the human rights movement in the Soviet Union, was arrested and exiled to Gorky in direct contravention of the above-mentioned human rights agreements;

Whereas, his wife Elena Bonner, as a result of her efforts to exercise her right of self-expression, has been detained and charged with anti-Soviet agitation;

Whereas, Dr. Bonner is thought to be in urgent need of medical attention available only in the West;

Whereas, Dr. Sakharov is reported to have undertaken a hunger strike, to the point of endangering his health;

Whereas, communication between the Sakharovs in the Soviet Union and their children and stepchildren in the United States has been repeatedly interrupted, delayed, and tampered with by the Soviet authorities;

Whereas, the absence of reliable communications between the branches of the family has created serious doubt as to the state of well-being of Dr. Sakharov and Dr. Bonner;

Whereas, Mr. Alexei Semyonov, the stepson of Dr. Sakharov and the son of Dr. Bonner, has embarked on a hunger strike to dramatize the plight of his family and to protest the cruel obstruction of his efforts to communicate with his loved ones;

Whereas, Mr. Semyonov has demanded a visitor's visa to visit the Soviet Union so that he can reassure himself with his own eyes that his parents are alive and well; Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the Sense of the Congress that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Soviet Union should drop all charges against Dr. Elean Bonner, restore to her and Dr. Andrei Sakharov the full rights to travel (domestic and international) and free expression, allow unimpeded correspondence between them and their relatives and friends in the West, and allow Alexei Semyonov permission to visit them in the Soviet Union.

The Congress urges the President—

(1) to protect, in the strongest possible terms and at the highest levels, the blatant and repeated violations of the Sakharov's rights by the Soviet authorities, and

(2) to call upon all other signatory nations of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to join in such protests.

The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit copies of this resolution to the Ambassador of the Soviet Union to the United States and to the Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TRADE IMBALANCE

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to express my dismay at the soaring trade deficit, and more importantly, the negative impact that it is having on American jobs.

I just spent the past 5 weeks back in Wisconsin. During that time, the administration issued its decision not to tighten the important restrictions on foreign shoes. Workers throughout the State—both those who have already lost their jobs and those whose jobs are threatened—were outraged.

Mr. President, the people of Wisconsin are right to be concerned about the flood of imports coming into the United States. They understand that if we don't close the floodgate soon their jobs may be washed away. The administration's decision only makes this current of unfair trade even stronger.

Wisconsin workers know that we have an imbalance in trade because we have left the door wide open to imports. They also know that those same countries whose products are taking over our markets refuse to import many of the products made here in the United States.

Now I have said it before and I will say it again—I believe in free trade. But when other nations are not willing to give the same treatment to our products that we give to theirs, free trade comes at the expense of fair trade. And American jobs become our biggest export.

We must protect our workforce by insisting that our trading partners play fair. By showing that we are willing to treat them with some reciprocity, they just may come to see the virtues of free trade.

Mr. President, the precedent set forth by the administration's decision not to follow the ITC's recommendations for import restrictions on foreign footwear is a dangerous one. Does the administration really want to send a signal to American industry that the ITC process doesn't work? Do they really want to give American industry no alternative other than to come to Congress for relief?

Industries other than footwear have been hurt by these unfair trade practices. The American textile industry has been suffering since 1980. There has been a 19-percent average increase in annual textile import growth. That growth has surged to 65 percent in each of the past 2 years. Now imports control over 50 percent of the American clothing market.

As a result, 250 textile factories have closed for good in the United States. The statistics are even worse when you look at the number of people left jobless. A whopping 300,000 jobs have been lost since 1980.

In the State of Wisconsin, 14,800 jobs are dependent upon the State's textile and apparel industries, which include Oshkrosh B'Gosh, Wigwam in Sheboygan, and Jockey International in Kenosha. Where do these people go for relief? As the administration's lack of action on footwear demonstrates, the ITC process has become a dead-end.

That is why today, I have decided to join the majority of my colleagues who have cosponsored S. 680, the "Textile and Apparel Act of 1985."

Mr. President, unless Congress acts soon, we run the risk of losing an industry vital not only to Wisconsin, but also to America. We cannot afford to put thousands of Americans out of work. With the passage of S. 680, we can avoid such a disaster.

It has become clear that Congress must take the lead in fighting for balanced and free trade. I will continue to push for relief for the shoe industry and to bring this textile bill to the Senate floor. But our final goal must be the formulation of an effective trade policy that encourages our trading partners to break down their own trade barriers.

When our trading partners get a taste of their own medicine and realize the effects that import restrictions can have on their own economies, then they may come to understand the importance of free trade. Only then will American workers be truly free to compete.

Therefore, Mr. President, today I have become a cosponsor of S. 680, the Textile and Apparel Act of 1985, and will work for its passage in the U.S. Senate.

ANTI-APARTHEID ACTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, the South African Government regrettably continues to embrace the racist policy of apartheid. The systematic repression of 21 million blacks in South Africa by the white minority government is fundamentally inconsistent with the basic values which we as Americans stand for—including the right to vote and freedom of movement. The time has come for us to send an unmistakably strong message to Pretoria that we will no longer conduct normal business and diplomatic relations with a government which continues brutally to repress a majority of its people. That is why it is imperative, in my view, that the Senate push ahead with its plans to debate—and ultimately enact—a tough sanctions bill against South Africa.

Before the Senate reconvened on September 9 to consider the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985, President Reagan continued to defend his administration's failed policy of constructive engagement. The failure of that policy to encourage peaceful change in South Africa has become increasingly clear over the course of this year. Six hundred and seventy-five people have died in South Africa in the last 10 months as a result of civil unrest; over 2,500 have been detained since the state of emergency was decreed on July 21. And if there were any lingering doubts concerning the effect of President Reagan's constructive engagement policy on the Pretoria government, they were clearly dispelled by President Botha's hard-line speech in Durban on August 15.

The Congress, in a clear repudiation of this administration's South African policy, has drafted legislation which would put the Pretoria government on notice that there is a price to be paid for continued intransigence. The Anti-Apartheid Action Act of 1985 would impose several punitive sanctions against South Africa, while holding out the threat of future sanctions if progress in dismantling apartheid were not made. This legislation was carefully crafted during consideration in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Senate Banking Committee, and the floor of the Senate where it passed by a vote of 80 to 12. After working out differences between the House and Senate versions of the bill, the House of Representatives adopted the compromise bill on August 1 by an overwhelming vote of 380 to 48.

The intent of this legislation is straightforward. It is to send a clear signal that continued adherence to apartheid is incompatible with normal relations with the United States. The ban on the sale of Krugerrands, denial of new bank loans and computer sales to the South African Government, and a requirement that all U.S. companies operating in South Africa treat blacks fairly—the so-called Sullivan Principles—are all aimed at encouraging reform of apartheid. Most importantly, the Senate legislation contains a clear commitment to further sanctions if progress is not made in dismantling apartheid.

The President's 11th hour conversion to the need for sanctions does not diminish the fact that his administration's South African policy has not succeeded in reversing racial discrimination in South Africa. Nor can the President's last minute embrace of sanctions be seen as anything more than a tactical attempt to avoid a defeat on this issue on Capitol Hill. The White House's new rhetorical policy does not reflect the severity of the situation in South Africa, nor the depth of the American people's opposition to apartheid. It is too little and too late. If the President seriously wants to speak plainly to South Africa, he should sign the Anti-Apartheid Action Act of 1985 into law.

Sanctions are not an end in themselves. They represent a means by which we can encourage peaceful change in South Africa. President Botha's refusal to embrace even mild reforms in his August 15 policy speech indicate that tough measures rather than empty rhetoric is the only means by which we can hope to influence events there. A recent Gallup survey in South Africa indicated that the majority of blacks now support U.S. sanctions, as does Nobel Peace Prize winner Bishop Desmond Tutu. And just last month, four major South African business organizations urged the Government to negotiate with the whole spectrum of accepted black leaders and to lift the emergency decree. They clearly recognize that there will be no resolution of South Africa's financial problems without political reform. Continued pressure—including sanctions—is necessary to achieve this.

It is said that the art of diplomacy is to recognize the inevitable and take advantage of it. Change in South Africa is inevitable. The issue is how that change will come about and what role the United States may play in encouraging it. Clinging to the status quo will likely result in ever greater frustration and tension within South Africa—leading ultimately perhaps to violent revolution. By clearly opposing the status quo through sanctions, we are acting not only in the interest of peaceful change, but also in our national interest—and in accordance with our deepest moral convictions.

THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON ANTI-APARTHEID

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to rise at this time to express my intention to vote against this latest cloture motion. As many of my colleagues know, I have been an ardent proponent of sanctions legislation as it relates to the South African system of apartheid. As a cosponsor of the Kennedy-Weicker sanctions bill, and through subsequent support of the Anti-Apartheid Act, I have attempted to remain consistent in my belief that it is vital that we send a clear, concise, and undeniably strong message to Pretoria. The escalating violence that has spread from black townships and engulfed virtually all regions of South Africa is a concrete testament to the fact that constructive engagement has been a failure. Even the President has seen the need for an alteration in our present policy. If only we had enjoyed White House support for our efforts last spring, we might not be carrying on this debate here today.

The debate has now shifted away from topics such as whether or not the Senate of the United States thinks that blacks ought to enjoy fundamental rights in South Africa, or whether it is appropriate for us to take action based on the internal affairs of another country, or even if this action should involve our economic relations with South Africa. No, the real discussion has moved away from sanctions altogether and toward a partisan battle fought with procedural tactics. For this reason, I have serious problems with this afternoon's vote.

In order for our efforts to make an impact upon the people and Government of South Africa, we must focus on several key factors. First of all, any sanctions must be timely in that they are designed to send a message to Pretoria that is a direct reaction to the current situation. While our message of disapproval has been long overdue, it is still important that it get through and be heard as an unconditional denunciation of apartheid. Second, the strength of our message must be great enough to make our intentions crystal clear. Because the foreign policy game is so fraught with rhetoric and hidden meanings, we cannot just give lipservice to our conviction—we must act on it. Third and most important, we, as elected representatives, must act with a clear and united voice. I believe it is in this area that we have suffered our greatest failure on this issue.

As the Anti-Apartheid Act has evolved, it has been subject to overwhelming bipartisan support. It has been steered along a very careful and calculated course that has enabled both Houses to come to a consensus. I would like to applaud the majority leader, Senator LUGAR, Senator KENNEDY, Senator WEICKER, and the others responsible for adhering to a policy that enabled many voices to be heard on the subject of apartheid, and many hands to go into the crafting of the bill we ended up with. Unfortunately, today's vote represents a departure from the process to which we should be adhering. The vote today does not concern apartheid, or even South Africa—it is a procedural, partisan vote that only stands to blur the actual message that we have so patiently been trying to send. In fact, this vote strongly resembles yesterday's motion to reconsider and the ensuing motion to table, which served only to divide, rather than unite the Senate in its deliberations.

Mr. President, on an issue that has been bipartisan in its support, I now hear one party trying to posture themselves as the unabashed defenders of what is right and good for South Africa. Why, might I ask, is the Democratic side of the aisle so willing to alienate Members such as myself that have been supportive of sanction legislation from the beginning. The answer is that we are now arguing over political turf and not the well-being of blacks in South Africa. It is simple as that and I plan to vote against this motion because I adamantly disagree with these tactics.

POLLUTION LAWS PRESERVED RIGHTS

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, it is my custom to avoid issues which are in litigation, not embrace them. But to every rule there are exceptions.

There is now pending before the Second Circuit Court of Appeals a review of the decision by the U.S. District Court for Vermont in the case of Oulette v. International Paper, 602 F. Supp. 264 (1985). One of the issues in that case is whether the enactment of the Federal Clean Water Act extinguished rights of action under other laws, including Vermont common and statutory law. Why the question should arise at all is a puzzle to this Senator since the language of the Clean Water Act is quite clear on the subject. Section 505 of the Clean Water Act establishes the right of a citizen to sue to enforce the provisions of the act, then states explicitly that other rights are undisturbed. Subsection (e) states that—

(e) Nothing in this section shall restrict any right which any person (or class of persons) may have under any statute or common law to seek enforcement of any effluent standard or limitation or to seek any other relief (including relief against the Administrator or a State agency).

Despite this clear language, at least one court has held that the act extinguishes some State common law. That court is the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, which made such a finding in Illinois v. City of Milwaukee, 731 F. 2d 403 (1984).

My purpose here is not to review the details of these and other court decisions, but to make available some legislative history which I hope will be helpful in indicating just what was intended by the Congress. This legislative history includes transcripts from the markups during 1970 and 1971 of the Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act.

The citizen suit provision was first adopted in the Clean Air Act and then, about 1 year later, incorporated in the Clean Water Act. Therefore, to completely understand what the members of the Committee on Public Works and the Congress intended, it is necessary to review transcripts and other documents relating to both laws.

The subject of preempting or displacing rights available under other laws arose for the first time on June 4, 1970, at a meeting of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution. The subcommittee was meeting to mark up what was later to become the Clean Air Act. Included in the bill before the subcommittee was a proposal to authorize citizens to file suit to force compliance with pollution control requirements. As the subcommittee members were discussing this proposal, Senator Howard Baker offered an observation and expressed a fear as follows:

Senator BAKER. The only question is whether or not you have access to the Federal courts under one of the jurisdictional requirements for diversity or jurisdictional amount or one of the other specialities. So we aren't creating a brand new cause of action. We are, rather, modifying one that already exists.

I think that brings to mind something that we should make sure we fully understand; that is, that we don't limit and circumscribe the right of citizens individually and as a class to do what they can already do by spelling it out here in this statute. If we start spelling out each detail here, the court is going to hold that we have obliterated everything else that the common law created. (Transcript Roll 15, p. 1687.)

The discussion then moves on to other subjects, but a minute or two later, Senator Baker suggests that the bill be amended.

Senator BAKER. I think you could also put in a saving clause to the effect that:

"Nothing contained in this Act shall abridge or abrogate any pre-existing right by statute or common law."

I think the courts would permit that. (Transcript Roll 15, p. 1692.)

The transcript shows no direct response to Senator Baker's suggestion at this time, but on July 29, 1970, the subcommittee was meeting again to mark up the proposed Clean Air Act. Senator Baker was absent, but there was a discussion of the meaning of the savings clause:

Senator COOPER. If I may ask another question . . . what would be embraced in equitable relief? (Would it affect) any personal rights you may have as a person, for damages.

Mr. JORLING. The intention in the language, as I understand it, is to specifically avoid any damage provisions. It is strictly an equitable provision to abate, to halt, to prevent this violation from occurring, and does not address itself to either physical or monetary damages in any way. It is strictly an action to achieve this abatement, if found, of a violation of the schedule of compliance and emission stand (sic) or emission requirement.

It does not go to the issue of damages at all, and that comes out, I think, of the whole philosophy of the Act, and that is, it is very difficult for anybody to prove personal or monetary damage resulting from the effects of air pollution.

Mr. BILLINGS. We have reserved the rights of citizens under other common law to seek damages for pollution, if such damages occur. (Transcript Roll 16, p. 0080-81.)

The two staff members responding to the questions from Senators Cooper and Spong were Leon G. Billings and Thomas Jorling. Mr. Billings, who was not a lawyer, was staff director of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution and Senator Muskie's principal aide. Mr. Jorling, a lawyer, was minority counsel to the full committee and the principal aide to the Republican members.

The transcripts contain one further reference to the savings clause, which is a statement by Senator Spong of Senator Baker's original intent. The Members were discussing whether citizens should be required to provide notice to administrative agencies as a precondition to filing suit. There had been earlier subcommittee discussions, and the members were attempting to refresh their recollections, with Senator Muskie observing at one point, "* * * we have gone through this once before. I forget just how we resolved it." (Transcript Roll 16, p. 0088.) Senator Spong recalls the following:

Senator SPONG. It is coming back to me now. Senator Baker's concern was that we could be taking a right away from a citizen . . . to go into court. . . . (Transcript Roll 16, p. 0090.)

Following subcommittee and committee markup, the bill was considered by the full Senate on September 21, 1970. As it had in the earlier stages of the legislative process, floor attention focused almost exclusively on the consequences of conferring on citizens an explicit right to sue to enforce pollution laws. Senator Philip Hart of Michigan defended the provision, which was by then section 304 of S. 4358, as "one of the most attractive features of the bill," adding that it would not result in a proliferation of litigation.

The bill makes no provision for damages to the individual. It therefore provides no incentives to suit other than to protect the health and welfare of those suing and others similarly situated. It will be the rare, rather than the ordinary, person, I suspect, who, with no hope of financial gain and the very real prospect of financial loss, will initiate court action under this bill.

(Legislative history of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1970, Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., Volume 1, p. 355.)

Senator Hart's remarks, together with the transcripts of the markups, make it clear that Senators believed that, in enacting the Clean Air Act, they were supplementing remedies available to injured parties, not supplanting them.

The House bill contained no comparable citizen suit provision. But with some changes in the Senate language, the House receded. The last sentence of the Statement of Managers on Part of the House in explanation of the section 304, the citizens' suit provision, was the following:

The right of persons (or class of persons) to seek enforcement or other relief under any statute or common law is not affected. (Id. at p. 206.)

During consideration of the Clean Water Act the following year, much less attention focused on the citizens' suit provision. That is due, in part, to the fact that the version contained in the Clean Water Act was identical to what had been enacted in the Clean Air Act, except for changes required because of differences in terminology—for example, discharges of water pollution effluent vice emissions of air pollution.

At this time, several bills were pending in the Congress to expand the rights of citizens to file class action suits. Therefore, some discussion concerned itself with the issue of whether the parenthetical phrase "(or class of persons)" might have the effect of expanding the then current law. On September 21, 1971, the Committee on Public Works held a markup of the proposed Clean Water Act amendments which had been reported by the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution. During the review of the citizens' suit provision, the following exchange took place:

Senator COOPER. Do you want to tell us against whom action may be brought and for what causes and then exceptions? Then on page 115, subsection e, you add, "Nothing shall restrict any right which any person (or class of persons) . . .". Is the right of a class of persons only available under the conditions set out in e, in other words, when they have a right under State statute or common law?

Mr. MEYER. Well, it is a parenthetical phrase.

Mr. JORLANG (sic). The intention is, as in the Air Bill, to avoid in this provision any of the complexities that are raised with cross-action (apparently class-action) suits on the basis that this is a provision that authorizes only equitable relief. There is no provision for the recovery of damages nor for requirement of showing of damages.

The provision, subsection e, provides merely that this section, the authorization granted in this section, in no way affects any rights a person has, whether or not acting alone or as a class, under any other law, statutory or common, for relief against a pollutor (sic). This would normally mean that if there are some damages, standard common law damages, and a person would like to join with a class of people that suffered similar damage, this does not prevent them from doing so. (Transcript Roll 17, p. 1617-18.)

This understanding of the savings clause was also reflected in the committee report accompanying S. 2770, which explained what was to become section 505(e) as follows:

It should be noted, however, that the section would specifically preserve any rights or remedies under any other law. Thus, if damages could be shown, other remedies would remain available. Compliance with requirements under this Act would not be a defense to a common law action for pollution damages. (Legislative History of the Water Pollution Control Act Amendments of 1972, Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., p. 1499.)

The issue of what impact, if any, the enactment of the Clean Water Act would have on the availability of other statutory or common law remedies was apparently not discussed further. However, it would seem that further discussion was unnecessary. From the first mention of the issue by Senator Baker during the subcommittee markups of the Clean Air Act to the last recorded mention of the subject in the Senate Public Works Committee report on the Clean Water Act, the attitude and intent of the members was remarkably consistent. Not once was there ever any doubt as to what they intended or disagreement as to its correctness. In every discussion of the matter, it was clear that all other rights—whether State or Federal, statutory, or common law—were to be preserved. The clarity of the repeated statements to this effect and the unanimity of agreement on the proposition made further discussion meaningless.

I might observe that this Senator was a Member of the other Chamber when the Clean Air Act amendments were adopted and a member of the Senate Committee on Public Works when the Clean Water Act amendments were considered and approved. Speaking only for himself, this Senator can recall no occassion on which it was ever suggested at the time of their consideration that the enactment of the Clean Water Act or the Clean Air Act would diminish the rights of injured parties. On the other hand, I can find a record replete with unequivocal statements by Members and staff that these rights were to be preserved, combined with clear indications of affirmation and agreement by other Senators and Representatives.

In the face of a record such as this, it seems impossible for any reasonable person to conclude that the Congress intended, by the enactment of these laws to provide the public with less protection from personal injury than it had before. Such a conclusion is directly at odds with every statement made during the long and detailed consideration of these laws. Nevertheless, some persons apparently have reached such a conclusion in the past. I would hope that in light of the information I have just provided, they will reconsider and correct earlier decisions.

Mr. President, the complete transcripts to which I have referred are available through the documents room of the Committee on Environment and Public Works should any person wish to review them.

S. 1200, THE IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT OF 1985

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1200—the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1985. This bill is the result of a 12-year effort to reform the immigration laws of the United States. It is a streamlined version of the measures that have passed in both of the last two Congresses by wide margins: In the 97th Congress by a vote of 80 to 19; in the 98th Congress by a vote of 76 to 18. Last year, the House narrowly passed a proposal of its own and the bills went to conference. Unfortunately, time ran out before a final resolution on all issues could be reached. Hopefully, this long overdue measure can move quickly through the legislative process to final enactment during this Congress.

Special credit must go to Senator SIMPSON as chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy for bringing us to this point. He has worked ceaselessly to balance many divergent interests and, at the same time, craft a bill that will enable us to bring illegal immigration under control. The Judiciary Committee considered the bill over the course of four executive sessions. Ten amendments were discussed, six of which were adopted. S. 1200 was reported out favorably by a vote of 12 to 5 on July 30, 1985.

The bill makes major reforms in immigration law that should increase significantly our ability to control the borders of this country. It is strongly supported by the administration. I urge the Senate to demonstrate, once again, its commitment to this critical issue so this bill can be enacted at the earliest possible time.

Mr. President, as pointed out in the committee report on this bill, no other country in the world attracts potential migrants as does the United States, and no other country approaches the United States in the number of legal immigrants accepted and refugees permanently resettled. Such has been the case throughout our history. It is a tradition of which we are justly proud.

On the other hand, it is common knowledge that immigration to the United States, including illegal entrants estimated to be in the millions, is out of control. In the last 9 years, total immigration to the United States increased from 450,000 in 1976 to 510,000 in 1984, with a peak of 800,000 in 1980, counting the Cuban and Haitian entrants during that year. During the same 9-year period, immediate relatives of U.S. citizens, for which there is no numerical limitation, increased from 114,000 to 177,000. Refugee admissions, also not subject to a fixed ceiling, have ballooned from 5,000 in 1977, to as high as 200,000 in 1980; 161,000 in 1981; and 68,000 in 1984. Notwithstanding the 1984 decrease in refugees, the United States continues to take more immigrants and refugees for resettlement than the rest of the world combined.
